LEEK, a town in Staffords. noted for a manufacture of buttons, and situated in a barren country among moorlands and rocky hills, some of which are of a most surprising height, without any turf or mould upon them, on the great road between Manchester, Stockport, and Macclesfield, to the NW and Derby, Leicester, &c. to the SE 22 m. N of Stafford, and 154 NNW of London. By the intervention of a craggy mountain, at a considerable distance westward of the town, the sun sets twice in the evening at a certain time of the year; for after it sets behind the top of the mountain, it breaks out again on the northern side of it, which is steep, before it reaches the horizon in its fall. In its church-yard, are the remains of a Danish cross, now upright, and 10 feet high from the ground, beneath which are three steps. In the neighbourhood are some extensive coal mines. Market on Wed.

Leeston River, in Down, Ulster.

LEESTOWN, a town of N. America, in the State of Kentucky and county of Fayette, a few miles W of Lexington. It is seated on the eastern bank of the river Kentucky, is regularly laid out, and is flourishing. As the banks of the Kentucky are remarkably high, in some places 300, or even 400 feet, composed in general, of stupendous, perpendicular rocks, there are few crossing places; the best is at Leestown; a circumstance which must greatly contribute to its increase.

LEETAKOO, a town, the capital of the Booshuanas, in the centre of the passage to the N of the Cape of Good Hope. The town is full as large as Cape Town, contains between 2 and 3000 houses. Lat. 26 30 S and lon. 27 E.

LEEWARD ISLANDS. See INDIES, WEST.

LEEWE, or SOUT LEEWE, a town in the late Austrian Brabant, situated on the river Geete 25 m E of Brussels.

Lefield, Oxfords. near Whichwood Forest.

LEFOOGA, one of the Hapace Islands, in the Pacific Ocean. Many parts of the country, near the sea, are still waste, owing, perhaps, to the sandiness of the soil; but, in the internal parts, the soil is better, and the marks of considerable population, and of an improved state of cultivation, are conspicuous. Many of the plantations are inclosed in such a manner, that the fences, running parallel to each other, form spacious public roads. Here are large spots covered with the paper mulberry-tree, the plantations in general are abundantly stocked with plants and fruit-trees; and to these Captain Cook, in 1776 made some addition, by sowing the seeds of melons, Indian corn, &c. The island is not more than 7 m. in length, and its breadth, in some places, not above 3. Lat. 19 49 S lon. 149 40 E.

Leftwich, Cheshire, in parish of Northwich.

Legacurry, in Armagh, Ulster.

Legbaro, Lancas. between Foulness Fells and Ken Sands. Legburgthwaite, Cumberl. SE of Keswick.

Legh, Devons. in Loxbear parish. Leghes, Northumberl. near Langley Castle.

LEGHORN, a handsome and regularly built town of Italy, in the duchy of Tuscany, with an inward and outward harbour in the Mediterranean, 45 m. SW of Florence, and 145 NNW of Rome. It is a free port, every bale of goods, whether great or small, paying only two piastres, or scudi. The Greeks and Armenians have churches of their own, and the Turks have a mosque. The Jews have a handsome synagogue here, as well as schools. Though subject to heavy imposts, they are very rich, and well protected. The inhabitants are computed at 50,000, among whom are 16,000 Jews. The streets are wide and straight, and almost all the houses are of the same height. There are so many canals, that some have given it the title of New Venice. Near the harbour is a large building, in which they shut up every night the Turkish and the galley slaves. At a little distance, on a single rock, forming a small island, is a light-house, where, every night, 30 burning lamps are contained in one lanthorn. The air here was very unhealthy, till the marshes about it were drained. The commodities imported hence, by the English, are chiefly silk, wine, and oil. In 1741, this city suffered greatly by an earthquake. Lat. 43 34 N lon. 10 17 E.

LEGNANO, a populous town in the Veronese, on the Adige, 28 m. NW of Ferrara.

LEIBNITZ, a town of Germany, 20 m. SE of Gratz.

LEIBNITZ, a town of Saxony, 4 m. W of Dresden, and a town of Stiria on the Sulm, 16 m. S of Gratz.

LEICESTER, the county town of Leicesters. It is seated on the river Soare, which has lately been made navigable from Leicester to Loughborough, 27 m. S by E of Derby, and 99 NNW of London. It is a place of great antiquity, and though declined from its former magnitude, is still large and populous, and has many handsome houses. In the Saxon Heptarchy, it was the see of a bishop, and the chief city of the Mercian kingdom. It was at one time a most wealthy place, and if we may believe Matthew Paris, had 32 parish churches. At present, it contains 5 churches, near one of which are the famous ruins of a Roman wall, composed of ragstone and Roman brick, and imagined to be a remnant of a temple of Janus, erected on the spot 2000 years ago. Here is also a Roman miliary, (the oldest known in Britain, and containing the first inscription mentioned in this island), which was found near Thurmaston, in 1771: it now forms the centre of an obelisk in one of the principal streets, surmounted with a lamp. The hall and kitchen of its ancient castle (a prodigious building, where the great Duke of Lancaster held his court, who added 26 acres to it, which he enclosed with a brick wall) are still entire. The former is lofty and spacious, and the courts of justice, at the assizes, are held in them. Here is also one of its gateways with a very curious arch, the tower over, which is now turned into a magazine for the county militia. Here is a very spacious market-place, with one of the largest markets in England for corn and cattle. The combing and spinning of wool into worsted, and manufacturing it into stockings by frames, is the chief business of the town and neighbourhood. In some years 60,000l. have been returned in these articles. Its fairs, which are upon a large scale, for sheep, horses for the collar, cattle, cheese, &c. are on May 12th, July 5th, October 10th, and December 8th; it contains 4,600 houses, and 23,146 inhab. Market on Sat.

Leicester Abbey, near Leicester, was once a famous monastery, called, from its situation in a neighbouring meadow, St. Mary de Pratis. It is now turned into a dwelling-house and garden. Its venerable terrace still remains, supported by an embattled wall, with lunettes, overspread with ivy, shaded with trees, and impending in a picturesque manner, over the river.

Leicester Forest, Leicesters. between Normanton and Groby.

LEICESTERSHIRE, a county of England, bounded on the NW and N by Derby and Nottingham; on the E by the counties of Lincoln and Rutland, on the SE and S by Northamptons., and on the SW by Warwicks. It extends about 38 m. from N to S, and as many from E to W in the broadest part. It is divided into 6 hundreds, which contain 12 market-towns, 200 parishes, containing 560,000 acres, 30,019 houses, and 150,419 inhab. The air is healthy, and the soil in general, strong and stiff, composed of clay and marl. It affords great quantities of rich, grazing land, and is peculiarly fitted for the culture of beans, for which it is proverbially noted. Toward the NW the Bardon Hills rise to a great height; and, in their neighbourhood lies Charnwood, or Charley Forest, a rough and open tract. Farther to the NW are valuable coal mines. The NE parts feed great numbers of sheep, which are the largest, and have the greatest fleeces of wool of any in England; they are without horns, and clothed with thick, long flakes of soft wool, particularly fitted for the worsted manufactures. The E and SE part of the county is a rich grazing tract. This county has been long famous for its large, black dray-horses, of which great numbers are continually sent up to London, as well as for its horned cattle and sheep, which supply the London markets with the largest mutton; and its reputation has been much extended by the great skill of the late Mr. Bakewell, of Dishley, who bred every species of domestic quadrupeds, to the utmost perfection of form and size. The manufacture of stockings is the principal one in the county. Its chief rivers are the Avon, the Soare, anciently the Leire; the Wreke; Anker; Swift; Eye; and Welland.

Leier, Leicesters. N of Lutterworth. Leigh, Essex, on a creek in the mouth of the Thames, opposite the eastern extremity of the Canvey Island. It is noted for oysters, and has a good road for shipping.

LEININGEN, or LINANGE, a town, village, and county, in the circle of the Upper Rhine, almost surrounded by the palatinate.

LEINSTER, the eastern province of Ireland, bounded on the E and S by St. George's Channel, on the W by Connaught, and Munster, on the N by Ulster. It is about 112 m. in length, and 70 in breadth. It contains 12 counties and 992 parishes. The counties are Carlow, Dublin, Kildare, Kilkenny, King's County, Longford, Louth, Meath, Queen's County, West Meath, Wexford and Wicklow. It is the most level and best cultivated province in the kingdom; but in the early ages, was almost one continued forest, the remains of which are still found in the trees which are dug out of the bogs. Dublin is the capital. The chief rivers are the Barrow, Boyne, Liffey, Neur, Urtin or Slane, May, and Inny. It is, in general, well cultivated, the air is temperate, and the soil fruitful in corn and pastures.

Leinthal, Earls and Starks, Herefords. 7 m. from Ludlow.

LEIPZIG, a rich, large, and celebrated city of Upper Saxony, capital of a circle of the same name. It is a handsome place, neat and regularly built, and the streets are lighted in the night. It also carries on a great trade in domestic and foreign articles, and has manufactures of stuffs, velvets, stockings, cloths and linen. The university contains six handsome colleges, two Latin schools, and two celebrated societies; a German society, and another for the encouragement of the liberal arts. There are three great fairs here every year, celebrated throughout all Germany, which last a fortnight each, and are kept at Easter, Michaelmas, and beginning of the new year. The town-house makes but an indifferent appearance, but the exchange is a fine structure. It is seated in a plain, on the river Pleysse, 50 m. WNW of Dresden. This city was taken by the Imperialists in 1759; and in 1813, Oct. 19, the French and Saxon armies were defeated by the Austrians and Russians, on the N and S of Leipzig, with a loss of 40,000 men, when the victors entered Leipzig, and took prisoners the King of Saxony and his whole Court. Lat. 51 19 N lon. 12 25 E.

Leir, Leic. in parish of Lutterworth, near the head of the river Soare. Leisdon, Kent, in Sheppey Isle. Leith, Yorks. in the liberty of Whitby Strand, noted for mines of alum, dug or hewn out of the rock that hangs over the sea. To fit it for use, it is burnt, then steeped in pits of water, and afterwards boiled and clarified.

LEITH, a sea-port of Scotland, in Edinburghs. seated on the Frith of Forth, 2 m. N of Edinburgh, of which city it is the port. It is a large and populous town, containing many handsome houses; but the greater part of the ancient buildings are neither elegant nor commodious. It contains 1,923 houses, and 20,390 inhab. As the town is situated on both sides of the harbour, it is divided into N. and S. Leith. The harbour is secured by a grand stone pier, at the mouth of the little river, called the Water of Leith. This harbour is now greatly improved, and accommodated with an elegant draw-bridge and a good quay, and when the proposed new basin and docks are added, this place will become, in every respect, a safe, capacious, and convenient station for trading vessels. The commerce of Leith is very considerable; and the vessels employed in the London trade are, in general, of a large size, and constructed with peculiar elegance. The largest ships in this port, however, are those employed in the Greenland whale-fishery. Leith is well situated for the navigation of the eastern seas. To Germany, Holland, and the Baltic, are exported lead, glass ware, linen, woollen stuffs, and a variety of other goods. Thence are imported vast quantities of timber, oak, bark, hides, linen rags, pearl ashes, flax, hemp, tar, &c. From France, Spain, and Portugal, are imported wine, brandy, oranges, and lemons; and from the W. Indies and America, rice, indigo, rum, sugar, and logwood. Ships of considerable size are built at this port; and here are several extensive rope-walks. There are also flourishing manufactories of bottle-glass, window-glass, and crystal; a great carpet manufactory, a soap work, some iron forges, and an ancient hospital for disabled seamen. Lat. 56 0 N long. 3 7 W.

Leith Hill, in Surry, parish of Lower Wotton, admired for affording one of the noblest prospects in Europe, is situated 5 m. E by S of Dorking.

LEITMERITZ, a well-built and populous town of Bohemia, capital of a circle of the same name, so fertile as to be called the Paradise of Bohemia. It is seated on the river Elbe, 28 m. NNW of Prague.

LEMNITZ, a town of Saxony, 3 m. E of Neustadt.

LEMNOS, a celebrated town and island of the Archipelago, now called STALIMENE, situated near the entrance of the Dardanelles. It is above 112 m. in circumference according to Pliny, who says, that it is often shadowed by Mount Athos, though at the distance of 87 m. The poets made it sacred to Vulcan, who was thence called Lemnius Pater. Lemnos was also celebrated for its labyrinth, consisting of a stately building, supported by 40 pillars, of an uncommon height and thickness, of which not a trace now remains. The modern Greeks seem to entertain the same opinion as the ancients, of that earth of Lemnos, which is said to have cured Philoctetes, and which Galen went to examine. It is never dug up but on one particular day of the year, and then with all the pomp of ceremony. This earth, called Terra Sigillata, formed into small loaves, and sealed with the Grand Signior's seal, is then dispersed over all Europe. The greatest virtues are attributed to it. Some physicians have even prescribed it; but it appears to be nothing more than a mere argillaceous earth, incapable of producing the effects that have been attributed to it. Lemnos is subject to the Turks; but the inhabitants, who are almost all Greeks, are very industrious. The two principal places, and once towns, are Cochino, formerly called Hophestias, and Lemno, or Stalimene, anciently Myrine. It is the see of a Greek archbishop. Lat. 40 3 N lon. 25 28 E.

Lemon Island, one of the Skelig Islands, on the coast of Kerry. It is rather a round rock, almost covered with the innumerable flocks of gannet, which nestle here.

It is a general rendezvous of the fishing busses from Britain, Holland, Denmark, and other parts. The principal fishery carried on by the inhabitants, is that of ling, tusk, and the coal fish. They are caught in the months of June and July, on long lines, set at the distance of 10 or 12 leagues from all land, by six-oared boats, from 2 to 3 tons burden. The yearly export of this article to foreign markets is, on an average, 800 tons from all the islands. Lerwick contains about 300 houses. Lat. 60 20 N long. 1 30 W.

LESCHERES, a town of France, in the depart. of Upper Marne, 9 m. S of Joinville.

LESGUIS, COUNTRY OF THE, one of the seven Caucasian nations, situated between the Black Sea and the Caspian. Their country is indifferently called by the Georgians, Lesguistan, or Daghestan. It is divided into a variety of districts, generally independent, and governed by chiefs, elected by the people. The Lesguis are probably descended from the tribes of mountaineers, known to ancient geographers under the name of Lesgæ or Ligyes; and the difficulty of their country, which is a region of mountains, whose passes are known only to themselves, has, at all times, secured them from foreign invasion. They subsist by raising cattle, and by predatory expeditions into the countries of their more wealthy neighbours. During the troubles in Persia, toward the beginning of the last century, they repeatedly sacked the towns of Shamachie and Ardebil, and ravaged the neighbouring districts; and the present wretched state of Georgia and part of Armenia, is owing to the frequency of their incursions. In their persons and dress, and general habits of life, as far as these are known to us, they greatly resemble the Circassians.

Lesbare, Rutland, S of Uppingham. Lesiate, Norfolk, E of Lynn.

LESINA. See LIESINA.

Lesingham, N. and S. Lincolns. near Sleaford.

LESKEARD, a Borough town of Cornwall, 49 m. W by S of Exeter, and 221 W by S of London, gradually improved to be one of the largest and best built in the county. It contains a handsome town-hall, built on stone pillars, a large church, an eminent free-school, and about 1000 inhab. Mr. Norden, however, who surveyed and described this county, in the reign of James I. says, "it is a poor town, whose ruins argue its pristine glory to be great." It has some considerable manufactures of leather, and yarn, which last is chiefly sold at Exeter. Market on Saturday.

LESLIE, Aberdeen, 8 m. from Inverarie, and another in Fife, 8 m. from Kirkcaldie.

LESMAHAGO, Lanark, on the banks of the Clyde, 12 m. from Hamilton, contains 600 houses.

Lestingham, Yorks. NE of Kirby Moorside.

LESTOFF, LAYSTOFF, or LEOSTOFF, a town of Suffolk, consisting of about 500 houses, indifferently built; the streets, though pretty well paved, are narrow, and it contains 2400 inhab. It is seated on the sea-shore, and concerned in the fisheries of the North Sea, catching and curing of cod, herring, mackerel, soles, and sprats, in which business upwards of 30 boats are employed, and 70,000 barrels have been sold to foreign markets, and for home consumption. Here is also a manufactory of coarse china. It is 8 m. S of Yarmouth, and 117 N E of London. Market on Wednesday.

Lestormal Castle, Cornw. near Lestwithiel, formerly the residence of the earls of Cornw. It is situated on the edge of a hill, overlooking a deep valley, surrounded by a ditch, very deep and wide. The chapel appears to be as ancient as Richard, king of the Romans, who kept his court here; and its noble and magnificent keep still holds up the shell of its turreted head.

LESTWITHIEL, a well built town of Cornw. with a trade in the woollen manufactory. Formerly ships came as far as the town; but the channel is now stopped up. They keep the county courts here, with weights and measures for the whole stannary; and the gaol is likewise here. It is seated on the river Foy, near its fall into Foy Haven, 10 m. WNW of Plymouth, and 230 W by S of London. Market on Frid.

LEUK, a town in Switzerland, in the Upper Valais, containing 2 churches, and a large palace of the bishop of Sion. It is one of the independent dixains of the Upper Valais, and is remarkable for its springs, whose water is so hot, that it will boil an egg. Leuk is much frequented in the summer, on account of these springs. The patients either bathe or drink the waters, which are beneficial in rheumatisms, diseases of the skin, &c. and seem nearly to resemble those of Bath. In 1719, an avalanche (a vast body of snow) fell with such impetuosity from a neighbouring glacier, upon the village, as to overwhelm the greatest part of the houses and the baths, and to destroy many of the inhabitants. It is situated on an eminence, about a mile from the Rhone, and 20 m. E of Sion.

LEVROUK, a town in the depart. of Indre, 11m. N of Chateauroux.

LEWARDEN, a large, rich, and populous city of the Dutch Netherlands, capital of W. Friesland. Its buildings, as well private as public, are magnificent; and it has several canals in the streets, which are a great assistance to their trade: especially as they are continued not only to the sea, but to the most considerable towns in the province. It is situated in the quarter called Ostergow, 27 m. W of Groningen, and 65 N by E of Amsterdam. Lat. 53 11 N lon. 5 42 E.

Lewcomb, Dorsets. NW of Evershot.

LEWEN, a town of Leitmeritz, in Bohemia.

LEWES, the principal borough town of Sussex, is a well-built, populous, and ancient place, and is seated on the river Ouse, which is navigable here for barges, 30 m. E of Chichester, and 49 S of London. It is finely situated on the declivity of a hill, on which are the remains of an ancient castle, the environs of which command a beautiful view of a richly varied country, scarcely to be matched in Europe. It takes in the sea for 30 m. W and an uninterrupted view of Banstead Downs, which is full 40 m. On the river are several iron works, where cannon are cast for merchant ships, besides other useful works of that kind. The timber hereabouts is prodigiously large, and the soil is the richest in this part of England. Market on Saturday.

LEWIN, a town of Silesia, 15 m. W of Glatz.

LEWIS, one of the most considerable of the Western Islands of Scotland, 20 m. NW of the Isle of Sky, which being connected by a narrow isthmus with HARRIS, forms but one island, which is about 40 m. in length, and 13 in its mean breadth. Like most of the Scottish isles, it is greatly intersected by arms of the sea. By these it may be said to be divided into five peninsulas. The country in general, is wild, bleak, barren of wood, and little fitted for cultivation; the hills are covered with heath, which affords shelter for various sorts of game. The lakes and streams abound with salmon, large red trout, &c. The land animals here are similar to those found in the northern isles, and the fisheries on the coast are not inferior. Stornaway is the only town in Lewis. The island belongs to Rossshire. There are several inferior isles and rocks, which are comprehended under Invernessshire.

LEWIS, a town of Delaware; and two towns of Virginia.

Ley, Devons. in Bear Ferris parish. Leyborn Lund, a considerable village of Yorks. a mile and a half N of Middleham.

LEYDEN, a city of Holland, supposed to be the same which Ptolemy calls Lugdunum Batavorum, seated in a country full of gardens and meadows, surrounded by ditches and canals, near the ancient bed of the Rhine, which now looks like a canal. It is about 4 miles and a half in circumference; and its ditches are bordered with rows of trees. It has 8 gates, and contains 50 islands, and 145 bridges, the greater part of which are built of freestone. The public buildings are very handsome. There are several large hospitals, and a university, which has generally about 200 students, though there are but two colleges; for these scholars board in the town, and have no dress to distinguish them. The school consists of a large pile of brick building, three stories high. Adjoining to the school is the physic garden, where the professor reads lectures in botany. The library contains curious manuscripts; and the theatre for anatomy is the finest in Europe. Here are manufactures of the best cloths and stuffs in Holland, there being no less than 1600 workmen employed in them. It is 4 m. E of the sea, 15 SSE of Haarlem, 20 SW of Amsterdam, and 14 N of Rotterdam.

LEYTE, one of the Philippine Islands, in Asia, about 80 leagues in circumference. Its soil on the E side is very fertile, yielding two hundred for one; but there are very high mountains that cut it almost through the middle, and occasion a great alteration in the air, which, however, in general, is pure and healthy, and more temperate than at Lucon. These mountains abound in deer, cows, wild hogs, and fowls, and cocoas grow without culture. They have two plentiful harvests in the year, to which the numerous rivers, descending from the mountains, not a little contribute. The island contains, about 9000 inhabitants, who pay tribute to the Spaniards in rice, wax, and cloth. Lat. 11 0 N lon. 125 0 E.

Lilly, Dorsets. a hamlet to Wottonfitzpain.

LIMA, a city of S. America, capital of Peru, founded by Francis Pizarro, in the beginning of the year 1535. It has a university, and gives its name to the principal audience of Peru. The streets are handsome and straight, but the houses are generally only one story high, on account of the earthquakes. However, they are pretty, and much adorned, having long galleries on the front. One part of the roofs is covered with coarse linen cloth, and the others only with reeds, which is not inconvenient, because violent rains are not known here; but the rich inhabitants cover theirs with fine mats, or beautiful cotton cloths. There are trees planted all round their houses, to keep off the heat of the sun. What the houses want in height, they have in length and depth; for some of them are 200 feet long, and proportionably broad, so that they have 10 or 12 large apartments on the ground floor. The royal square is very handsome; and in the middle is a fountain of bronze, adorned with the image of Fame, which spouts out water. On the E and W sides, are the public structures, which are well-built. The river which crosses Lima forms canals or streams, which run to most of the houses, and serve to water their gardens, &c. The city is about 4 miles in length, and 2 in breadth, and is divided into 5 parishes. They make use of mules to draw their coaches, and of these there are about 5000. The churches and convents are extremely rich, and divine service is performed in them with a magnificence scarcely to be imagined. The ornaments, even on common days, exceed, in quantity and richness, those which many cities of Europe display on the most extraordinary occasions. Lima is the seat of the viceroy, whose office is generally triennial, and contains several courts, as that of the viceroy of the archbishop, of the inquisition, of the consulado, or, commerce, and of the wills. Earthquakes are here very frequent, and some have done this city a great deal of damage, particularly that in 1746, by which it was almost destroyed. The inhabitants are so rich, that when the viceroy, sent from Spain, in 1682, made his public entrance into this city, they paved the streets he was to pass through with ingots of silver. It is said, that the inhabitants are very debauched, but, at the same time, extremely superstitious, having a strong belief in the power of charms; that about a fourth part of the city consists of monks and nuns, who are not more chaste than the rest; that if any one happen to rival a monk, he is in danger of his life, for they always carry a dagger under their frocks; that the most profligate of them think they can atone for all their crimes, by hearing a mass, or kissing the robe of St. Francis or St. Dominic; and that then they return to their former practices. Lima is advantageously seated in the centre of the spacious, fertile, and delightful valley of Rimac, or Lima, the whole of which it commands without any difficulty, on a small river of the same name, near the sea. Lat. 12 1 S lon. 76 44 W.

LIMA, THE AUDIENCE OF, a large province of S. America, in Peru, lying on the S. Sea, with an extensive valley, and a river of the same name. It contains 1 archbishopric, viz. Lima; and 4 bishoprics, viz. Truxillo, Guamanga, Cusco, and Arequipa. The archbishopric contains 15 jurisdictions; the diocese of Truxillo 7; Guamanga 9; Cusco 14; and Arequipa 6. There are several animals in this province, which are very fierce and dangerous, especially near the mountains: but that which they call a lion is not one, for it is more like a wolf, and never attacks mankind. However, there are very large tawny tigers, or panthers, which are as wild and fierce as those of Africa.

LIMALE, a town in Austrian Brabant, seated on the river Dyle, 13 m. SE of Brussels.

LIMAVADY. See NEWTON LIMAVADY.

Limbey, Nottinghams. near the river Lime, W of Sherwood Forest. Limbrey, Bedfords. in Luton parish. Limbrook, Herefords. between Prestayne and Wigmore Castle. Limburgh, Dorsets. SW of Todbere.

LIMBURG, a town of the Netherlands, capital of a duchy of the same name. Here is a manufacture of woollen cloths, and it is famous for its excellent cheese. Near it are many quarries of different kinds of marble; the precipices, mountains, and rocks round about are romantic; the air is wholesome; and the inhabitants have hardly any disease. It is seated on an agreeable mountain, near the river Wese, 20 m. ESE of Liege.

LIMBURG, THE DUCHY OF, a province of the Netherlands, bounded on the N by the duchy of Juliers; on the E by the electorate of Cologne, and duchy of Juliers; and on the S and W by the territory of Liege. It is about 30 m. in length, and 24 in breadth. It contains some of the best iron mines in the Netherlands; the soil is fertile for corn, and it abounds in a fine breed of cattle.

LIMBURG, a lordship in Suabia, surrounded by the territories of Wurtemburg, Elwangen, Anspach, and the imperial city of Hall, or Suabian Hall; about 19 m. long and 18 broad. It has been subject, since 1742, to the house of Brandenburg Anspach.

LIMERICK, a city of Ireland, in the county of Limerick, and province of Munster, about 3 m. in circumference, 50 m. SSE of Galway, 50 N of Cork, and 94 SW of Dublin. Within a century it was reckoned the second city in the kingdom: at present it has lost its rank: not because it flourishes less, but because Cork flourishes more. It is divided into the Irish and English Town; the latter, which is the most ancient, is situated on an island, formed by the river Shannon, and called King's Island. It has been dismantled about 50 years, and has increased prodigiously within that period, by the addition of handsome streets and quays: and its commerce has kept pace with its size. The linen, woollen, and paper manufactures are carried on here to a great extent; and the export of beef, and other provisions is considerable. It contains many hospitals, some handsome public structures, and about 5000 houses. The inhabitants are estimated at upwards of 40,000. The country around it is fertile and pleasant, but the air is rather moist.

LIMERICK, a county of Ireland, in the province of Munster, about 40 m. in length, and 23 in breadth, bounded on the N and NW by Tipperary and Clare; on the W by Kerry; on the S by Cork; and on the E by Tipperary. It contains 125 parishes, and about 170,000 inhab. and is a fertile and well inhabited country, though the SE and SW parts are mountainous. The soil is particularly rich in pasture, the best cattle slaughtered at Cork being sent from this county. Several rivers water it, the principal of which are the Shannon and the Maig.

Limerick, in Wexford, Leinster.

Limersdale, Cumberl. W of Brampton. Limerston, Isle of Wight, in the W. Medina.

LIMMAT, a river of Switzerland, first named Linth, till it joins the Mat, when it changes its name to Limmat; it passes through the Lake of Zurich, and joins the Aar, about 3 m. N of Baden.

Limme, Kent, near Hythe, 4 m. from Romney, was formerly a port, till choked up by the sands. The Roman road from Canterbury, called Stane Street, ended here. Its castle, which bears great marks of antiquity, as does also the adjoining church, is converted into a farm-house. Limmington, Somersets. near Ilchester.

LIMOGES, a town in the depart. of Upper Vienne, containing about 20,000 inhab. It was taken from the Visigoths by the Franks, under Clovis; after whose death it came to the dukes of Aquitaine. It is seated on the river Vienne, 50 m. NNE of Perigeux, and 110 NE of Bourdeaux.

LIMONIA, an island in the Mediterranean, 6 m. W of Rhodes.

LIMOSIN, a ci-devant province of France, divided into the Upper and Lower, the former of which is very cold, but the latter more temperate. It is covered with forests of chesnut trees, and contains mines of lead, copper, tin, and iron; but the principal trade consists in cattle and horses. It is now the depart. of Upper Vienne, of which Limoges is the capital.

LIMOURS, a town of France, in depart. of Seine and Oise, 16 m. SW of Paris.

LIMOUX, a commercial town in the depart. of Aude. It has a manufacture of cloth; and its environs produce an excellent white wine, called La Blanquette de Limoux. It is seated on the river Aude, 37 m. W by S of Narbonne.

LINCOLN, formerly called NICOL, a city, the capital of Lincolns. is pleasantly seated partly on the side of a hill, on the Witham, which here divides itself into 3 small channels. It is much reduced from its former extent and splendor, (when it contained 52 parish churches, and was one of the most populous cities of England, according to Malmesbury, and a mart for all goods coming by land or water;) and now consists principally of 1 street, above 2 m. long, well paved, and several cross and parallel streets, containing 1813 houses, and 8861 inhab. Here are some handsome modern buildings, but more antique ones. The Roman's north gate still remains under the name of Newport Gate. It is a vast semicircle of stones, of very large dimensions, laid without mortar, and connected only by their uniform shape. Upon the whole, this city has an air of ancient greatness, arising, in a great measure, from the number of monastic ruins; most of which are now converted into stables, outhouses, &c. The cathedral, a stately Gothic pile, one of the largest in England, is its glory; it stands on so lofty a hill, that it may be seen 50 m. to the N, and 30 to the S, and is particularly admired for its interior architecture, which is in the richest and lightest Gothic style. The famous great bell, called Tom of Lincoln, requires, at least, 15 able men to ring it. The chief trade here is in coals brought by the Trent and Fossdyke; and oats and wool, which are sent by the river Witham. Here is a small manufacture of camblets. It is 35 m. NE of Nottingham, and 133 N of London. Markets on Tuesd. and Frid.

LINCOLN, a county in the respective States of Virginia, Massachusetts, and Kentucky.

LINCOLNSHIRE, a county of England, bounded on the N by the Humber, which divides it from Yorks.; on the E by the German Ocean; on the SE by the Wash and part of Norfolk; on the S by Cambridges. and Northamptons.; on the SW by Rutland; on the W by the counties of Leicester and Nottingham; and on the NW by Yorks. It is about 77 m. from N to S, and 48 in breadth, where widest. It is divided into three parts, namely, Holland on the SE, Kesteven on the SW, and Lindsay on the N. It contains 30 hundreds, 1 city, 33 market towns, 630 parishes, 46,368 houses, and 237,891 inhab. Its principal rivers are the Trent, Humber, Witham, Welland, Ankholme, Nen, and Dun. The air is various, according to its three grand divisions. The soil, in many places, is very rich, the inland part producing corn in great plenty, and the fens, cole seed, and very rich pastures; whence their breed of cattle is larger than that of any other county in England, except Somersets.; their horses are also excellent and very large; their hunting hounds and hares are particularly noted for their extreme swiftness; and their sheep are not only of the largest breed, but are clothed with a long thick wool, peculiarly fitted for the worsted and coarse woollen manufactures.

Lincomb, Devons. in Ilfracomb parish. Lincomb Spaw, Somersets. near Bath. Lincoton, Wilts. NE of Bradford and Trowbridge.

LINDAU, an imperial city of Germany, with an abbey, situated on an island in the Lake of Constance, 19 m. E of the city of Constance. The castle, and the Heyden Maur, or Heathen Wall, are reckoned Roman works. Its territory comprehends 14 villages.

LIPARI, the common name of 12 islands in the Mediterranean, which lie to the N of Sicily, between lon. 14 1 and 15 12 E, and lat. 38 20 and 38 40 N. They were formerly called Æolian, and are nearly as follows, in the order of their size; namely, Lipari, Strombolo, Volcano, Salini, Felicuda, Alicuda, Panaria, Volcanello, Vacheluse, Lisca, Dattolo, Tila, Navi, and Basiluzzo. These islands are subject to the king of Naples, to whom they bring in a considerable revenue. They produce great quantities of alum, sulphur, nitre, cinnabar, and most kinds of fruits, particularly raisins, currants, and figs, in great perfection. Some of their wines are likewise much esteemed, particularly the Malvasia, well known all over Europe. These islands are of volcanic origin. See STROMBOLO, VOLCANO, &c.

LIPARI, the largest, most fertile, and populous of the Lipari Islands, about 15 m. in circumference. It was celebrated among the ancients; and, by the description of Aristotle, it appears to have been considered by the sailors in his time, what Strombolo is in ours, as a light-house, as its fires were never extinguished. It has not suffered from subterraneous fires for many ages past, though it every where bears the marks of its former state. The form of this island is very irregular; and in this volcanic spot, such a number of spiracles have been opened, that the greatest part of them are confounded with each other. It abounds with the currant grape; cotton also grows here; and great quantities of pumice are gathered. Its capital, an ancient town of the same name, stands on the S side of the island. The principal trade of the inhabitants is in the exportation of the products of the island; but the chief necessaries of life they import from Sicily. Lat. 38 35 N lon. 15 30 E.

LIPPA, a town of Temeswar, in Hungary, situated on the river Maros, 22 m. N of Temeswar.

Lisane, in Derry, Ulster. Lisbellaw, in Fermanagh, Ulster.

LISBON, anciently called OLISIPPO, and by the Moors OLISIBONA, the capital of Portugal, a large, rich, celebrated city, one of the principal of Europe, with a university. The squares, public buildings, and palaces, were magnificent, but it was almost totally destroyed by an earthquake, Nov. 1, 1755. Another earthquake was also felt in 1807, but did no damage. The new town is much more handsome than the former: the plan is regular, the streets, some of which are more than 3 miles in length, and squares, are spacious, and the buildings are elegant. The harbour will contain 10,000 sail of ships, which ride in the greatest safety; and the city, being viewed from the southern shore of the river, affords a beautiful prospect, as the buildings gradually rise above each other, in the form of an amphitheatre. Near the city is a celebrated aqueduct, which joins 2 hills by 35 arches, the largest of which is 332 feet in height. This pile was erected in 1748, of a kind of white marble, and the water falls into a reservoir at one of the extremities of the city. The number of inhabitants is estimated at 270,000, of which the negroes and mulattoes make a sixth part. They reckon here more than 20,000 houses, 40 parish churches, and 50 convents of both sexes. It is remarkable, that the pipes of the organ, in the patriarchal church, are placed horizontally. Both the entrances to the harbour, close by the sea, are defended by two forts. Lisbon is seated on the river Tajo, 10 m. from the mouth of it, 178 W by N of Seville, and 255 S by W of Madrid. Lat. 38 42 N lon. 9 5 W.

LITHUANIA, or LITWA, a large country of Europe, between Poland and Russia, about 300 m. in length, and 250 in breadth, watered by several large rivers, the principal of which are, the Dnieper, Dwina, Niemen, Pripecz, and Bog. It is a flat country, like Poland, and the lands are very proper for tillage. The soil is not only fertile in corn, but it produces honey, wood, pitch, and vast quantities of wool. They have also excellent little horses, which they never shoe, because their hoofs are very hard. There are vast forests, in which are bears, wolves, elks, wild oxen, lynxes, beavers, gluttons, wild cats, &c. and eagles and vultures are very common. In these forests, large pieces of yellow amber are frequently dug up. The country abounds with Jews, who, though numerous in every other part of Poland, seem to have fixed their head-quarters in this duchy. "If you ask for an interpreter," says Mr. Coxe, "they bring you a Jew; if you come to an inn, the landlord is a Jew; if you want post-horses, a Jew procures them, and a Jew drives them; if you wish to purchase, a Jew is your agent; and this, perhaps, is the only country in Europe, where Jews cultivate the ground: in passing through Lithuania, we frequently saw them engaged in sowing, reaping, mowing, and other works of husbandry." The peasants of this country are in a state of the most abject vassalage. The establishment of religion has heretofore been the Romish; but there were Lutherans, Calvinists, Socinians, Greeks, and even Turks, as well as Jews. It was formerly divided into 9 palatinates, viz. Wilna, Troki, Polotsk, Novogorodeck, Witepsk, Brzesk, Mscislaw, Minsk, and Livonia. In 1772, the empress of Russia, forcibly, compelled the Poles to cede to her all that part of Lithuania bordering on Russia, including about one-third of the country. This she erected into the governments of Polotsk and Mohilof; and, in 1793, in conjunction with the king of Prussia, she extended her dominion over almost the whole of Lithuania. What is called Prussian, or Little Lithuania, about 100 m. in length, and 50 in breadth, was settled, in 1720, by Frederick William, with French, Franconian, and Swiss Protestants, by whose skill and industry, this once desolate country has been extremely well cultivated. At present it is under Russia.

LITIZ, a town of Pennsylvania; having a flourishing settlement of the Moravians. There is now, beside an elegant church, and the houses of the single brethren and single sisters, which form a large square, a number of houses for private families, with a store and tavern, all in one street. It is 8 m. from Lancaster, and 70 W of Philadelphia.

Littleborough, Lincolns. lies in what was formerly a Roman way, but is now the great road for the pack-horses that travel from the W of Yorkshire to Lincoln, Lynn, and Norwich. Littleborough, Nottinghams. on the Trent, over which it has an ancient ferry, 3 m. S. of Gainsborough. It is supposed to have been the Agelocum of the Romans, from the urns and other antiquities that have been found here; besides which, many little coins, like flatted peas, called mites, have been ploughed up; and great numbers of coins, called swine-pennies, because they have been rooted up by those creatures. Two altars, that were dug up in 1718, are now set as piers in the wall, on the side of the steps that lead from the river to the inn. Littleborough, Lancas. NE of Rochdale. Littleborn, Kent, E of Canterbury. Littleburn, Durham, near Brandspeth. Littlebury, Essex, 1 m. from Saffron Walden. Littlebury, Essex, on the Roden, near Chipping Ongar. Littlecot, Buckinghams. LIVERPOOL, a large, flourishing, and populous sea-port of Lancashire, consisting of 15,600 houses, and 94,376 inhab. with 10 churches, besides chapels, although, in the year 1565, it contained only 138 householders and cottagers. So lately as the commencement of the last century, it was only a small village, a hamlet to the parish of Walton, 3 m. distant; but it has now become, with respect to extent of commerce, the third, if not the second port in the kingdom. It is seated on the river Mersey, and has an excellent harbour, formed with great labour and expence; here being 8 wet docks, secured by large flood-gates, bound by quays a mile and a-half in length where 1000 vessels, or 20,000 tons of shipping, may lie in the greatest safety. The warehouses here are built upon a most extensive scale, some of them having 12 or more stories. Since the completion of the duke of Bridgewater's canals, the last of which was that at Runcorn, a new dock has been formed by the duke above the town. The trade to Ireland is very considerable; many ships are sent to the Greenland whale fishery; and the coasting trade hence to London, employs a great number of ships; the cargoes with which they are freighted consisting chiefly of corn and cheese; and many good ships are built here. Liverpool communicates, by the Mersey, with Warrington, and with a canal called the Sankey Canal, running to some coal pits and other works, a little way up the country; by the Irwell and the Duke of Bridgewater's Canal with Manchester; by the Weever, with the Cheshire salt works; and, by the Duke of Bridgewater's Canal, with the Staffordshire Grand Trunk, and all its various ramifications. The exchange is a handsome modern edifice of stone, with piazzas for the merchants, and over it is the town-hall. The houses, in general, are new, and built of brick. The stone used here is obtained from quarries in the neighbourhood: it is of a yellow colour, and extremely soft when hewn in the quarry, but hardens by being exposed to the air. Here are several manufactories for China ware and pottery, besides glass-houses, salt-works, and upwards of 50 breweries, which send abroad large quantities of malt liquor. Liverpool is 18 m. W of Warrington, and 203 NW of London. Markets on Wed. and Sat.

LIVONIA, a province of the Russian empire, situated to the E of the Gulf of Riga, which, with that of Esthonia, has been reciprocally claimed and possessed by the three bordering powers of Russia, Sweden, and Poland, and for more than two centuries, has been a constant source and perpetual scene of the most bloody wars. It was finally wrested from the Swedes by Peter the Great, and confirmed to the Russians by the peace of Nystadt, in 1721. It now forms the Russian government of Riga, or Livonia, of which the town of Riga is the capital. It is about 250 m. from N to S, and 150 from E to W. The land is so fertile in corn, rye, and barley, that it is called the granary of the North; and it would produce a great deal more, if it were not so full of woods and morasses. The fish that abound here are salmon, carp, pike, flat fish, and many others. In the forests are wolves, bears, elks, rein-deers, stags, and hares. The domestic animals are very numerous; but the sheep bear a bad sort of wool, resembling dog's hair. Here are a great number of forests, which consist of birch-trees, pines, and oaks; and all the houses of the inhabitants are built with wood. They export vast quantities of flax, hemp, honey, wax, leather, linseed, skins, and potash. The Czar, Peter the Great, perceiving the inhabitants did not like the change of sovereigns, compelled them to abandon their country, and drove many of them as far as the Caspian Sea; but being persuaded to recall them, most of them perished before the edict was published, so that he was obliged to re-people their country with other nations.

LOANDA, a town of Africa, capital of a fertile province called Loanda, in the kingdom of Angola, with a good harbour. It is large and handsome, considering the country, containing several churches, convents, and about 5000 inhabitants, of which only 1000 are whites. The houses are mostly built of stone, and covered with tiles. There is also a vast number of negroes' huts made of straw and earth. The Jesuits had a college here. The country abounds in cattle and sheep, Indian corn, millet, manioc, and fruits. It is subject to the Portuguese. Lat. 8 45 S lon. 13 25 E.

LOANDA, or ST. PAUL DE LOANDA, an island in the Atlantic, near the coast of Angola, about 18 m. long and 2 broad. It contains 7 or 8 villages, and abounds in oranges, figs, citrons, and other fruits, but the soil is not proper for grain. On the coast are found zimbi, a species of shell-fish, used for money by the natives, like cowries in the Indies.

LOANGO, a town, capital of a kingdom of Africa, formerly a part of Congo, but now independent, and lying on the sea side; about 250 m. in length, and 188 in breadth. The climate is nearly as hot as any under the torrid zone, and much hotter than those of Congo and Angola; yet it is healthy and pleasant. The land is so fruitful, that they have three crops of large and small millet a year; besides which, they have several sorts of peas and beans, with fruits, greens, roots, herbs, and vegetables; and there is a great number of trees, such as palm, banana, &c. of the excellent fruits of which they make agreeable wine, while others afford them materials for clothing, as also for building, covering their houses, making ships, &c. They have but few cattle of any sort, except goats. They have hogs in great plenty; and poultry are so extremely cheap, that six pennyworth of beads will purchase 30 of them. Pheasants, partridges, and other wild fowl, are in still greater abundance; and hardly bear any price. Among wild beasts, they have the zebra, and multitudes of elephants, whose teeth they exchange with the Europeans for iron. Their principal trade consists in slaves, elephants' teeth, copper, tin, lead, and iron. The women cultivate the ground, sow, and get in the harvest. There is a great number of towns and villages in this country, of which little is known but their names. The inhabitants are black, and of mild and agreeable manners, but indolent. They are governed by an absolute prince, or chief, who is, in some measure, worshipped as a god by his subjects. The town of Loango, in the centre of which is the royal palace, a great square, $1\frac{1}{2}$ m. in compass, is situated on a river, about 6 m. from the Atlantic, in lat. 4 40 S. This country lies between 10 and 19 degrees E lon. and 1 and 5 S lat.

It stretches along the E side of Loch Lomond several m. and its broad base extends so far into the country, that the ascent of this mountain, though steep, is computed to be 6 m. In this long ascent, we meet with a diversity of climates, and a variety of inhabitants. Ptarmigans, and other heath fowls, frequent its upper regions; its lower are the haunts of the roebuck, and herds of cattle feed in the irriguous valleys and sheltered pastures at its base. From this lofty mountain are seen Loch Lomond, the Clyde, the Forth, Edinburgh, the eastern coast as far as the Cheviot Fells, the Isles of Bute and Arran, the rock of Ailfa, Ireland, the mountain of Plinlimmon in Wales, and the Skiddaw in Cumberland, and the hills far beyond it.

LOMOND HILLS, in the western part of Fifes. are beautiful and verdant.

LOMOND, LOCH, a beautiful and extensive lake of Dumbartonshire, which descends from the northern point of that country, expanding as it advances southward. It is 17 m. long; its breadth from 4 m. decreasing three quarters of a mile; and, were its windings followed, its circuit would be upwards of 100 miles. There are 33 islands in this lake, several of which are inhabited, and contain antique ruins, concealed among ancient yews. Others rise into high, rocky cliffs, the habitation of the osprey, or sea eagle. In 1755, when Lisbon was destroyed by an earthquake, this lake was exceedingly agitated. It is 24 m. W of Stirling, and 12 E of Inverary.

LON, LUNE, or LOYNE, a river which rises in Westmoreland, and flowing by Kirby Lonsdale in that county, falls into the Irish Sea a few miles below Lancaster. The banks of this river are beautiful and romantic.

Londesborough, Yorks. E. Riding, 3 m. from Market Weighton.

LONDINIERES, a town in the depart. of the Lower Seine, 15 m. ESE of Dieppe.

LONDON, the metropolis of Great Britain, one of the largest and most opulent cities in the world, is mentioned by Tacitus as a considerable commercial place in the reign of the Roman emperor Nero. In its most extensive view, as the metropolis, it consists of the City, properly so called, the city of Westminster, which was once a mile from London, and the borough of Southwark; beside the suburbs in Middlesex and Surry, within what are called the Bills of Mortality. London and Westminster are situated in Middlesex, on the N side of the river Thames. Southwark is seated on the opposite bank in Surry. The extent of the whole, from Limehouse and Deptford to Milbank and Vauxhall, is above 7 m.; but the greatest breadth does not exceed 3, and contained the following population in 1811: city, within and without the walls, 17,400 houses, and 120,909 inhab.; Westminster, 17,600 houses, and 162,085 inhab.; but the whole of the metropolis, including the out-parishes of Middlesex and Surry, contains 141,732 inhabited houses, and 1,009,546 inhab. With respect to the government of this metropolis, the city is divided into 26 wards, each governed by an alderman. From the aldermen the lord mayor is annually chosen. There are likewise 236 common councilmen, a recorder, two sheriffs, who are also sheriffs of Middlesex, and other officers. The government of Westminster is vested in the high steward, an under steward, and the high bailiff, all chosen also by the dean and chapter. The suburbs are under the jurisdiction of the magistrates of Middlesex. Among the public buildings, St. Paul's cathedral, as the most conspicuous, first claims attention. This beautiful yet modest fabric is 2292 feet in circumference, and 365 in height to the top of the cross. It is inferior to none in Europe, in magnificence and nobleness, except St. Peter's at Rome. Westminster Abbey is a grand specimen of Gothic architecture, said to have been founded by Sebert, king of the East Saxons, in 610. Having been destroyed by the Danes, it was rebuilt by Edward the Confessor, in 1066. Henry III. pulled down the Saxon pile, and began to build the present structure in 1245. The work was carried on slowly by succeeding princes, and can hardly be said to have been finished before the time of Sir Christopher Wren, who built the two towers at the west end. It is 360 feet in length within the walls; at the nave it is 72 broad, and at the cross 195. The chapel of Henry VII. adjoining, Leland calls "The Wonder of the World." St. Stephen's, Walbrook, is a small church of exquisite beauty, the masterpiece of Sir Christopher Wren; perhaps Italy itself can produce no modern building that can vie with this in taste and proportion. Bow-church in Cheapside; St. Bride's, in Fleet-street; St. Dunstan's in the East; and St. Martin's in the Fields, are, among the other churches, most distinguished for fine architecture. The parishes, in what are called the Bills of Mortality, amount to 146, namely, 97 within the walls, 16 without the walls, 23 out-parishes in Middlesex and Surry, and 10 in the city and liberties of Westminster. With respect to palaces, the magnificence of royalty is not to be found in them. That of St. James was an hospital for leprous females, dedicated to that saint. It was surrendered to Henry VIII. who erected on its site the present palace; of which it has been observed, that notwithstanding its mean exterior, it is the most commodious for the parade of royalty of any in Europe. He likewise laid out a large piece of ground adjoining, into a park, formed a canal and walks; calling it, in conformity to the name of the palace, St. James's Park. Charles II. enlarged and improved this spot, adorning it with plantations of trees; but, a few years ago, it was improved in a still more beautiful degree. The Queen's Palace stands in the most favourable situation that St. James's Park could furnish. It was erected by the Duke of Buckingham, in 1703, and called Buckingham House, until it was purchased, in 1761, for the royal residence; when it acquired its present name. In 1775, parliament settled this house upon the queen, in case she should survive the king. Carlton House, the residence of the Prince of Wales, the gardens extending to St. James's Park, is a stately building, on which vast sums have been expended; but it is not yet completed. The Banqueting House, at Whitehall, was begun in 1619, from a design by Inigo Jones. It is only a small part of the vast plan of a palace, intended for the residence of the British monarchs, but left incomplete. Beside the royal palaces, there are many fine houses of the princes of the blood, and of the nobility and gentry. Westminster Hall and some buildings appendant to it, contain the House of Lords and Commons, and the superior courts of justice. The great hall, in which are held the trials of peers, and of persons impeached before the lords, exceeds, in dimensions, any in Europe, which is not supported by pillars. Its length is 270 feet; the breadth 74; and the height in proportion. The Guildhall of the city, situated at the end of King-street, Cheapside, was built in 1431. Its great hall is 153 feet long, 50 broad, and 58 high. The front of this hall has been rebuilt in the Gothic style. Here the courts of King's Bench and Common Pleas, hold sittings at Nisi Prius: here also the city elections are held, and all the business of the corporations transacted. The Sessions House in the Old Bailey, in which the criminals of both London and Middlesex are tried; and the County Hall for Middlesex, on Clerkenwell Green, are noble structures. Of the buildings appropriated to the great national offices, military, naval, and fiscal, the most ancient is the Tower of London. It is surrounded by a wall and ditch, which also inclose several streets. The circumference is about a mile. It was a palace during 500 years; the monarchs, on their accession to the throne, constantly holding their courts in this fortres; but after the accession of Queen Elizabeth this custom ceased. The Horse Guards, an elegant structure, stands opposite the Banqueting House. The War Office is in this place, and here courts-martial for the army are held. The Ordnance Office, for the military department, is in St. Margaret-street, Westminster. The Admiralty is a large structure, in which the higher departments of the business of the navy is transacted, and the lords of the admiralty have houses. The Navy, Navy Pay, and Victualling Offices, are in Somerset Place, a stupendous and magnificent structure, built on the site of the old palace, erected by the first Duke of Somerset, in the reign of Edward VI. It was begun during the American war, and was intended to bring into one spot the most considerable public offices; and, although not yet finished, it already contains, besides the offices above mentioned, the following, namely, the auditors of impress, clerk of the estreats, duchy courts of Lancaster and Cornwall, hackney-coach, hawkers and pedlars, horse duty, lord treasurer's, remembrancer's, lottery, pipe and comptroller of the pipe, salt, sick and hurt, signet, stage-coach duty, stamp, surveyor of crown-lands, tax, and wine-licence offices. The king's barge-houses are comprehended in the plan, with a dwelling for the barge-master; beside houses for the treasurer, paymaster, and 6 commissioners of the navy; 3 commissioners of the victualling and their secretary; 1 commissioner of the stamps, and 1 of the sick and hurt; with commodious apartments in every office for a secretary, or some other acting officer, for a porter, and their families. In the front, toward the Strand, which consists of a rich basement, supporting an excellent example of the Corinthian order, and containing a principal and attic story, are apartments for the Royal Academy, and the Royal and Antiquarian Societies. The grand entrance, by 3 lofty arches, leads into a spacious quadrangle, on each side of which, to the E and W. a street is to be formed, beyond which the wings are to be carried. The front to the Thames is erected on a noble terrace, 53 feet wide; and the building, when finished, will extend 1100 feet. This terrace, unparalleled for grandeur and beauty of view, is supported on a rough, rustic basement, adorned with a lofty arcade of 32 arches, each 12 feet wide, and 24 high. The grand semicircular arch, in the middle of the basement, is that intended for the reception of the king's barges. The Treasury, which has a noble, elevated front, is in St. James's Park. In the city is the Royal Exchange, originally built in 1567, by Sir Thomas Gresham. Being destroyed by the great fire in 1666, it was rebuilt, in its present form, at the expence of 80,000l. In each of the principal fronts is a piazza, and in the centre an area. The height of the building is 56 feet, and from the centre of the south side rises a lantern and turret 178 feet high, on the top of which is a vane, in the form of a grasshopper, the crest of Sir Thomas Gresham. The inside of the area, which is 144 feet long, and 127 broad, is surrounded by piazzas. The Bank of England, a magnificent structure, is situated in Threadneedle-street. The Custom-house, to the west of the Tower, in Thames-street, was built in 1718, and destroyed by fire in March 1814; but the foundation of one upon a very handsome and extensive scale, also on the same bank of the Thames, adjoining Billingsgate, was commenced in 1816. The Excise Office, in Broad-street, is a building of magnificent simplicity, erected, in 1768, on the site of Gresham College. The East India House, in Leadenhall-street, was built in 1726. The original front was very confined; but a new front, much enlarged and improved, has been lately erected, richly furnished in respect to exterior decorations, architectural ornaments, stone sculpture, &c.; it has great extent in depth, and contains all the offices necessary for the transacting the business of a commercial company. The South Sea House, in Threadneedle street, is a handsome building; but the General Post Office, in Lombard-street, is rather convenient than splendid. Of the structures, which more particularly belong to the city, the most distinguished is the Mansion House, erected, in 1752, for the residence of the lord mayor; it is magnificent, but ponderous. The Monument is a grand fluted Doric column, 202 feet high, erected in commemoration of the great fire in 1666. The bridges are a great ornament to the metropolis. The most ancient, London Bridge, was begun in 1175, and finished in 1209. The length of it is 915 feet. The number of arches was 19, of unequal dimensions, and deformed by the enormous starlings, and by houses on each side, which overhung in a terrific manner. These were removed in 1756, when the upper part of the bridge assumed a modern appearance; but the starlings remain, though they so contract the space between the piers, as to occasion, at the ebb of tide, a fall of 5 feet, or a number of temporary cataracts, which have occasioned the loss of many lives. Westminster Bridge, one of the finest in the world, was built by Labelye, a native of Switzerland. The first stone was laid in 1739, the last in 1747; but on account of the sinking of one of the piers, the opening of the bridge was retarded till 1750. The whole is of Portland stone, except the spandrels of the arches, which are of Purbeck. It is 1223 feet in length. It has 13 large, and 2 small semicircular arches: the centre arch is 76 feet wide; the other arches, on each side, decreasing in width 4 feet. Blackfriars Bridge, built by Mr. Mylne, was begun in 1760, and completed in 1768. Its length is 995 feet; the breadth of the carriage-way 28, and of the footpaths 7 feet each. It consists of 9 elliptical arches, the centre one of which is 100 feet wide; and both this, and the arch on each side, are wider than the celebrated Rialto at Venice; but its decay is already too visible. This noble structure is built of Portland stone. The Strand Bridge is also far advanced over the Thames, opposite Somerset House. In London are several museums. The British Museum, which is open to the public gratis, was founded by parliament, in 1753, in pursuance of the will of Sir Hans Sloane, who directed his executors to make an offer to the public of his collection of natural and artificial curiosities and books, for the sum of 20,000l.; and the noble building called Montague House, was purchased for their reception. At the same time were purchased the MSS. collected by Edward Harley, Earl of Oxford. Here are likewise the collections made by Robert and John Cotton; and large sums have since been voted to augment this noble repository. George II. presented to it the libraries of the kings of England, from the reign of Henry VII. His present Majesty gave it an interesting collection of tracts published in the reigns of Charles I. and II. and a variety of antiquities, brought from Italy, were purchased by parliament for 8410l. in 1762. Another museum, consisting of anatomical preparations, and natural curiosities, collected by the late Dr. William Hunter, who built a spacious edifice for their reception, in Windmill-street, Haymarket, is now open to the public, and is to continue so for 30 years from the time of his death in 1783. Of the inns of court, or societies for the study of the law, the principal are the Middle and Inner Temples, Lincoln's Inn, and Gray's Inn. These are very spacious, and have large gardens, which are open to the public. The others are Clifford's Inn, Clement's Inn, Serjeants' Inn, New Inn, Lyon's Inn, Barnard's Inn, Furnival's Inn, and Staples' Inn. The College of Physicians, unfortunately hidden in Warwick-lane, was built by Sir Christopher Wren. Sion College, near London Wall, founded in 1603, by the Rev. Thomas White, is governed by a president, 2 deans, and 4 assistants; and all the clergy within the Bills of Mortality are its fellows. Here is a library for their use, and alms houses for 10 men and 10 women. There are four institutions, founded and supported by private individuals, for the promotion of science and literature; these are the Royal Institution in Albemarle Street, where Lectures in Chemistry, Natural Philosophy, and the different Arts and Sciences, are given by celebrated professors to numerous audiences; the London Institution in the Old Jewry; the Surry Institution, on the Surry side of Blackfriars Bridge, in the building late the Leverian Museum; and the Russel Institution, near Bloomsbury Square. All these institutions have libraries attached to them, and those belonging to the two former are numerous and well selected, consisting of books in every branch of literature and science, and in all the languages of Europe. The Society for the encouragement of Arts, Manufactures, and Commerce, have a handsome house in the Adelphi. Of public seminaries, the most distinguished are Westminster School, St. Paul's School, the Charter House, and Merchant Taylors' School.

The places of diversion are numerous and magnificent. Of the halls of the city companies, the most distinguished, in point of architecture, are Grocers' Hall, near the Poultry; Goldsmiths' Hall, Foster-lane; Ironmongers' Hall, Fenchurch-street; and Fishmongers' Hall, near London Bridge. The principal hospitals are Christ's Hospital, near Newgate-street, a royal foundation, for orphans and poor children; St. Bartholomew's Hospital, West Smithfield, another royal foundation for the sick and lame: Bridewell, in Blackfriars, once a royal palace, but now a royal hospital, for the apprenticing of the industrious youth, and a prison for the dissolute; St. Luke's, in Old-street, also for lunatics; St. Thomas's in the Borough, the fourth royal hospital for the sick and lame; and for the same purpose are Guy's Hospital, adjoining; the London Hospital, in Whitechapel-road; the Middlesex Hospital, Berners-street; the Westminster Infirmary, York-street; and St. George's Hospital, Hyde Park Corner. The Foundling Hospital, in Lamb's Conduit Fields; the Asylum, at Lambeth, for orphan girls; the Magdalen Hospital, in St. George's Fields, for penitent prostitutes; Bethlem Hospital for lunatics, erected on a magnificent scale in St. George's Fields, removed from Moorfields, and now stands on the site of the once noted Dog and Duck Gardens; the Marine Society, in Bishopsgate-street; the Small-pox Hospitals at Pancras; the Lock Hospital, near Grosvenor-place; the Westminster Lying-in Hospital, and many others for the same purpose, are also excellent institutions; and there are many dispensaries for dispensing medicines to the sick, who keep to their houses, under the direction of a physician to each dispensary, and proper assistants. The prisons are numerous: the principal are Newgate, a stupendous structure; the New Compter, Giltspur-street; the Fleet Prison, for debtors; the King's Bench, in St. George's Fields, for the same purpose; and a new county gaol, (including a new sessions-house) in Southwark. Some of the squares and streets in the metropolis are magnificent; and many of those which cannot boast of grandeur, are long, spacious, and airy. Portland Place forms, perhaps, the most magnificent street in the world; Stratford Place is truly elegant; and the Adelphi Terrace is the admiration of foreigners, for the noble view which it affords of the river, the bridges, and other public buildings, and of the fine hills beyond Lambeth and Southwark. The broad stream of the Thames flowing between London and Southwark, continually agitated by a brisk current, or a rapid tide, brings constant supplies of fresh air, which no buildings can intercept. The country round, especially on the London side, is nearly open to some distance; whence, by the action of the sun and wind on a gravelly soil, it is kept tolerably dry in all seasons, and affords no lodgment for stagnant air or water. The cleanliness of London, as well as its supply of water, are greatly aided by its situation on the banks of the Thames; and the New River, with many good springs within the city itself, further contributes to the abundance of that necessary element. All these are advantages, with respect to health, in which this metropolis is exceeded by few. Its situation, with regard to the circumstance of navigation, is equally well chosen; had it been placed lower on the Thames, it would have been annoyed by the marshes, and more liable to the insult of foreign foes; had it been higher, it would not have been accessible, as at present, to ships of large burden. It now possesses every advantage that can be derived from a sea-port, without its dangers; and, at the same time, by means of its noble river, enjoys a very extensive communication with the internal parts of the country, which supply it with necessaries, and, in return, receive from it such commodities as they require. With the great article of fuel, London is plentifully supplied by sea from the northern collieries. Corn and various other articles are with equal ease conveyed to it from all the maritime parts of the kingdom, and great numbers of coasting vessels are continually employed for this purpose. London, therefore, unites in itself all the benefits arising from navigation and commerce, with those of a metropolis at which all the public business of a great nation is transacted; and is, at the same time, the mercantile and political head of these kingdoms. It is also the seat of many considerable manufactures; some almost peculiar to itself, as ministering to the demands of studied splendor and refined luxury; others in which it participates with the manufacturing towns in general; with this difference, that only the finer and more costly of their works are performed here. The most important of its peculiar manufactures is the silk weaving, established in Spitalfields by refugees from France. A variety of works in gold, silver, and jewellery; the engraving of prints; the making of optical and mathematical instruments are likewise principally, or solely, executed here, and some of them in greater perfection than in any other country. The porter-brewery, a business of very great extent, is also chiefly carried on in London. To its port are likewise confined some branches of foreign commerce, as the vast East India trade, and those to Turkey and Hudson's Bay. Thus London has risen to its present rank of the first city in Europe with respect to opulence; and nearly, if not entirely so, as to number of inhabitants. London is a bishop's see, and sends 4 members to parliament. To enumerate all the events by which this great capital has been distinguished, would greatly exceed our limits; we shall only mention, therefore, the great plague in 1665, which cut off 90,000 people, and the dreadful conflagration in 1666, by which 13,000 houses were destroyed.

LORCHHAUSEN, a town of Germany on the Rhine, 27 m. W of Mentz.

LORD HOWE'S GROUP, an extensive group of islands, in the S. Pacific Ocean, discovered by Captain Hunter in 1791, who, from the mast-head, could distinctly descry 32 of them. They appeared thickly covered with wood, among which the cocoa-nut was very distinguishable. The natives were of a dark copper colour; their hair tied in a knot on the back of the head, and they seemed to have some method of taking off the beard, for they appeared as if clean shaved. They had an ornament, consisting of a number of fringes, like an artificial beard, which they fasten between the nose and mouth, and close under the nose. To that beard hung a row of teeth, which gave them the appearance of having a mouth lower than their natural one. They have holes run through the sides of the nose into the passage, into which, as well as through the septum, they thrust pieces of reed or bone. The arms and thighs are tattoed in the manner described by Captain Cook, which some of the natives of the islands he visited in these seas, called Tattoing; and some were painted with red and white streaks. They wore a wrapper round their middle. Lat. 5 30 S lon. from 159 14 to 159 37 E.

LORD HOWE'S ISLAND, an island of the S. Pacific Ocean, about 140 leagues E of New South Wales. On the W side is good anchorage, but the bottom is a coral rock. Many excellent turtle have been caught here on a sandy beach; and the island abounds with a variety of birds, which, when our seamen landed here, were so unaccustomed to be disturbed, that they came near enough to knock down as many as they wanted with a stick. This island was discovered, in 1788, by Lieut. King, in his voyage from Port Jackson to Norfolk Island. At the S end of it are two very high mountains, nearly perpendicular from the sea, the southernmost called Mount Gower. About 14 miles to the S is a very remarkable rock, named Ball's Pyramid, which had much the appearance of a steeple at a distance. Lord Howe's Island is about 3 m. and a half long, and very narrow across. Lat. 31 36 S lon. 159 0 N.

Lordings, Suff. between Stepham and Billinghurst.

LOREDO, a town in the late Venetian Dogada, 20 m. S of Venice.

LORETO, a town of the island of Corsica, 7 m. NE of Porta.

LORETTO, a town of Italy, in the marquisate of Ancona. They pretend to shew here the Santa Casa, or House of Nazareth, in which Jesus was brought up; and say that it was carried by angels into Dalmatia, and thence to the place where it now stands. This house is nearly 32 feet long, 13 wide, and 18 feet 9 inches in height, incrusted with marble, with inside walls of brick, and some pieces of stone intermixed. The inner part, or chapel, is very old, but is surrounded by a marble wall, and within is a church built of free-stone. A statue to represent Mary, the mother of Jesus, with the image of Christ, covered with diamonds, in her arms, stands upon the principal altar: it is of cedar-wood, 3 feet high, but the face can hardly be seen, on account of the smoke of the numerous lamps around it. She is clothed with cloth of gold, set off with jewels, with a triple crown on her head, and the infant is covered with a shirt, holding a globe in its hand, adorned with rich jewels. The sanctuary is perfectly crowded with 62 great lamps of gold and silver; one of the golden ones, which was presented by the Republic of Venice, weighs 37 pounds; there are also angels waiting about the holy image, one of massive gold and two of silver; and the walls are covered with plates of silver. Christina, queen of Sweden, gave a crown of gold, worth above 100,000 crowns; and Isabella, infanta of Spain, sent a garment, which cost 40,000 ducats. Louis XIII. of France, and his queen, sent two crowns of gold, enriched with diamonds. Beside these crowns, they sent an angel of massy silver, holding in its hand the figure of the dauphin, of solid gold. The jewels of the Holy House, however, are nothing in comparison with the treasure, where the number, variety, and richness of the vestments, lamps, candlesticks, goblets, crowns, crucifixes, images, cameos, pearls, gems of all kinds, &c. is prodigious. As for the town itself, exclusive of the chapel, it is neither very considerable nor very agreeable, nor does it contain above 300 inhabitants, who are almost all shoemakers, taylors, or sellers of chaplets. Loretto is seated on a mountain, about 3 m. from the Adriatic, 10 SE of Ancona, and 112 NE of Rome.

LORGUES, a populous town in the depart. of Var, seated on the river Argens, 5 m W by S of Draguignan.

LOUGH SHY, in Mayo, Connaught.

LOUGH STRANGFORD, in Down, Ulster, takes its present name from a small port town, called Strangford, seated on the W. side of the narrow entrance from the sea. It was formerly known by the name of Lough Cone, or Lough Coyne. It is a deep bay, or inlet of the sea, about 17 m. long and 4 or 5 broad, and abounds with excellent fish, particularly smelts; and off the bar, there is a periodical herring fishery in autumn. It contains 54 islands, small and great, known by particular names, and there are many others which are nameless. Four of them are called Swan Islands, from the number of swans which frequent them. The great and profitable manufacture carried on in these islands, is the burning of sea-weed into kelp.

LOUGH SWILLY, in Louth, Leinster.

Loughton, Bucks, between Fenny and Stony Stratford. Loughton, Essex, 10 m. from London. Loughton, Linc. W of Kirton, in Lindsey. Loughton, Linc. E of Sleaford. Loughton, Devons. near Plympton. Lovington, Hants, near Alresford. Lovington, Somers. between Bruton and Somerton.

LOUISA, at first called DEGERLEY, a seaport of Nyland, built in 1745, as a frontier town towards Russia. The houses are all of wood, two stories high, and painted red. It is situated on a bay on the N. coast of the Gulf of Finland, and defended towards the sea by a small fortress.

LOUISBURGH, a town of N. America, capital of the Island of Cape Breton, subject to the English. It has an excellent harbour, about 6 m. in length, from NE to SW, and more than half a m. in breadth, from NW to SE. Its entrance is not above 1800 feet wide, and is formed by 2 small islands. In the NE part is a fine careening wharf, to heave down, very secure from all winds. On the opposite side are the fishing stages, with room for 2000 boats to cure their fish; the cod being remarkably plentiful here, and, at the same time, better than any about Newfoundland. The fishery may, in general, be continued from April to the close of December, when the harbour becomes impracticable, being entirely frozen, so as to be walked over. The town is about half an English m. in length, and 2 in circuit, built, for the most part, of stone houses, and laid out in broad and regular streets. At a little distance from the fort, or citadel, is a large parade, the inside of which is a fine square, near 200 feet every way. This island was taken by Admiral Boscawen and Lieutenant-general Amherst, June 27, 1758, and its fortifications since demolished. Lat. 45 54 N long. 59 48 W.

LOUISIANA, a large country of N. America, situated on both sides of the Mississippi, and bounded on the E by Florida and the United States; on the S by the Gulf of Mexico; on the W by New Mexico; and on the N by Indian nations. It is agreeably situated between the extremes of heat and cold; its climate varying as it extends towards the N. It contains 20,845 inhabitants. The southern parts, lying within the reach of the refreshing breezes from the sea, are not scorched like those under the same latitude in Africa; and its northern regions are colder than those in Europe under the same parallels, with a wholesome, serene air. From the favourableness of the climate, two annual crops of Indian corn, as well as rice, may be produced; and the soil, with little cultivation, would furnish grain of every kind in the greatest abundance. The timber is as fine as any in the world; and the quantities of live oak, ash, mulberry, walnut, cherry, cypress, and cedar, are astonishing. The neighbourhood of the Mississippi, besides, furnishes the richest fruits in great variety; the soil is particularly adapted for hemp, flax, and tobacco; and indigo is at this time a staple commodity, which commonly yields the planter three or four cuttings a year. Whatever is rich and rare in the most desirable climates in Europe seems to be the spontaneous production of this delightful country. It is intersected by a number of fine rivers, among which are the Natchitoches, and the Adayes, or Mexicano. In 1763, Louisiana was ceded to Spain, and has since become an integral part of the government of the United States.

LOUISVILLE, a town of N. America, 80 m. SW of Lexington, in the State of Kentucky, and county of Jefferson. It is seated on the river Ohio, opposite Clarksville, at the Falls, in a fertile country, and promises to be a place of great trade; but its unhealthiness, owing to stagnated waters at the back of the town, has hitherto retarded its increase. Lat. 38 3 N lon. 86 30 W.

LOULAY, a town of France, in the depart. of Charente, 6 m. N of St. Jean D'Angely.

LOUTH, a county of Ireland, in the province of Leinster, about 22 m. in length, and from 9 to 14 in breadth; bounded on the W by Monaghan and Meath; on the N by Armagh and Carlingford Bay; on the E by St. George's Channel; and on the S by Meath, from which it is parted by the river Boyne. It is the smallest county in the kingdom, but very fertile and pleasant, and contains 61 parishes, 11,500 houses, and about 57,750 inhab. Its chief towns are Dundalk, Carlingford, Drogheda, Ardee, and Dunleer.

LOUTH, a town of Ireland, in the county of the same name, 6 m. SW of Dundalk.

LOUTH, a large and considerable town of Lincolns. containing many handsome houses, and 4700 inhab. It has a large church, with a fine steeple, thought by some to be as high as the spire at Grantham, which is 288 feet high. From hence there is a canal to the sea, at Tilney, about 8 m. It is situated on the river Lud, from which it takes its name, 28 m. NE of Lincoln, and 148 N of London. Markets on Wednes. and Satur.

Loutherstown, in Fermanagh, Ulster.

LOUVAIN, a large city of Austrian Brabant, with a celebrated university, on the river Dyle, 12 m. NNE of Brussels. The walls of this place are nearly 7 m. in circumference, but within them are a great many gardens and vineyards. The public buildings are magnificent, and the university consists of 60 small colleges, much admired for their situation and architecture, but not sumptuous. They formerly made large quantities of cloth here, insomuch that this city contained, at one time, 150,000 clothiers; but at present their trade is greatly decayed, and the place is chiefly remarkable for its good beer, with which it serves the neighbouring towns. In its castle, built originally by the emperor Arnulph, to defend the country against the Normans, and called at first Loven, and afterwards Cæsar's Castle, the emperor, Charles V. and his sisters were brought up till the year 1510; and formerly the assembly of the States was held here. It is now in ruins.

LOUVESTEIN, a fortress of S. Holland, situated on an island, called the Bommel Waert, formed by the junction of the rivers Waal and Maese, 6 m. SE of Gorcum, and 16 E of Dort. In this castle, the patriotic chiefs were imprisoned by Prince Maurice, whence that party has ever since been called the Louvestein party. Their principles are strongly republican, and, of course, in direct opposition to the stadtholder.

LOUVIERS, a handsome town in the depart. of Eure, with a considerable manufactory of fine cloths. It is seated in a fertile plain, on the river Eure, 10 m. N of Evreux, and 55 NW of Paris.

Lubbenham, Leices. near Harborough.

LUBEC, an island in the East Indian Ocean, near Madura. Lat. 5 50 S lon. 112 22 E.

LUBECK, a celebrated sea-port of Holstein, in Lower Saxony. It is a free, imperial city, and was long the head of the famous Hanseatic League, which was formed here in 1164. It was likewise the most commercial city and powerful republic of the north. Its fleet set the northern powers at defiance, and rode triumphant in the Baltic. But Lubeck retains scarcely a shadow of its former power. Its trade, however, is still considerable. The houses of Lubeck are built all of stone, in a very ancient style of architecture; the doors being so large as to admit carriages into the hall, which frequently serves for a coach-house. The walls of many houses bear the date of the 15th century, and, at that period, no doubt, the town was esteemed very beautiful. The streets are, for the most part, steep, as the city stands on the two sides of a large hill, the eastern part extending towards the Wackenitz, as the western does towards the Trave.—Here are four parochial churches, besides the cathedral. The town-house is a superb structure, and has several towers. In it is a large hall, called Haansesaal, where the deputies of the Hanse towns used formerly to meet. Here is also a fine exchange, built in the year 1683. The inhabitants are all Lutherans, and there are 21 preachers, whose chief has the title of Superintendent. Here were formerly 4 convents; and in that of St. John there are still 22 Protestant girls, under the government of an abbess. That of St. Mary Magdalen is turned into an hospital; that of St. Anne is made a house of correction; and of the monastery of St. Catharine, they have made a handsome college. In the great hospital, there is always a considerable number of poor men and women. Beside this, there are 14 other hospitals, 1 for lunatics, a pest-house, and 4 others for sick persons. Lubeck is seated at the confluence of the rivers Trave (which is the largest), the Steckenitz, another navigable stream, by which it communicates with the Elbe; and the Wackenitz, which issues from the Lake of Ratzeburg, and, after joining the Scwartau, falls into the Baltic, by means of which several streams, long and flat-bottomed vessels pass from the Baltic into the German ocean, 14 m. SW of the Baltic, and 40 NE of Hamburgh. Lat. 53 52 N lon. 10 44 E.

LUBECK, THE BISHOPRICK OF, a small territory in that part of the duchy of Holstein, which was anciently called Wagria. The bishop, who is always of the house of Holstein, is a prince of the empire; yet, in the college of princes, he sits neither on the spiritual nor temporal bench, but on a particular one, placed crosswise, and laid there purposely for him and the bishop of Osnaburg, when a Lutheran. The chapter consists of 30 persons, who are all Lutherans, 4 Roman Catholics excepted. The cathedral stands in Lubeck, where, however, it has no authority.

LUBEN, a town of Lignitz, in Silesia.

LUBLIN, a city of Poland, capital of a palatinate of the same name, part of which is annexed to the new kingdom of Galicia. It contains several churches and convents, has three annual fairs, which last a month each, and are frequented by great numbers of German, Greek, Armenian, Turkish, Russian, Jewish, and even Arabian merchants, and is situated in a very pleasant and fertile country, on the little river Bystranza, with a castle built on a high rock, 85 m. SE of Warsaw.

LUBOMLA, a town of Chelm, in Poland.

LUC, a town in the depart. of the Var; a town in the depart. of the Lower Pyrenees, 12 m. W of Pau; a town in the depart. of Lozere; and a town in the depart. of the Drome. Also a town of Leuchtenberg, in Bavaria, on the Nab, 12 m. NNE of Amberg.

Lucan, a pleasant village on the Liffey, 6 m. from Dublin, noted for a medical spring.

LUCANS, a town and fertile jurisdiction, abounding in silver mines, of Guamanga, in Peru, situated not far from the source of the river Apurinac. The jurisdiction begins about 80 m. SW of Guamanga.

LUCAR DE BARAMEDA, ST. a town in Andalusia. It has a fine harbour, well defended, and is seated at the mouth of the river Guadalquiver, 44 m. S by W of Seville, and 270 S by W of Madrid.

LUCAR DE GUADIANA, a town of Andalusia, with a small harbour, seated on the river Guadiana, 12 m. N of Ayamonte.

LUCAYA ISLANDS. See BAHAMA.

LUCCA, a town of Italy, capital of a republic of the same name, seated in the middle of a fruitful plain, terminating in pleasant eminences, near the river Serchio, 10 m. NNE of Pisa, 37 W of Florence, and 155 N by W of Rome. It is about 3 Italian m. in circumference, and fortified with 11 bastions. The inhab. are about 40,000, are considerable manufacturers of silk, and gold and silver stuffs; for, this reason it is called Lucca the Industrious. They oblige all travellers who have arms to leave them at the city gate, and will not suffer any one to wear a sword within it. The state palace is a large building, and includes the arsenal, which has arms for 20,000 men. The houses are handsome, and the streets broad and well paved, but most of them are irregular.

LUCCA, THE REPUBLIC OF, a small territory of Italy, lying on the Tuscan Sea; about 24 m. in length, and from 10 to 20 in breadth. The soil does not produce much corn; but there is plenty of wine, oil, silk, wool, and chesnuts. Their oil, in particular, is in high esteem, but the poorer people receive part of their support from chesnuts, lupines, and French beans. The industry of the people, in improving to the best advantage every spot of their ground, is equally surprising and commendable. This republic is under the protection of the Emperor. The regency consists of a gonfalonier, assisted by a council of 9 members; all of these, however, are changed every two months, and are chosen out of the great council. This is composed of 240 nobles, of whom one half forms what are called the ordinary counsellors, and the others the extraordinary. Both are changed once in two years, by a new election. The gonfalonier, and nine regent counsellors, whilst in the administration, live in the state palace, and at the public expence. The republic maintains a regular body of 500 men, and 70 Swiss, as a guard for the regency. The number of inhab. in the city, and the 150 villages belonging to it, is computed at upwards of 120,000. The revenues amount to about 30,000*l.* per annum.

LUCE, a great bay of Wigtons. lying to the E of the Mull of Galloway.

LUCENA, a town of Cordova; and a town of Valencia, 18 m. NE of Segorva; both in Spain.

LUCERA, a town of Capitanata, in Naples, with a manufacture of cloth. It is 60 m. NE of Naples.

LUCERN, one of the 13 cantons of Switzerland, and the most considerable of them, except Zurich and Bern. It is bounded on the E and SE by the cantons of Zug, Schwitz, and Underwalden; and on all the other sides by that of Bern. The inhabitants, who are Romanists, are under the spiritual jurisdiction of the bishop of Constance. It is about 30 m. in length, and 20 in its mean breadth. The soil is fertile, but unequal; the southern parts are mountainous, but without glaciers, and there is a very considerable exportation of cheese. The sovereign power of this republic resides in the council of 100, comprising the senate, of little council. The former is the nominal sovereign; but the power resides in the latter, consisting of 36 persons, who are formed into two divisions, which exercise the office by rotation. Although the government appears purely aristocratic, yet this aristocracy is restrained in divers respects; as in the matter of making war or peace, concluding new alliances, acquiring new territories, or imposing new taxes, the consent of all the citizens must be obtained. The chiefs of all the republic are two magistrates, called advoyers.

LUCERN, a very ancient and tolerably well built town, the capital of the canton of Lucern, in Switzerland, on the Waldstaetter See, or Lake of Lucern, where the Reuss issues from it, 30 m. SW of Zurich, and 35 E of Bern. It is divided into two parts by one of the branches of the river Reuss, which falls into the lake, on which the town is situated. The streets are clean, the grand church is very handsome, and the arsenal is well furnished with new cannon; but the town scarcely contains 3000 inhab. has no manufactures of consequence, and little commerce; and there are few places where learning meets with less encouragement, and, consequently, is less cultivated.—The bridges, which skirt the town, round the edge of the lake, are the fashionable walk of the place, and remarkable for their length. Being covered at the top, and open at the sides, they afford a constant view of the beautiful and romantic country. They are decorated with coarse paintings, representing the histories of the Hebrews, the battles of the Swiss, and the Dance of Death.

LUCERN, LAKE OF. See WALDSTAETTER SEE.

LUCERNA, a town of the Four Vallies, in Piedmont, to one of which it gives name; 5 m. SW of Pignerola.

LUCEY, a town of France, in the depart. of the Meurte, 3 m. NW of Toul.

LUCIA, ST. or ALOUSIE, an island of the W. Indies, about 22 m. in length and 15 in breadth, affording, amongst other tropical productions, plenty of cocoa and fustic. It is very healthy, and exhibits a variety of hills, yet partly consists of very fertile plains, finely watered with rivulets, and furnished with timber, fit for building houses and windmills, and often employed for that purpose by both the French and English planters. It is provided with several good bays and commodious harbours, the chief of which, called the Little Carnage, is reckoned the best in all the Caribbee Islands. In it are two remarkably round and high mountains, said to be volcanoes, by which this island may be known at a considerable distance. It was long considered as neutral by the English and French, till it was ceded to France by the peace of 1763. In 1777, it was taken by the English, but restored to the French by the peace of 1783. It was again taken by the English in the revolutionary war (by Sir Charles Grey and Sir John Jervis, in 1794), and still remains in their possession. It is about 70 m. NNW of Barbadoes, and 38 S of Martinico. Lat. 13 25 N lon. 60 58. W.

LUCIA, ST. one of the smaller Cape de-Verd

Islands, about 24 m. in length, with a commodious harbour on the E side, formed by two small islands, and affording good shelter and anchorage. The island is high and mountainous. Lat. 17 18 N lon. 248 W.

LUCIGNANO, a town of Tuscany.

Luckeme, Isle of Wight, in E. Medina.

Luckford, Dorsets. W of Holme, by the river Luckford, which empties itself into the Frome, and forms the W boundaries of Purbeck Isle. Luckham, Devons. in Uffculme parish. Luckington, Wilts. SW of Malmsbury. Lucknor, Northumb. W of Sunderland.

LUCKNOW, an ancient city of Hindostan, capital of Oude. It is an extensive place, but poorly built: the houses are chiefly of mud, covered with thatch; and many consist entirely of mats and bamboos; and are thatched with leaves of the cocoa-nut, palm-tree, and sometimes with straw. The houses of the merchants are of brick, lofty and strong, and there are some, but not many, magnificent edifices, Sujah Dowlah having destroyed most of the ancient palaces, when he erected others. The others are mostly built on eminences, here and there, whence the inequality of the ground makes it troublesome to walk, continually ascending or descending. The streets, moreover, are crooked, narrow, and stinking, every kind of filth being thrown into them, and no care taken to keep them clean. In the dry season, the dust and heat are almost intolerable; in the rainy season, the mire is so deep as to be scarcely passable; and there is a great number of elephants belonging to the nabob and the great men of his court, which are continually passing the streets, either to the palace or to the river, to the great danger and annoyance of the foot passengers and shopkeepers. The palace of the nabob is seated on a high bank near the Goomty, and commands an extensive view both of that river and the country on the eastern side. Lucknow is 650 m. NW of Calcutta. Lat. 26 35 N lon. 81 25 E.

LUCKO, a town of Volhynia, in Poland, 176 m. SE of Warsaw.

LUCKOR, Glamorgans. an ancient borough on the river Luckor, which is navigable here for vessels of 200 tons burden, and over which it has a ferry. It is 7 m. W by N of Swansea.

Luckor, a river of Glamorgans. which passes by Llanelly, Luckor, &c. and empties itself into the Bristol Channel at the Worms Head. Luckton, Heref. near Croft Castle.

LUCO, a town of Abruzzo Ultra.

Lucomb, Dorsets. 2 m. N of West Chelburgh.

LUCON, or LUZON, a town in the depart. of Vendee, seated in an unwholesome morass, on a canal, about 6 m. long, which communicates with the sea, 17 m. N of Rochelle.

LUCONIA, or MANILLA, the chief of the Phillippine Islands, in Asia, about 400 m. in length, and 100 in breadth. It is not so hot as might be expected, because it is watered by a vast abundance of large and small lakes, springs, rivulets, and great rivers, and by the periodical rains, which inundate all the plains. There are several volcanoes in the mountains, which occasion earthquakes; and a variety of hot baths. The produce of this very fertile and healthy island is wax, cotton, wild cinnamon, sulphur, cocoa nuts, rice, gold, which is found in every part; horses, buffaloes, game, 40 different sorts of palm-trees, and all sorts of fruits, both of the E. and W. Indies, with some that are to be found no where else. The inhab. are composed of several nations, besides Spaniards, and they all produce a mixed breed, distinct from any of the rest. The blacks have long hair and good features; and there is one tribe who tattoo themselves, drawing curious figures on their bodies. To this island the Spaniards bring all sorts of commodities; such as silver from New Spain, Mexico, and Peru; diamonds from Golconda; silks, tea, Japan and China ware, and gold dust from China and Japan. The Spaniards send hence two large ships every year to Acapulco in Mexico, with merchandise, and return back with silver. There is an inquisition here, but it does not affect the natives and the Mahometans. This island is divided into several provinces, mostly under the jurisdiction of the Spaniards. The principal are Illocos, the richest and most populous, the coast of which extends upwards of 30 leagues; Balagan, which contains about 2500 tributary Indians; Camarinas, in which is the city of New Caceres, the see of a bishop; Paracale, which contains about 7000 tributary Indians, and abounds in mines of gold and other metals, and of valuable loadstones; and Cagayan, in which are about 9000 tributaries. Manilla is the capital.

Ludgraves, Midd. near Hadley. Ludham, Norfolk, between Acole and Hickling. Ludley, Sussex, W of Pevensey Marsh or Level.

LUDLOW, a large, neat, flourishing, and well-built borough town of Salop, seated on the river Temd, near its conflux with the Corve, in a pleasant, fruitful, and populous country, 29 m. S of Shrewsbury, and 138 NW of London. It contains 800 houses. Arthur, Prince of Wales, son of Henry VII. held a court, and died here; and here Henry VIII. established the council of the Marches, whose lord-lieutenant used to keep his court here, till they were disused in the reign of William III. who appointed two lord lieutenants of N. and S. Wales. It is a great thoroughfare to Wales, and is much resorted to by the Welch youth of both sexes for education. Market on Mond.

Ludsham, Sussex, near Marshfield and Cuckfield. Ludston, Shrops. 5 m. from Bridgenorth. Ludwell, Hertfords. N of Hitchin. Ludwell, Wilts. near Wardour Castle. Ludwick Hall, Hertfords. NE of Hatfield. Ludworth, Derbys. in the High Peak. Ludworth, E of Durham. Luffencot, Devons. near Houlsworthy. Luffenhall, Hertfords. NE of Steevenage. Luffenham, N. and S. Rutland, 4 m. from Uppingham. Luffield, part in Buckinghams. and part in Northampton, in Stow parish. Luffwick, Northampton, NW of Thrapston. Lug, a river in Herefords. which runs into the Wye, near Hereford. Lug, a river which rises in Radnor, and running S through Herefords. Salop and Monmouths. passes by Monmouth, and falls into the Severn, near Chepstow.

LUGANO, a town of Switzerland, capital of a bailiwick of the same name, which is the principal of the 4 transalpine bailiwicks, about 20 m. in length, and 13 in breadth. It is built round a gentle curve on the NW coast of the Lake of Lugano, and is the emporium of the greatest part of the merchandise, which passes from Italy over St. Gothard or Bernardin. It contains about 8000 inhab. Most of the houses are built of tufstone. The bailiwick contains 106 towns and villages, and about 53,000 inhab. who are all Romanists. The soil is fertile in pasture, corn, fruit, and silk, and olives are produced in great abundance. It is governed by a bailiff, sent every 2 years by each canton in its turn. Lugano is 17 m. NW of Como. Lat. 45 54 N lon. 8 48 E.

LUGANO, a lake of Switzerland, on the Italian side of the Alps, and in nearly the centre of the bailiwick of Lugano. It is about 20 m. in length, and from 2 to 4 in breadth; its form very irregular, bending into continual sinuosities. It is about 190 feet perpendicular higher than the Lakes of Como and Locarno.

Lugham, Cornwall, near Mount's Bay. Lugham, or Luggan, Cornwall, among hills, N of Redruth.

LUGO, a city of Galicia, chiefly celebrated for its warm medical springs; situated on the river Minho, 40 m. N of Orense. It contains 3 parish churches, 4 convents, 2 hospitals and a seminary.

Lund, Yorks. NW of Beverley. Lund, Yorks. N of New Malton.

LUND, a town, the capital of Scania, and the see of an archbishop. It is accounted the most ancient in Sweden, according to an old proverb, that when our Saviour, Jesus Christ, was born, Lund was in its glory. Here is a university, founded by Charles XI. for 21 professors, and furnished with a good library. The number of students is about 300, and of other inhabitants about 800, who have but little trade. Here likewise a Royal Physiographical Society was instituted in 1776, and incorporated by the king in 1778. The subjects treated of in its Acts, relate only to natural history, chemistry, and agriculture. The cathedral is an ancient, irregular building. It is 20 m. SSE of Landscrona, and 225 SW of Stockholm. Lat. 55 33 N lon. 13 26 E.

LUNDEN, a town of Danish Holstein, seated near the river Eyder, 24 m. W of Rensburg, and 57 NNW of Hamburgh.

LUNDIE, Forfar, Scotland, 4 m. from Dundee.

LUNDY, an island in the mouth of the Bristol Channel, near the middle, between Devons. and Pembrokes. It is about 5 m. long, and 2 broad, and encompassed with inaccessible rocks, so that it has but one entrance, and there scarcely two persons can go abreast. In the N. part of it is a high, pyramidical rock, called the Constable. Here are horses, kine, hogs, and goats, with great store of sheep and rabbits; but the chief commodity is fowl, with which it much abounds, their eggs being very thick upon the ground at their season of breeding. It had once a fort and a chapel; at present, the only inhabitants are a man and his family.

Lune, a river of Westmorel. and Durham, which runs into the Tees below Longton, about 6 m. above Barnard Castle. Lune; see Lon. Lune Forest, Yorks. near Richmond.

LÜNEBURG, a town of Natangen, in Prussia.

LUNENBURG, a duchy in the circle of Lower Saxony, which, including Zell, is separated from Holstein and Lawenburg, on the N by the river Elbe; and is bounded on the E by the duchies of Brunswick and Mecklenburg. It is 100 m. in length, and 70 in breadth. It is watered by the rivers Aller, Elbe, Ilmenau, Jetze, the Old Mark, the Lahe, the Seeve, and other rivers; and part of it is full of heaths and forests; but, near the rivers, pretty fertile. It abounds with wild boars, which the German nobility come to hunt here for their diversion, at certain seasons. It is subject to the elector of Hanover. Lunenburg is the capital.

LUNENBURG, a large fortified town of Germany, containing about 1300 houses, and 9000 inhab. The chief public edifices are 3 parish churches, the ducal palace, 3 hospitals, the town-house, the salt magazine, formerly a church belonging to the abbey of Heiligenthal, the anatomical theatre, and the academy. The Sulze constitutes a distinct part of the town, is walled in, and has a separate magistracy. It consists of small houses, built deep in the ground, with four large leaden pans in each, which are new cast every month, and wherein the salt is daily boiled. Every salt-house is estimated at 40,000 rix dollars, so that the capital of the whole Sulze greatly exceeds the sum of two millions of rix dollars. Of these salt works one-fifth part is the sovereign's due. The salt trade, however, is much reduced since the commencement of the last century, yet it still chiefly employs the inhabitants. Lunenburg is seated on the river Ilmenau, 36 m. SE of Hamburgh. Lat. 53 16 N lon. 10 31 E.

LUNENBURGH, a town of Virginia, 50 m. SW of Richmond; a county of Virginia; a town of New York; and a town of Acadia, in Nova Scotia, situated on the SE coast, 40 m. SW of Halifax.

LUSATIA, a territory of Germany, about 80 m. long, and 40 wide, bounded on the N by the Mark of Brandenburg; on the E by Silesia; on the S by Bohemia; and on the W by Meissen. It is about 28 leagues long, and 15 wide, and is divided into the Upper and Lower.

Upper Lusatia abounds in mountains and hills, in which are found many boggy and moorish tracts. The latter, on the contrary, has a great number of fine woods; the very great heaths themselves being provided with it, even to exuberance. In each of these marquisates, rye, wheat, barley, and oats, are cultivated; as also much buckwheat, together with peas, lentils, beans, and millet. The culture of flax is pretty considerable, and they make some white and red wine. The inhabitants of Lusatia enjoy an important means of subsistence, in the numerous and good manufactures of linen and woollen stuffs. These flourish principally in Upper Lusatia. The cloth manufactures are the oldest, having been in vogue, in several towns, so early as the 13th century. There are also good manufactures of hats, leather, paper, gun-powder, iron, glass, wax bleaching, black and fine dyeings, &c. &c. The most ancient inhabitants of this country were the Semnones, or Senones, a Suabian nation, who inhabited Upper Lusatia, but by their custom of wandering gave place to the Wandalers, and these last again by a like expedition, in the 7th century, to the Sorber Wends, a Sclavonian people. At present the towns are almost wholly peopled with German inhabitants, but in the villages, a greater number of Wends than Germans is to be met with. The principal rivers are the Spree, the Black Elster, and the Pulsnitz. Upper Lusatia formerly belonged to Bohemia. Lower Lusatia, which alone, till the 15th century, was called Lusatia, was erected into a marquisate, in the year 931, by Henry I. king of Germany. In the middle of the 16th century, they were both ceded to the elector of Saxony, in consideration of a large sum of money, which the elector had advanced to the emperor in his war with the Bohemians, with the single condition, that the kings of Bohemia should retain the armorial bearings. The whole country is now divided between the King of Prussia and the Elector of Saxony.

LUTKEN DORTMUND, a town of Mark, in Westphalia.

LUTON, a small dirty town of Bedfords. noted for its manufacture of straw hats. In its church is a remarkable Gothic font, in form of a hexagon, open at the sides, and terminating in elegant tabernacle work. It is pleasantly seated among hills, on the river Lea, 20 m. S. of Bedford, and 31 N by W of London. A corn market on Mond.

LUTRI, a town of Switzerland, in the Pays de Vaud, situated on the N. coast of the Lake of Geneva, 2½ m. E of Lausanne?

LUTSCHINEN, a river of the bailiwick of Interlacken, and canton of Bern, in Switzerland, formed by the junction of two streams, the one called the Weis Lutschinen, flowing through the valley of Lauterbrunnen, and the other called the Schwartz Lutschinen, which comes from the valley of Grindelwalde. After having left the fertile plains of Gisteig, and passed the village of Wilderswyl, the breadth of the valley lessens, and continues to grow so narrow, that the stream of the Lutschinen can hardly force a passage. In a rainy season, the river forms a torrent, which rushes impetuously through the great masses of rock, that obstruct its course, and with inconceivable violence, forces from their beds, the most enormous fragments. The road to Zwey Lutschinen and Lauterbrunnen, is over this river, by a kind of bridge, which to a stranger to the country presents the most terrific appearance. It is suspended over a roaring torrent, and fixed against the sides of rocks; while a huge vertical stone, raised in the middle of the river, supports some thick planks, so badly joined, as to be neither steady nor solid; and these form a wretched insecure bridge, over which the inhabitants of the country daily pass, with a firm step and undaunted eye; a passage, which the traveller, unaccustomed to such strange communications, would tremble to attempt.

LUTTER, a town of Brunswick, in Lower Saxony, near which Christian IV. king of Denmark, was defeated by the Imperialists, under Count Tilly, in the year 1626; it is 11 m. NW of Gosslar. Also a river of Westphalia, which runs into the Aa 2 m. S of Herverden; and a river of Lower Saxony, which runs into the Lachte 12 m. NE of Zell.

LUTTERWORTH, a town of Leic. containing 410 houses and 1845 inhab. Its rector, the famous reformer, John Wickliff, died and was buried here, in the year 1385; but his bones were taken out of his grave, and burnt, 40 years after, by order of the council of Constance. The pulpit, in which he preached, is still preserved in its church. The church has a remarkable handsome tower. The Roman Watling-street runs on the W side of the town. It is situated on the little river Swift, (into which the bones of Wickliff were thrown, after being burnt) in a fertile soil, and pleasant, open country, 14 m. S of Leicester, and 88 NNW of London. Market on Thurs.

LUTZEN, a town of Mersburg, in Upper Saxony, 10 m. WSW of Leipsic. Near this place, in the year 1632, was fought the famous battle between the Swedes and Imperialists, in which the former remained masters of the field, but lost their great king Gustavus Adolphus, in the very moment of victory. On the spot on which he was found dead, nothing but a bare stone has been erected, and which is still to be seen there.

LUTZENSTEIN, a town in the depart. of Lower Rhine, seated on a mountain, with a castle, 30 m. NW of Strasburgh.

Luxborough, Somersets. near Dunster. Luxborough, Essex, in Chigwell parish, near Woodford Bridge, is a superb and elegant villa, built by Lord Luxborough, about 60 years ago.

LUXEMBURG, (antiently called LUCIS BURGUM, because the sun was adored here, as the moon was at Arlon, Jupiter at Carignan, and Mars at Marche-en-Famine,) a city of the Netherlands, capital of a duchy of the same name. The city of Luxemburg is small, but strong, as well from its situation as its fortifications. Sigefroy I. count of Luxemburg, built a wall round it in the 10th century. In 1543, Luxemburg was taken and pillaged by the French, commanded by Charles, duke of Orleans, second son of Francis I.; but in the year 1544, Ferdinand de Gonsagne retook it for Charles V. after 15 days' siege. It was again besieged by the duke of Guise, in 1559, but he was obliged to retire when the French were defeated at St. Quintin. In 1597, the marquis de Biron attempted to take it by a coup-de-main, it having only a small garrison, but meeting a very obstinate resistance from the citizens, he was obliged to abandon his enterprise. The city continued under the dominion of Spain till 1684, when the French, under the Marechal de Crequy, came to assault it, after having bombarded it in December the preceding year; the trenches were opened the 8th of May, and on the 4th of June the city surrendered. It was ceded to the French by the treaty of Ratisbon, concluded the same year, who very much extended the fortifications; but by the peace of Ryswick, in 1697, it was restored to Spain. It was again taken by the French, in 1701, who ceded it, by the barrier treaty, to the States General; but in 1715, it was restored to the emperor. In the 16th century, when Philip II. established so many new dioceses in the Netherlands, it was in agitation to erect Luxemburg into a bishopric, and to annex the abbey of Orval to its revenues: but at the earnest solicitation of the archbishop of Treves, whose spiritual jurisdiction extended over the city, and part of the province of Luxemburg, the design was laid aside. The river Allitz runs through it, and divides it into the Upper and Lower Towns; the former almost surrounded with rocks, but the Lower seated on a plain. It is 25 m. SW of Treves. Lat. 49 37 N lon. 6 17 E.

LUXEMBURG, THE DUCHY OF, one of the 17 provinces of the Netherlands, lies in the centre of the Forest of Ardennes, W of the electorate of Treves, and S of the territories of Liege, Limburg, and Juliers. In some places it is covered with mountains and woods, but it is, in general, fertile in corn and wine, and has a good breed of cattle, and all sorts of game; here are also a great number of iron mines and founderies for cannon, which last constitute its greatest riches. It is watered by many small rivers, the principal of which are the Ourt, the Semois, the Lass, and the Chiers, which discharge themselves into the Meuse, with several others which flow into the Moselle. In the whole duchy, exclusive of the principal town (Luxemburg), are twenty-three other smaller nes. Charles IV. emperor of the Romans, raised the county of Luxemburg, in 1354, to a duchy; but dying without heir, it came by his will to Wenzel, son to the emperor Charles IV. king of the Romans and Bohemia, who, by way of mortgage, ceded to the Princess Elizabeth, daughter to his brother John, duke of Gorlitz, (who first married Anthony, duke of Burgundy, and afterwards John of Bavaria,) this duchy in lieu of a dowry of 120,000 Rhenish florins, which he had promised to give her. In 1444, this princess ceded all her right in the duchy of Luxemburg to Philip, duke of Burgundy. By the peace of the Pyrenees, France obtained the districts and towns of Thionville, Montmedy, Marville, Chevancy, Carignan, and Damvilliers; and, during the present war, the whole (with its capital, which surrendered by capitulation, June 7, 1795,) has submitted to the French republic.

LUXEUIL, a town in the depart. of Upper Saone, remarkable for its chalybeate springs and warm baths, seated at the foot of the Vosges, 15 m. W of Vesoul. A great number of urns, medals, and inscriptions having been found here, it is supposed to have been a considerable place in the time of the Romans. It was destroyed by Attila in 540. Near the town was a late celebrated abbey, founded by St. Columban, an Irishman.

Lynn, North, Norf. at the mouth of the Ouse. It had formerly a church, called St. Edmond's, which has long since been entirely swallowed up by the sea. On the opposite side of the river is Lynn, Old, or West.

LYNN REGIS, or KING'S LYNN, a populous and flourishing town of Norfolk. The situation of this town, near the fall of the Ouse into the sea, after having received several other rivers, of which some are navigable, gives it an opportunity of extending its trade into 8 different counties, by which many considerable cities and towns, viz. Peterborough, Ely, Stamford, Bedford, St. Ives, Huntingdon, St. Neots, Northampton, Cambridge, St. Edmundsbury, and the N part of Bucks, as well as the inland parts of Norfolk and Suffolk, are supplied with heavy goods, not only of home produce, as coals and salt from Newcastle, but also of merchandise imported from abroad, especially wine, of which two articles, viz. coals and wine, this is the greatest port for importation of any place on all the eastern coast of England; and those wherein the Lynn merchants deal more largely than any town in England, except London, Bristol, and Newcastle. In return for this, Lynn receives back all the corn which the counties just mentioned produce, for exportation; and therefore sends more of it abroad than any port, except Hull. The foreign trade of the merchants here is very considerable, especially to Holland, Norway, and the Baltic, and also to Spain and Portugal, and formerly they drove a good trade to France. The harbour is safe when ships are in it, but difficult to enter, by reason of the many flats and shoals in the passage; but they are well buoyed, and good pilots are always ready. Its air is unwholesome, on account of its vicinity to the seas. The streets are narrow, but well paved, and it has a good market-place, and a noble old town-house and exchange; 106 m. N by E of London. Markets on Tuesd. and Sat.

LYONNOIS, a ci-devant province of France, W of the rivers Saone and Loire, about 30 m. in length and 17 in breadth. It now forms, including the districts of Beaujelois and Forez, the depart. of the Rhone and Loire. Lyons is the capital.

LYONS, a large, ancient, and famous city, in the depart. of Rhone and Loire, the most considerable in the kingdom, next to Paris, for beauty, commerce, and opulence, and is seated at the confluence of the rivers Rhone and Saone, by the side of two high mountains. It was founded about the year 42 B. C. by the Romans, who made it the centre of the commerce of the Gauls. About the year 145, it was totally destroyed by fire, but was rebuilt by the munificence of Nero. Many antiquities are still observed, that evince its Roman origin. Lyons was the see of an archbishop, and before its recent calamities, contained about 160,000 inhab. upwards of 30,000 of whom were employed in various manufactures, particularly of rich stuffs of the most exquisite workmanship, in silk, gold, silver, &c. The quays were adorned with magnificent structures. The Hotel de Ville vied with that of Amsterdam; and the theatre was not surpassed by any in France. The other principal public buildings are the Hotel de Dieu, the hospital of charity, the exchange, the custom-house, the palace of justice, the public library, and a well supplied arsenal. The town-house, cathedral, and many other buildings, are also magnificent. The bridge, which unites the city with the suburb de la Guillotiere, is 1560 feet long. The houses, in general, are high and well built; it has 6 gates and 4 suburbs, and had, before the revolution, 4 abbeys, 30 convents, 3 public schools, a college of physic, an academy of arts and sciences and belles lettres, a society of agriculture, and a veterinary school. Such was Lyons before the fatal year 1793, when the mischiefs of the revolution were poured upon this devoted city in all their horrors. In June, 1793, the Lyonnese revolted against the national convention, and sustained, with great bravery, an active siege of two months. Gen. Kellerman, who commanded the army of the Alps, was ordered to besiege the city; but not answering to the impatience of the convention, he was removed, and Gen. Doppet appointed to succeed him, to whom the inhab. who were not only unused to arms, but very ill provided with the means of defence, as well as the necessaries of life, were obliged to surrender on the 8th of October following. Considerable losses were sustained by the besiegers, as well as the besieged, in their various actions; a great part of the city was reduced to ashes, by an incessant bombardment; and, when taken, it became a prey to the merciless victors, who satiated their rage by barbarities for which language has no name. The miserable victims, who were too numerous for the individual operation of the guillotine, were driven in great numbers, with the most savage and blasphemous ceremonies, into the Rhone, or hurried in crowds to the squares, to be massacred by the more painful operation of fire-arms and artillery. It is supposed that not less than 70,000 persons, in this unfortunate city alone, were either put to death or forced into exile. It was also decreed by the convention, that the walls and public buildings of Lyons should be destroyed, and the name of the city changed to that of VILLE AFFRANCHIE. In 1794, however, on the destruction of the faction of the Jacobins, the convention decreed, that the city should resume its ancient name, and that measures should be taken to restore its manufactures and commerce. Lyons is a place of very great trade, which is extended not only through France, but to Italy, Switzerland, and Spain; and there are four celebrated fairs every year. It derives vast advantages from the rivers it stands upon; and is 70 m. S by W of Geneva, and 220 SE of Paris.

Their hair is long and curled, at least on the coasts; and there are some likewise of a yellowish complexion, who have neater features than the rest. The island is uneven and hilly, but the face of the country is one of the most agreeable in the world. It is extremely populous; yet they have no cities or towns, but a great number of villages, a small distance from each other. Their houses are huts, with doors so low, that a boy of 12 years old cannot enter them without stooping. They have neither windows nor chimneys, and the roofs are covered with reeds or leaves. Their furniture consists of a few baskets, to put their necessaries in, and they can change their habitations when they please. There are a great many petty kings, whose riches consist in cattle and slaves, and they are often at war with each other. Great quantities of iron and steel are found throughout the island; as also three sorts of gold. The rivers and brooks are rich in various kinds of precious stones. The productions of the island are, the raven, a kind of palm-tree, known only in Madagascar, the top of which is prepared and eaten like the cabbage palm, and of the ribs of its leaves they form the walls of their houses; rice, barley, sugar-canes, white pepper, ginger, cocoa-nuts, grapes, saffron, several kinds of gums, five different kinds of honey, and a variety of plants unknown to Europeans. Buffaloes run in herds, and there are great numbers of sheep, whose mutton is finely tasted, as well as goats, kids, and other kinds of useful quadruped animals; but neither elephants, tygers, lions, nor horses. Large crocodiles, monkeys, wild boars, cameleons, lizards, locusts, insects, birds, and fish, are numerous. The chief employment of the inhabitants is in building, in gold and iron works, making of earthenware, spinning, weaving, cordage, fishing, hunting, and mostly in agriculture. The language has a great affinity to the Arabic, the Arabs having made a conquest of the island about 300 years ago. The French have frequently attempted to settle here, but have always been driven away. Lat. from 12 0 to 25 30 S.

MADAMPAR, a sea-port town of the Isle of Ceylon, on the W. coast.

Madam's Court Hill, in Kent, 19 m. from London, in the road to Sevenoaks. It commands a beautiful prospect of Kent and Sussex.

Madam's Cowel, Kent, a hill near Maidstone.

MADAPASSA, a town of Bengal, 60 m. S of Dacca.

Maddenton, Wilts. 9 m. from Salisbury.

Madderty, Perth, Scotland, 20 m. from Perth.

MADE, a town of Holland, 4 m. W of Gertrudenberg.

MADEIRA, an island of the Atlantic Ocean, principal of a group called the Madeiras, and subject to the Portuguese. The climate is more temperate than in the Canaries, and the soil more fertile, in wine, sugar, fruits, &c. but less so in corn, though considerably better watered with springs and rivers. Spring and autumn reign here together, and produce flowers and fruit throughout the year. It abounds in every kind of tropical and European fruits; as oranges of all sorts and dimensions, lemons of a prodigious size, bananas, citrons, peaches, nectarines, apricots, figs, plums, melons, apples, and strawberries, that grow wild in the mountains with astonishing profusion; grapes, which are as large as our common plums, and remarkable for their peculiar flavour. The oranges are of a sanguine red: this species is produced from the common orange-bud, ingrafted on the pomegranate stock. There is likewise a kind of pear found here, not bigger than a walnut, and very crisp. The sugar-cane also is cultivated with success, though not in any considerable quantity. The cedar tree is found in great abundance: it is extremely beautiful: most of the ceilings and furniture at Madeira are made of that wood, which yields a very fragrant smell. The dragon tree is a native of this island, as are also mastic, and other gums. Flowers nursed in the English greenhouses grow wild here, in the fields; the hedges are mostly formed of myrtles, roses, jessamine, and honey-suckle in everlasting blossom, while the larkspur, the fleur-de-lis, the lupine, &c. spring up spontaneously in the meadows. There are very few reptiles to be seen in the island; the lizard is the most common. Canary birds and goldfinches are found in the mountains; of the former, numbers are sent every year to England. But Madeira is principally celebrated for its excellent wine, which, moreover, keeps best in the hottest climate under the torrid zone. For this reason the inhabitants of the W. India Islands, that can afford it, drink little else; and the Madeira wine that is brought to England, is thought to be worth little, unless it has first been a voyage to the E. or W. Indies. These wines are of different kinds, different both in taste, colour, and strength. The exports of this article, and the profits on it, are immense, and bring a large revenue to the crown of Portugal. In Madeira are made the finest sweetmeats in the world; all kinds of fruits being here candied in most exquisite perfection. Madeira is well watered and peopled; the inhabitants are good-natured, sober, frugal, and indolent. Funchal is the capital. The island is about 150 m. in circumference, and lies in 16 deg. W lon. and 32 deg. N lat.

MADELEY, a town of Shropshire, situated near the iron bridge in Colebrook Dale, 8 m. NNW of Bridgenorth, and 147 NW of London. It has a navigable canal to the Ketley iron works.

Madeley, Staff. SW. of Newcastle-under-Lyne. Madeley Alphore, Staff. near Uttoxeter. Maden House, Linc. MADIA, MAGGIA, or MEYNTHAL, a long and narrow valley of Switzerland, on the confines of the Milanese and the Upper Valais, containing 22 parishes, and about 24,000 inhabitants. It is watered throughout its whole length by a river of the same name, which runs into Lake Major at Locarno, and is the fourth bailiwick of the Swiss in Italy. There is a town of the same name, seated on the river.

MADIAN, a town of Arabia, called by Ptolemy, Modiana, and supposed to be the place where Moses kept his father-in-law's flocks.

Madingley, 3 m. from Cambridge. Madley, SW of Hereford.

Madois, St. Perth, Scotland, 10 m. from Dundee.

MADRAS, or FORT ST. GEORGE, called by the natives CHINA-PATAM, a fort and town of the peninsula of Hindostan, on the coast of Coromandel, built in the reign of Charles II. by order of the English East India Company, under the superintendance of Sir William Langhorne; some writers, however, assert, that it was first settled in 1640, and afterwards enlarged in the reign of Charles II. It is the principal settlement of the English on the E side of the peninsula, and is a fortress of very great extent, including within it a regular well-built city. It is close on the margin of the sea, from which it has a rich and beautiful appearance; the houses being covered with a stucco called chunam, which in itself is nearly as compact as the finest marble, and, as it bears as high a polish, is equally splendid with that elegant material. They consist of long colonnades, with open porticoes, and flat roofs; and they may be considered as elegant, particularly so, from being finished with such a beautiful material as the chunam; and the city contains many handsome and spacious streets. But the inner apartments of the houses are not highly decorated, presenting to the eye only white walls; which, however, from the marble-like appearance of the stucco, give a freshness grateful in so hot a country. Ceilings are very uncommon in the rooms. Indeed it is impossible to find any which will resist the ravages of that destructive insect, the white ant. These animals are chiefly formidable from the immensity of their numbers, which are such as to destroy, in one night's time, a ceiling of any dimensions. It is the wood-work which serves for the basis of the ceilings, such as the laths, beams, &c. that these insects attack. "The approach to Madras, from the sea," says Mr. Hodges, "offers to the eye an appearance similar to what we may conceive of a Grecian city in the age of Alexander. The clear, blue, cloudless sky, the polished, white buildings, the bright sandy beach, and the dark green sea, present a combination totally new to the eye of an Englishman, just arrived from London, who, accustomed to the sight of rolling masses of clouds floating in a damp atmosphere, cannot but contemplate the difference with delight; and the eye being thus gratified, the mind assumes a gay and tranquil habit, analogous to the pleasing objects with which it is surrounded. Some time before the ship arrives at her anchoring ground, she is hailed by the boats of the country, filled with people of business, who come in crowds on board. This is the moment in which a European feels the great distinction between Asia and his own country. The rustling of fine linen, and the general hum of unusual conversation, present to his mind, for a moment, the idea of an assembly of females. When he ascends upon the deck, he is struck with the long muslin dresses, and black faces adorned with very large gold ear rings and white turbans. The first salutation he receives from these strangers is, by bending their bodies very low, touching the deck with the back of the hand, and the forehand three times. The natives first seen in India by a European voyager, are Hindoos, the original inhabitants of the peninsula. In this part of India they are delicately framed; their hands, in particular, are more like those of tender females; and do not appear to be, what is considered a proper proportion to the rest of the person, which is usually above the middle size. Correspondent to this delicacy of appearance are their manners; mild, tranquil, and sedulously attentive; in this last respect they are indeed remarkable, as they never interrupt any person who is speaking, but wait patiently till he has concluded; and then answer with the most perfect respect and composure. From the ship a stranger is conveyed on shore in a boat of the country, called a Massolah boat; a work of curious construction, and well calculated to elude the violent shocks of the surf, that breaks here with great violence: they are formed without a keel, flat-bottomed, with the sides raised high, and sewed together with the fibres of the cocoa-nut tree, and caulked with the same material: they are remarkably light, and are managed with great dexterity by the natives; they are usually attended by two katamarans (rafts), paddled by one man each, the intention of which is, that should the boat be overset by the violence of the surf, the persons in it may be preserved. The boat is driven, as the sailors say, high and dry; and the passengers are landed on a fine sandy beach, and immediately enter the fort of Madras. The appearance of the natives is exceedingly varied; some are wholly naked, and others so clothed, that nothing but the face and neck are to be discovered: beside this, the European is struck with many other objects, such as women carried on men's shoulders on palanquins, and men riding on horseback, clothed in linen dresses like women; which, with the very different face of the country from all he had ever seen, or conceived, excite the strongest emotions of surprise." There is a second city, called the Black Town, nearly four miles in circuit, separated from Madras by the breadth of a proper esplanade only. Madras, in common with all the European settlements on this coast, has no port for shipping; the coast forming nearly a straight line; and it is incommoded also with a high and dangerous surf. The citadel here, which was planned by Mr. Robins, and is situated in the middle of the White, or English Town, is one of the best fortresses in possession of the British nation. The town is also encompassed with a strong wall, of the same stone with which the citadel is built, defended by batteries, bastions, half-moons, and flankers; the whole mounted with upwards of 200 pieces of cannon and mortars. Opposite the west gate of the citadel are barracks, and a convenient hospital for the company's soldiers, and at the other end of the barracks is a mint, where the company coin gold and silver. Madras was taken by the French in 1746, but restored by the treaty of Aix la Chapelle. Lat. 13 5 N lon. 80 25 E.

MADRE DE DIOS, an island in the S. Pacific Ocean, near the coast of Patagonia, 60 leagues in circumf. Lat. 51 S lon. 77 W.

MADRE DE POPA, a town and celebrated convent of S. America, in Terra Firma, seated on the river Grande, 50 m. E of Carthagena. It is almost as much resorted to by pilgrims of America, as the Santa Casa, or Holy House of Loretto, is in Europe; and they pretend that the image of Mary, the mother of Jesus, has done a great many miracles in favour of the fleets and seafaring people.

Madresfield, Worcester. N of Malvern Chace.

MADRID, a city, the capital of Spain, in New Castile, situated on the Manzanares, the banks of which, in the environs, afford an agreeable shade, coolness, and verdure. It was formerly an obscure place, belonging to the archbishop of Toledo, but the purity of the air engaged Charles V. and his successors, to chuse it for their residence. It is seated in a large plain, surrounded by high mountains, but has no wall, rampart, or ditch. The houses are all built with brick, and the streets are long, broad, and straight, and adorned at proper distances with handsome fountains. There are above 100 towers, or steeples, in different places, which contribute greatly to the embellishment of the city. The royal palace is built on an eminence, at the extremity of the city. The finest square in Madrid is the Placa Mayor, which is spacious and regular, surrounded with 136 houses, five stories high, and of an equal height. Every stage is adorned with a handsome balcony, and the fronts are supported by columns, forming a piazza round the square. Here the market is held, and here they had their famous bull-fights. However, it is observable, that the very finest houses have no glass windows, they being only lattices. The Prado, which is the public airing place, is shaded with regular rows of poplar trees, and is watered with 23 fountains. Here the stately Spaniards make the most brilliant display of their finery. Philip II. built a large and magnificent bridge over the river, which river being exceedingly small, has occasioned a great many jokes. The city of Madrid contains 15 gates, 18 parishes, 35 convents of monks, and 31 of nuns, 39 colleges, hospitals, or houses of charity, 7398 dwelling houses, and about 160,000 inhab. There are four academies in Madrid: the Academy of Belles Lettres; the Academy of Spanish Historical Monuments; the Academy of the Fine Arts, painting, sculpture, and architecture; and the Academy of Medicine; which last is held in no great esteem. Lat. 40 25 N lon. 3 30 W.

MADRID NEW, a town of N. America, in Louisiana, intended as the capital of a new settlement. It is likely to become the great emporium of the western country, as the immense quantities of produce that will be borne down the Illinois, the Mississippi, the Ohio, and their various branches will naturally centre here. It is situated on the western side of the river Mississippi, 1040 m. from the mouth, and opposite the mouth of the river Ohio. Lat. 30 36 N lon. 89 50 W.

MADRIDEJOS, a town of Spain, in Old Castile, 30 m. S of Toledo.

MADRIGAL, two towns in Old Castile; the latter is 30 m. S of Valladolid.

MADRIGAL, a town of Popayan.

MADROGAM, or BANANATAPA, a large town of Africa, capital of Monomotapa, with a spacious palace, where the king resides. The upper part of the houses are in the shape of bells. Lat. 18 0 S lon. 31 40 E.

MADRON, Cornw. 5 m. from Penzance.

MADURA, a town of Hindostan, capital of a province of the same name, about 60 m. in length, and 50 in breadth. It is fortified with square towers and parapets, well furnished with cannon, and is situated on the coast of Coromandel, 80 m. SSW of Tanjore.

MADURA, an island in the Eastern Indian Ocean, about 75 m. in length, and from 9 to 15 in breadth. Two provinces are under the Dutch; the third is governed by a native king. It is exceedingly fertile in rice, for which article it is one of the granaries of India. Madura, the capital, is situated on the S. coast, in lat. 7 5 S lon. 112 49 E.

MADZAR, a town of Russia, in the province of Caucasus.

MAELER, a beautiful lake of Sweden, situated between the provinces of Westmanland, and Sudermanland, communicating with Stockholm, said to contain 120 islands, great and small. Its length is about 80 m. from E to W; the breadth is various.

MAELLA, a small town of Arragon.

MAELSTRAND. See MARSTRAND.

MAELSTROM, a very extraordinary and dangerous whirlpool, on the coast of Norway, in lat. 68 deg. N. Of the situation of this whirlpool we have the following account from Jonas Ramus: "The mountain of Helfeggen, in Lofoden, lies a league from the island Ver, and betwixt these two runs that large and dreadful stream called Moskoestrom, from the island Moskoe, which is in the middle of it, together with several circumjacent isles, as Ambaaren, half a quarter of a league northward, Iflesen, Hoeholm, Kieldholm, Suarven, and Buckholm. Moskoe lies about half a quarter of a m. S of the Island of Ver, and betwixt them, these small islands, Otterholm, Flimem, Sandflesen, and Stockholm. Betwixt Lofoden and Moskoe, the depth of the water is between 36 and 40 fathoms; but on the other side, toward Ver, the depth decreases so as not to afford a convenient passage for a vessel, without the risk of splitting on the rocks; which happens even in the calmest weather. When it is flood, the stream runs up the country beween Lofoden and Moskoe with a boisterous rapidity; but the roar of its impetuous ebb to the sea is scarce equalled by the loudest and most dreadful cataracts, the noise being heard several leagues off; and the vortices or pits are of such extent, and depth, that if a ship comes within its attraction, it is inevitably absorbed and carried down to the bottom, and there beat to pieces against the rocks; and when the water relaxes, the fragments thereof are thrown up again. But these intervals of tranquillity are only at the turn of the ebb and flood, and calm weather, and last but a quarter of an hour, its violence gradually returning. When the stream is most boisterous, and its fury heightened by a storm, it is dangerous to come within a Norway mile of it; boats, ships, and yachts having been carried away, by not guarding against it before they were within its reach. Large stocks of firs and pinetrees, after being absorbed by the current, rise again, broken and torn to such a degree as if bristles grew on them. This plainly shows the bottom to consist of craggy rocks, among which they are whirled to and fro. This stream is regulated by the flux and reflux of the sea; it being constantly high and low water every 6 hours. In the year 1645, early in the morning of Sexagesima Sunday, it raged with so much noise and impetuosity, that on the island of Moskoe, the very stones of the houses fell to the ground."

Maenclochog, Pembrokes. S Wales. Maer, Stafford, 6 m. from Newcastle.

MAESE, or MEUSE, a large river which rises in France, near the village of Meuse, in the depart. of Upper Marne. It waters Verdun, Sedan, &c. and entering the Netherlands at Givet, it flows to Charlemont, Namur, Liege, Maestricht, Venlo, Grave, Battenburg, and Voorn, where it is joined by the Waal. At Dort, it receives the Merwe, and enters the German Ocean by several channels, through the islands of Holland and Zealand.

MAESLAND SLUYS, a town in S. Holland, the inhabitants of which are principally engaged in the herring and whale fisheries. It is situated on a canal which forms a communication between Delft and the Maese 9 m. S of Delft, and 15 W of Rotterdam.

MAESTRICHT, a large ancient town of the Netherlands, formerly belonging to the duchy of Lorrain. It is now united to the duchy of Brabant, although insulated in the bishopric of Liege. The town-house and other public buildings are handsome, and the place is so well defended by detached bastions, hornworks, intrenchments, numerous redoubts, ravelins, a good covered way, &c. that it is justly reckoned one of the strongest fortresses in Europe. Near it are large stone quarries, in which are subterraneous passages of great extent. It is seated on the river Maese, which separates it from Wyck, and with which it communicates by a handsome bridge, 15 m. N of Liege, and 46 E of Brussels.

MAESTRO, a town of Italy, 8 m. NW of Venice.

MAESYEK, a town of Liege, situated on the Meuse, 30 miles NNE of Liege.

MAFFRA, a town of Portugal, 5 m. NW of Lisbon, famous for a convent of extraordinary magnificence, founded, in pursuance of a vow, by king John V. on the spot where formerly stood the poorest friery in the kingdom. This, on enquiry, was found to be at Maffra, where 12 Franciscans lived together in a poor hut. The draught of this building was procured from Rome.

MAGADINO, a town of Italy, on the Lake Locarno, 5 m. S of Belinzona.

MAGADOXA, or MOLDOSCHO, the capital of a kingdom of the same name, in Africa, on the coast of the Indian Sea; seated near the mouth of a river of the same name, with a good harbour. The country of Magadoxa extends from the river Juboo, near the equator, to beyond the fifth degree of N lat. how far it extends to the westward is but little known. The inhabitants are mostly Mahometans, who came and settled here in the time of the caliphs. Mixed with them are the Bedwin Arabs, who still follow their old pagan superstitions, and a still greater number of Abyssinian Christians. All speak the Arabic tongue. The inhabitants are warlike, and use poisoned arrows and lances. The city of Magadoxa is a place of great commerce, foreign merchants from Aden, and other parts, exchanging cotton, silk, cloth, spices, drugs, &c. for gold, ivory, wax, and other commodities. Lat. 2 30 N, lon. 44 0 E.

MAGALAS, a town of France, in depart. of Herault, 7 m. N of Beziere.

Magdalen, Hants, N of Winchester. Magdalen Chapel, Cornw. N of Penryn. Magdalen Hill, Hants, near Wilton. Magdalen's St. Somerset, near Bristol.

MAGDALENE'S CAVE, a cave in Carinthia, 10 m. E of Gortz. It appears like a chasm in a rock, and at the entrance, torches are lighted to conduct travellers. It is divided into several apartments, with a vast number of pillars formed by nature, which give it a beautiful appearance, they being as white as snow, and almost transparent. The bottom is of the same substance, insomuch that a person may fancy himself to be walking among the ruins of an enchanted castle, surrounded by magnificent pillars, some entire, and others broken.

MAGDALEN ISLANDS, in the gulf of St. Lawrence. The largest, which gives name to the rest, is situated in lat. 47 25 N and lon. 61 20 W.

MAGDEBURG, a large, well built and trading town of Lower Saxony, capital of a duchy of the same name. Among the public buildings are the king's palace, anciently the residence of the bishops; the armory, the governor's house, and the guildhall, where the regency and consistory are held. In the cathedral is a superb mausoleum of Otho the Great. The cathedral square is ornamented with large elegant houses, and its area is well paved. Here are different manufactories of cotton and linen goods, stockings, hats, beautiful leather gloves, tobacco, and snuff; but the principal are those of woollen and silk. It is happily situated for trade, having an easy communication with Hamburgh by the Elbe, and lying on the road between Upper and Lower Germany. It was taken by storm, in 1631, by the imperial general Tilly, who burnt the town and massacred the inhabitants, of whom only 800 escaped out of 40,000; and many young women plunged into the Elbe to escape violation. It is strongly fortified, having, among other works, a citadel seated on an island in the river Elbe, and is 52 m. WSW of Potsdam. Lat. 52 11 N, lon. 11 45 E.

MAGDEBURG, a duchy in Lower Saxony, about 60 m. in length, and 30 in breadth, subject to the king of Prussia. In 1703, it contained 35 towns and 431 villages. The States consist of the prelates, the nobility, and the cities. It produces fine cattle, and a considerable quantity of corn; those parts, which are not marshy and overgrown with wood, being very fertile. The country affords several mines of pit-coal; and the salt springs are so rich, that they are able to supply all Germany with that commodity.

MAGDELAINE, a small island near the southern extremity of the island of Corsica.

MAGDELANA, a large river of S. America, which rises under the equator, and running N through Terra-Firma, unites with the Cance, is then called Rio Grande, and falls into the Atlantic Ocean, below Madre de Popa, 20 leagues W of St. Martha.

MAGEE, an island on the coast of Antrim, Ulster, 6 m. long and 2 broad, situated N of Carrickfergus Bay.

MAGELHOLM, a small island of Denmark on the S coast of the island of Laland.

MAGELLAN, a famous strait of South America, discovered in 1520 by Ferdinando Magellan, a Portuguese, in the service of Spain. It has many safe harbours in it, with narrow entrances, and vast large bays sheltered so closely on all sides by high mountains, that ships may ride safely in them without the least anchor. The Spaniards call the country to the N of the strait, Tierra Magellanica, and reckon it a part of Chili. They had a fort and garrison upon this strait, but the men all perished through cold and want of provisions.

Magestan, Dorsets. near Gillingham.

MAGGEROE, a large island near the coast of Norway. Lat. 71 N.

MAGGIA. See MADIA.

MAGGIORE, or LOCARNO, a lake in Italy, about 46 m. long and 6 or 8 broad, lying between the Swiss bailiwicks and the Milanese. The lake abounds with trout, perch, and other fish, and the water is clear, but greenish.

Magharee, or Seven Hogs, a cluster of small islands on the W coast of Ireland, at the S side of the entrance into Tralee Bay.

MAGHARIES BAY, in Kerry, Munster, between Brandon-Head and the Magharies Islands. It is a dangerous place for mariners, being full of sunken rocks, and exposed to frequent squalls from the mountains.

Maghen, Monmouthshire, W of Newport.

Maghera, in Derry, Ulster, 92 m. from Dublin. Maghera, in Down, Ulster. Magheracreegan, in Tyrone, Ulster. Magherafelt, in Londonderry, Ulster, with a considerable linen manufacture; 30 m. SE of Londonderry. Magheralin, in Armagh, Ulster, pleasantly situated on the river Lagan; there are several bleach-yards and manufactories about it. Magheredroll, i. e. The Field of Difficulties; a name given to the country about Ballinahinch, in Down, Ulster, on account of its being full of rocks and mountains.

Magherebeg, in Kerry, Munster. Magherelin, or Maralin, in Down, Ulster. The linen manufacture is carried on extensively here. Magherevoly, in Fermanagh, Ulster. Maghrery, in Armagh, Ulster. Maghemore, in Donegal, Ulster; also a bay on the coast of Wicklow, Munster, 5 m. S of Wicklow Head. Magilla, in Cork, Munster. Magilligan Point, a cape in Derry, Ulster.

MAGLIANO, a town of Sabina, in Italy, 28 m. N of Rome.

MAGNANO, a village of the Veronese, 6 m. S of Verona, noted for a battle of the French and Austrians in 1799, in which the former were defeated with great loss.

MAGNAVACCA, a fort in the Ferrarese, situated on a canal which runs from the Adriatic to Comachio.

MAGNICOURT, a town of France in depart. of Straits of Calais, 6 m. SE of St. Pol.

MAGNISA, anciently MAGNESIA, a town of Natolia, once the seat of the Ottoman empire, and still large, populous, and rich. It is seated on the Sarabat, 60 m. N of Smyrna. Lat. 38 50 N lon. 27 25 E.

MAGNY, a town in the depart. of Seine and Oise, 12 m. N of Mantes; and a town in the depart. of Nievre, 8 m. S of Nevers.

Magor, Monmouths. SW of Caldicot.

MAGRA, or MAGORA, a river of Italy, which rises in the Apennine Mountains, on the borders of Modena, Tuscany and Genoa, and passing through the valley of Magra falls into the Mediterranean, 5 m. S of Sarzana, in the territory of Genoa.

MAGUELONE, a lake in the depart. of Herault, near a town of the same name, seated on the coast of the Mediterranean.

Maguire's Bridge, in Fermanagh, Ulster. Maguriby, in Kerry, Munster.

Mahallagh, in Cork, Munster, on the Lee, 5 m. E of Macroomp.

MAHANADA, a river of Hindostan, which rises in Berar, crosses the country of Orissa, and falls, by several mouths, into the Bay of Bengal, 40 m. ESE of Cattack.

Mahon, a river in Waterford, Munster, which runs into the sea, 11 m. E of Dungarvan.

MAHRATTAS, the name of two large states of India, which derive their name from Marhat, an ancient province of the Deccan. They are called the Poonah, or Western Mahrattas; and the Berar, or Eastern. Collectively, they occupy all the southern part of Hindostan Proper, with a large proportion of the Deccan. Malwa, Candeish, Visiapour, and part of Orissa; the principal parts of Berar, Guzerat, and Agimere; and a small part of Dowlatabad, Agra, and Allahabad, are comprised within their extensive empire, which extends nearly from sea to sea, across the widest part of the peninsula; and from the confines of Agra northward to the river Kistna southward; forming a tract of about 1000 m. long and 700 broad. The western state, the capital of which is Poonah, is divided among a number of chiefs, or princes, whose obedience to the paishwah, or head, like that of the German princes to the emperor, is merely nominal at any time; and, in some cases, an opposition of interests begets wars, not only between the members of the empire themselves, but also between the members and the head. Nagpour is the capital of the eastern Mahrattas. Both these states, with the Nizam of the Deccan, were in alliance with the English East India Company, in the late war against Tippoo Sultan, from whose territories, on the termination of the war, they gained some considerable acquisitions.

Maiden Bower, Bedfords. a very large Danish camp of a circular form, surrounded with a great rampart and ditch; near Dunstable.

Maiden Bradley, Wilts, 5 m. from Frome and Warminster. Maiden Castle, Dors. a Roman encampment in the parish of Winterborn, St. Martin, the largest and most complete of any in the W of England, and the summer station of the Durotriges garrison. It consists of a treble ditch and rampart, the inner ones very deep and high. The form is oval, with two entrances, the one on the E, the other on the W. The ends of the ramparts lap over each other, so as to make the entrances winding and intricate. The whole area is 30 acres, and including all the ramparts and ditches, makes 125 acres. Near the S entrance is the mouth of a cave, formed by art, the W division of which could contain 1800 men; its use is unknown. Maiden Cross, Herts. near Hitchin.

MAIDENHEAD, anciently SOUTH EALINGTON, a town in Berks. seated on the river Thames, on the great western road, carrying on a great trade in malt, meal, and timber, in their barges to London. It is 12 m. E by N of Reading, and 26 W of London. Market on Wedn.

Maiden-Heath, Lancaster, near Blackburn.

MAIDEN NEWTON, a town of Dorsets. 3 m. NW of Frampton. No Market.

Maiden Oak, Sussex, near the road from Petersfield to London.

Maidens, or Whillans, rocks so called between the mouths of Larne and Glenarm Bays, in Down, Ulster.

Maiden-Way, extends from Maiden Castle, on Stainmore, Yorks. N. Riding, by Kirby Thore, in Westmoreland, and Whitley, to Caer Voran in Northumberland, passing by a chain of stations of the Romans. It is near six yards wide; the sides are formed by lines of very large pebbles, and where the road lies down steep descents, the pavement is formed of flat, thin stones, placed on their edges, and laid transversely.

Maidford, Northamp. NW of Towcester. Maidhurst, Sussex, NW of Arundel. Maidsmorton, N of Buckingham.

MAIDSTONE, a considerable borough of Kent; which contains above 8000 inhab. It is seated on the river Medway, a branch of which runs through the town, 9 m. S of Rochester, 20 W of Canterbury, and 35 SE by E of London. It is a large place, consisting of 4 principal streets, which intersect each other, at the market cross, with a jail and county-hall. In the ancient Britons' time, it was reckoned their third chief city, having been a station of the Romans. By means of the Medway, it enjoys a brisk trade in exporting timber, flour, apples, nuts, and other commodities of the county, particularly hops, of which there are numerous plantations around it, as well as orchards of cherries. Here are likewise some capital paper-mills, and a manufactory of linen thread, originally introduced by the Flemings. The church is a large and handsome structure; and it has a neat theatre. The jail in East Lane is a spacious stone building; and here are extensive barracks for horse and foot. The tide flows up to the town, and brings up barges of 50 or 60 tons. Market on Thurs. and on the second Tues. in every month.

Maidwell, Linc. near Burwell. Maidwell, Northamptons. near Harborough. Maies, Sussex, near Selmston.

MAILLEBOIS, a town of France, in the depart. of Seine and Oise, 10 m. SW of Dreux.

MAILLEZAIS, a town in the depart. of Vendee, 6 m. S of Fontenay.

Mailly, a town of France, in the depart. of the Aube, 9 m. N of Arcis, another in the depart. of the Somme, 15 m. SE of Doulins.

Maimbead, Devonshire, W of Exmouth.

MAIN, a province of N. America, which belongs to the State of Massachussets. It is about 180 m. in length, and 110 in breadth, and is bounded on the N and NW by Canada; on the NE by New Brunswick; on the SE by the Atlantic Ocean; and on the W by Vermont and New Hampshire. It is divided into three counties; Lincoln, which is the easternmost, Cumberland, and York. Portland is the county town of Cumberland, and capital of the whole territory. The heat in summer is intense, and the cold in winter equally extreme: all the fresh water lakes, ponds, and rivers are usually passable on ice for near three months in the winter. The climate is very healthful; many of the inhabitants living 90 years; their present number is about 100,000.

MAINA, a country in the Morea, lying between two chains of mountains, which advance into the sea. The inhabitants were never yet subdued by the Turks. They maintain their independence in the fastnesses of their mountains, and traffic in slaves, which they take indifferently from the Turks and the Christians. They have a harbour and a town of the same name, 30 m. SW of Misitra.

Main Broad, Dorsets. 3 m. N of Owen-Main.

MAINE, a river of Germany, which rises in the marquisate of Cumbach, on the confines of Bohemia, and running westward, falls into the Rhine, a little above Mentz. It runs by Bamberg, Wirtzberg, Aschaffenburg, Hanau, and Francfort.

MAINE, a ci-devant division of France, now principally forming the departments of the Mayenne and Sarte.

MAINEVILLE, a town of France, in depart. of the Eure.

MAINLAND, ORKNEY, or POMONA, the principal of the Orkney Islands, is 24 m. long, and 9 broad. The general appearance of the country is not very different from the Mainland of Shetland. The soil, however, is more fertile, and in some parts, better cultivated. Kirkwall is the capital. See ORCADES.

MAINLAND, the principal of the Shetland isles, is 60 m. long from N to S, its breadth, which varies greatly, seldom exceeds 6 m. The face of the country exhibits a prospect of black, craggy mountains, and marshy plains, interspersed with some verdant spots, which appear smooth and fertile. Neither tree nor shrub is to be seen, except the juniper and the heath. The mountains abound with various kinds of game. Lofty cliffs, impending over the ocean, are the haunts of eagles, falcons, and ravens. The deep caverns underneath shelter seals and otters; and to the winding bays resort the swans, geese, scarfs, and other aquatic birds. The seas abound with fish, such as the cod, turbot, and haddock; but, particularly, at certain seasons, with shoals of herrings of incredible extent; and they are visited at the same time, by whales and other voracious fishes. Lobsters, oysters, muscles, &c. are also plentiful. The hills are covered with sheep of a small breed, and of a shaggy appearance; but their fleece is commonly very soft, and often extremely fine. From their wool, stockings of such a fine texture have been made, that, although of a large size, a pair was capable of passing through a common gold ring. Their horses are of a diminutive size, but remarkably strong and handsome, and are well known by the name of Shelties, from the name of the country. Many rivulets, and considerable lakes, abound with salmon, trout, &c. A mine of copper, and another of iron, have lately been opened near the S extremity of this island. They are in the hands of the Anglesey Company, and are said to be extremely productive. There is an inexhaustible store of peat, but no coal. Lerwick is the capital.

Mainlaw, Northumberl. in the barony of Wark. Main Little, or Frier, Dorsets. Mains, Lancaster, in Amounderness. Mains, Forfar, 6 m. from Dundee.

MAINTENON, a town in the depart. of Eure and Loire, seated on the river Eure, 9 m. N of Chartres.

MAINUNGEN, a town of Henneburg, Franconia.

MAJORCA, an island belonging to Spain, in the Mediterranean Sea, between Ivica and Minorca, the largest of those anciently called Baleares, about 50 m. in length, and 35 in breadth. It is mountainous in the N and W parts, but fertile, producing corn, oil, honey, saffron, cattle, fish, rabbits, partridges, deer, wild fowl, horses, &c. The whole island is encompassed with watch-towers. It is temperate and wholesome, but the excessive heat frequently occasions a scarcity. It has no considerable rivers, though there are a great many fine fountains and wells, and several good harbours. The inhab. are robust, lively, and good sailors. The capital

MAJORCA, anciently PALMA, is a large and rich town, situated in a bay on the SW. coast of the island, with a good harbour. It has large and broad streets, spacious squares, stately stone houses, built in the antique manner, a large and magnificent cathedral, and 22 churches, besides chapels and oratories. The inhab. are computed at 10,000. The university is more ancient than celebrated. Lat. 39 34 N lon. 2 25 E.

MAIRE, LE, a strait of S. America, lying between Staten Land and Terra del Fuego, so called from the navigator, who discovered it, in 1616. Lat. 55 0 S.

Maismore, near Gloucester. Maize Hill, Kent, in East Greenwich.

MAIXENT, ST. a town in the depart. of the Two Sevres, trading in corn, stockings, and woollen stuffs, 26 m. SW of Poictiers; and a town in the depart. of the Sarte, seated on the Seure.

Makely, Derbys. E of Uttoxeter. Makeney, N of Derby. Maker, Devons. above Hamoaze, on a hill between Mount Edgecomb and Ram Head. The church tower is a sea-mark. Makestock Castle, Warwicks. E of Coleshill.

MAKRAN. See MACKERAN.

MALABAR, the name of the western coast of the peninsula of Hindostan, extending from Cape Comorin to about 100 m. S of Goa.

MALACCA, called by the ancients the GOLDEN CHERSONESUS, a large peninsula in Asia, bounded on the N by Siam; and on all other sides by the ocean; about 500 m. in length, and from 60 to 150 in breadth. It produces few commodities for trade, except tin and elephants' teeth; but there are a great many excellent fruits and roots, which yield good refreshment for strangers that call here. The pine-apple is the best in the world, and the manjostain is a delicious fruit, in the shape of an apple, whose skin is thick and red. The rambostan is of the size of a walnut, with a very agreeable pulp; and the durian, though it has not a pleasant smell, yet has a very delitious taste. They have plenty of cocoa-nuts, whose shells will hold an English quart; beside lemons, oranges, limes, sugar-canes, and mangoes. There is but little corn, and sheep and bullocks are scarce; but pork, poultry, and fish are pretty plentiful. The religion of the natives is a mixture of Mahometanism. Their language is peculiarly soft, and is as common in the Indies as the French is in Europe, being very easily acquired, because it has no inflections either in nouns or verbs. The interior inhab. who are, for the most part, savages, have abandoned themselves, with desperation, to the most ferocious habits, taking delight in doing mischief to their neighbours. The Dutch have been masters of the town of Malacca, situated on the SW. coast, since 1640, when they took it from the Portuguese, after a six months' siege. While in possession of the latter, it was famous all over India and Europe, being, after Goa and Ormuz, by far the richest city in the Indies, and a great market for all the different commodities produced in Japan, China, Formosa, Tonquin, Cochin China, Giam, Lucon, Amboyna, &c. During the present war, it has been attacked and taken by the English, and is now in their possession. Lat. 2 11 N lon. 101 11 E.

MALACCA, STRAIT OF, the narrow sea between the Island of Sumatra, and the SW. coast of Malacca.

Maladar, Cornwall, N of Grampound.

MALAGA, a considerable sea-port of Granada, with a good harbour, built by the Phenicians, who called it Malacha, several centuries before Christ. Strabo speaks of it as a Carthaginian colony, very commercial, and famous for its salted provisions. The inhab. export to the amount of two millions and a half of piastres in wines, brandy, fruits, shumach, pickled anchovies, oil, &c. and only import to about one million and a half; Malaga, however, has little navigation of its own, the ships which arrive there being chiefly English. It is seated on the Mediterranean, 15 m. S of Cordova, and 235 S of Madrid. Lat. 36 44 N lon. 4 25 W.

MALAHIDE, a town and bay of Dublin, 6 m. from the metropolis. A cotton manufacture is established here, the works of which are carried on by the water.

MALAMOCO, a small island and sea-port of Italy, in the Lagunes of Venice, 5 m. S of that city.

MALANGER, a town of Norway, on the N extremity of Drontheim.

MALATIAH, a town of Aladulla, in Turkey in Asia, the residence of a Nestorian bishop. It is situated on the W side of the Euphrates, 90 m. WNW of Diarbekir.

Malbay, a considerable bay on the coast of Clare, in Ulster, extending from Hog's Head, to Ballard's Point. Malborough, Devons. on the coast, between Salcomb and Hope Key. Malbrook, Devons. 4 m. from Biddeford. Malchanger, SE of Kingsclere.

MALCHIN, a town of Mecklenburg, Lower Saxony, situated on the Cummer Lake, where it receives the river Peene, 20 m. E of Gustrow.

Malchraay, a river in Radnors. which runs into the Wye, near Lanstevan. Malden, Kent, in Sheppey Isle. Malden, Surry, 5 m. from Kingston.

MALDEN, anciently CAMELODUNUM, a populous borough town of Essex, situated near the confluence of the river Blackwater, called also Malden Water, and the Chelmer, 10 m. E of Chelmsford, and 37 NE of London; the first Roman colony in Britain, and the seat of some of the old British kings. Vessels of 400 tons' burden come up to the haven to unload; the colliers, however, lie in deep water below the town, and the coals are fetched up in lighters. Malden carries on a considerable trade in corn, coals, iron, wine, brandy, rum, deals, and chalk rubbish. The custom of Borough English is kept up here. It contains 400 houses. Market on Sat.

Malden Jenkins, Essex, 2 m. from Malden.

MALDIVE ISLANDS, a cluster of Islands said to be 1000 in number, SW of Cape Comorin, in the Indian Sea. The northernmost is in lat. 7 6 N lon. 73 4 E. The principal of them called MALE, situated in the centre, about a league and a half in circumf. is the most fertile, and the residence of the prince. These islands are mostly small and uninhabited. The inhab. are a mixture of Arabs and Indians of Malabar. They supply vessels with sails and cordage, cocoa-nuts, oil, honey, dry fish, and especially cowries.

MALESHERBES, a town in the depart. of the Loiret, 13 m. SE of Estampes.

MALIO, or St. Angelo, a cape of the Morea, 50 m. SE of Misitra.

MALKWITZ, a town of Silesia, 9 m. SW of Breslaw.

Mallerstang Forest, Westmoreland.

MALLICOLLO, an island, one of the largest of the New Hebrides, in the S. Sea, about 18 leagues long, and from 5 to 7 wide. Its inland mountains are moderately high, and clad with forests. The soil is a rich and fertile mould; in general, however, inferior to that of the Friendly Islands. Its vegetable productions are luxuriant, and in great variety; cocoa-nuts, bread-fruit, bananas, sugar-canes, yams, eddoes, turmeric, and oranges. Hogs, and common poultry, are their domestic animals. They had no dogs, for which reason, Captain Cook, who visited the island in 1774, left them a dog and a bitch. The inhabitants, in their form, language, and manners, are widely different from those of the Friendly and Society

Islands. They correspond in many particulars with the natives of New Guinea and Papua, particularly in their black colour and woolly hair. Both men and women are very dark coloured, ill-proportioned, and ugly, with long heads, flat faces, and monkey countenances; and the latter paint their heads, faces, and shoulders red. They are of a slender make, and tie a rope so fast round their belly, that the shape of their bodies resembles that of an overgrown pismire. The climate of Mallicollo is very warm, and the inhabitants feel little inconvenience in going almost naked, either from heat or cold. Their keeping their bodies entirely free from punctures, is one particular that remarkably distinguishes them from the other tribes of the S. Sea. Lat. 16 15 S lon. 167 45 E.

MALLING, EAST, 1 m. from Town Malling, and 3 from Maidstone.

MALLING, WEST, or TOWN MALLING, a town of Kent, seated near Compherst Wood, on a brook, that runs into the Medway, 6 m. W of Maidstone, and 30 E by S of London. This parish was anciently taxed to contribute towards the repair of the third arch, or pier, of Rochester bridge. The church is a handsome old building. Market on Sat.

Mallocks, or Mattocks, Herts, on the river Ash, near Hunsdon.

MALLOT, a town of France, 3 m. SSW of Caen.

MALLOW, a considerable town of Cork, in Munster. Here is a fine spring, of moderately tepid water, resembling in its qualities the hotwell waters of Bristol. It is seated on the river Blackwater, 14 m. N of Cork.

MALLWYD, Merioneths. Wales, 1 m. from Dinas Mowddu.

MALMEDY, a town of Liege, which, however, in spiritualities, is under the Archbishop of Cologne. The principal trade is making of cloth and dressing leather.

Malmeton, Lincolns. N of Kirton, in Lindsey.

MALMO, a sea-port of Schonen, seated on the Sound, 9 m. SW of Lund.

MALMSBURY, originally MAIDULPHSBURG, and, by corruption, Malmsbury; in an ancient manuscript, however, called Adhelmsbirig, an ancient borough town in Wiltshire, pleasantly situated on the river Avon, which almost surrounds it, and over which it has 6 bridges, 26 m. E by N of Bristol, and 95 W of London. It derives a considerable trade from the woollen manufacture. It was long famous for its abbey, which flourished in great wealth, exceeding all in the county in bigness, revenues, and honour. Its abbot was mitred, and sat in parliament. The memory of Adhelm, its first abbot, the favourite of the great Saxon King Athelstan, and whom he procured to be canonized after his death, is still kept up by a meadow near this town, called Adhelm's Mead. King Athelstan amply endowed the abbey, granted the town large immunities, and chose it for his burying-place: he was buried accordingly under the high altar of the church, and his monument still remains in the nave of it. Market on Sat

MALO, ST. a sea-port in the depart. of Ille and Vilaine, on a small island, united to the main land by a narrow mole or causeway, 6 or 700 yards in length; 206 m. NW of Paris. Lat. 48 39 N. lon. 1 57 W. It has a large well-frequented harbour, but difficult of access, on account of the rocks that surround it; and is a rich trading place, strong by nature and art towards the sea, and defended by a citadel.

MALORA, a town of Genoa.

MALPARTIDA, a town of Spanish Estremadura, 14 m. SSW of Placentia.

MALPAS, a town of Cheshire, seated on a high eminence, near the river Dee, 15 m. SE of Chester, and 166 NW of London, called in Latin Mala Platea, and by the Normans, Mal Pas, according to Camden, from its narrow, steep, intricate way. It contains three streets, an hospital, and a grammar-school, and the benefice is rich enough to support two rectors, who officiate alternately. Market on Mond.

Malperton, Dorsets. near Charborough.

MALPLAQUET, a village of the Austrian Hainault, 8 m. SE of Mons, famous for a dearly-purchased victory, gained Sept. 11, 1709, by the allies under the Duke of Marlborough and Prince Eugene, over the French, commanded by the Marshals Villars and Boufflers. The confederates took 40 colours and standards, 16 pieces of artillery, and a great number of prisoners.

MALTA, an island of the Mediterranean, between Africa and Sicily, 20 m. in length, and 12 in its greatest breadth. It was anciently little else than a barren rock; but such quantities of soil have been brought from Africa and Sicily, that it is now become fertile. It has excellent vines, lemons, fruits, cotton, plenty of honey, good pastures, considerable fisheries, sea salt, and a profitable coral fishery. However, they sow but little corn, because they can purchase it cheap in Sicily, and the island is deficient in wood. The number of inhab. is variously estimated at from 60 to 90,000, who speak a corrupt Arabic, and, in the towns, Italian. After the taking of Rhodes, the emperor Charles V. gave this island to the knights of St. John of Jerusalem. It was attacked by the Turks in 1566, who, after many dreadful assaults, were obliged to abandon the enterprise, with the loss of 30,000 men. The whole island is extremely well fortified. The knights of Malta formerly consisted of 8 nations; but they have long been only 7, because the English have forsaken them. They are obliged to suppress all pirates, are at perpetual war with the Turks and other Mahometans, and are all under a vow of celibacy and chastity. It is about 60 m. SSW of Cape Passaro, in Sicily, and is now in possession of the English, who maintain a numerous garrison here.

MALTA, see CIVITA VECCHIA; Valetta is the capital.

Maltby, Linc. NW of Burwell. Maltby, Linc. N. of Alford. Maltby, Norfolk, NW of Yarmouth. Maltby, Norf. NW of Stokesly. Maltby, Yorks. SE of Rotherham. Maltham-Gragg, Yorks. E of Settle.

MALTON, a borough town in the N. Riding of Yorks. seated on the river Derwent, which is made navigable to the Ouse, 18 m. NE of York, and 216 N by W of London. It is composed of two towns, the New and the Old, and contains 700 houses. Markets on Tuesd. and Sat. and fairs on Sat. before Palm Sund. the Sat. before Whitsunday, and Oct. 10 and 11.

Malton, Old, 1 m. distance from New Malton, on the opposite side of the Derwent.

Maltravil, near Montgomery, N. Wales, a poor village, but formerly a large place, and the residence of the princess of Powysland.

MALVASIA, anciently EPIDAURUS, a small promontory of Turkey in Europe, almost surrounded by the sea, on the eastern coast of the Morea. The rich wine, formerly so much valued under the title of Malmsy, is brought from this territory. It is 40 m. ESE of Misitra. Lat. 36 57 N lon. 23 22 E.

Malvern Hills, hills in the SW part of Worcesters. which may be seen at a great distance. They extend about 10 m. in length, in a direction N and S, the N extremity about 7 m. SSW of Worcester. In these hills is a spring of uncommon purity, much resorted to in scrofulous and scorbutic cases.

MALVIEZ, a town of France, in the depart. of the Aude, 8 m. N of Limoux.

MALWA, a province of Hindostan, bounded on the W by Guzerat; on the N by Agimere and Agra; on the E by Allahabad and Orissa; and on the S by Candeish. It is situated nearly under the tropic of Cancer, and is one of the most extensive, elevated, and diversified tracts in Hindostan, and is divided between the paishwah of the western Mahrattas, and two of the inferior chiefs, Sindia and Holkar. Ougein is the capital of Sindia, and Indore of Holkar.

Malwater, Yorks. NE of Settle. Malwood Castle, and Lodge, Hamps. near Beaulieu. Malzieu, a town of France, in the depart. of Lozere, 5 m. NE of St. Chely.

Mamble, Worcesters. near Lindridge. Mamhilet, Monmouths. W of Usk. Mamhead, Devon. Here is one of the finest seats in the county, commanding full, various, and beautiful prospects of the river Ex, the sea, and the country, stretching away beyond Exmouth, Lympstone, &c. to the Dorsets. and Somersets. hills. Mam Tor, a mountain of Derbys. with lead mines in it, in the Peak, near Castleton.

MAMERS, a town in the depart. of Sarte, 12 m. SE of Alencon.

MAN, an island in the Irish Sea, W of the coast of Cumberland, about 30 m. in length, and from 8 to 15 in breadth. It contains 17 parishes, called kirks, and the chief towns are Rushen, Douglas, and Peel. The soil varies in different tracts, yet produces more corn than is sufficient to maintain the natives. The air, which is sharp and cold in winter, is healthy, and the inhabitants live to a very great age. The commodities of this island are black cattle, wool, fine and coarse linen, hides, skins, honey, tallow, and herrings. The frosts here are short, and the snow, especially in lands near the sea, lies not long on the ground. Their cattle and horses are small, and they have badgers, foxes, eagles, and mottled hawks. Here are several quarries of stone and thin blue slate, and some mines of lead, copper, and iron. Thin oat cakes are the common bread of the inhabitants. About the rocks of the island breed an incredible number of all sorts of seafowl, and especially on the Calf of Man, an island 3 m. in circuit, before the S. promontory of Man, and separated from it by a channel of 2 furlongs broad. On this little island 5000 young puffins are generally taken every year. The bishop is nominated by the Duke of Athol, as heir of the eldest branch of the Stanleys, Earls of Derby; but the sovereignty of the island was purchased by the English government in 1765, whereby a free trade was permitted with England, and an entire stop put to the clandestine trade which they carried on with prodigious success, with England and Ireland. He was formerly reckoned a baron, but does not sit in the house of Peers, although he is allowed the highest seat in the lower house of convocation. The language is a dialect of the Erse. In its civil government, the island is divided into 6 sheedings, each having its proper coroner, who is intrusted with the peace of his district, and acts in the nature of a sheriff. Of their laws, the Lord Chief Justice Coke observes, "that they are such are scarce to be found any where else."

Man, or Maun, a river in Nottinghams. which falls into the Meden at Houghton. Manacha, Cornwall, SE of Helston. Manacles, Cornwall; rocky points, in the English Channel, E of the Lizard Point.

MANARA, an island of Asia, on the NW coast of the island of Ceylon. It gives the name of Gulf to the sea which lies to the S. Lat. 9 0 N lon. 79 58 E.

Manby, Linc. W of Glandford Briggs. Manby, Lincolns. NE of Louth. Manby, Yorks. on the Wharfe, NW of Thirsk. Manchester, Warwicks. near Atherstone.

MANCHA, LA, a mountainous territory in New Castile, having Murcia on the E, and Murcia and Jaen to the S. This is the most cheerful country of Spain. The inhab. are affable, and great lovers of music and dancing. Their songs, or seguidillas are peculiar to that part of the kingdom. The women are tall, well-made, and have handsome features; while seeing a pretty woman dance the menco, a certain rapid movement, with voluptuous postures, and steps graceful, varied, and just, even a philosopher would find his wisdom troublesome.

MANCHA, a town of Jaen in Spain, 7 m. E of Jaen.

MANCHE LA, or THE CHANNEL, a depart. in the western part of Normandy, forming nearly a peninsula, on the N coast. It is bounded on the N and W by the English Channel, and on the S by the departs. of Ille and Vilaine, and the Mayenne. Coutances is the capital.

MANCHESTER, anciently a Roman station, called MANCUNIUM, a large, populous, and flourishing town in Lancashire, and a place of great antiquity. It was famous for its population, market, and manufactures of stuffs in Camden's time; but it is now principally conspicuous as the centre of the cotton trade, an immense business, extending, in some or other of its operations, from Furness (where great cotton spinning-mills have been established) to Derby N and S, and from Halifax to Liverpool E and W. The labours of a very populous neighbourhood are collected at Manchester, whence they are sent to London, Liverpool, Hull, &c. These consist of a great variety of cotton, silk, linen, and mixed goods, fitted for all sorts of markets, both at home and abroad, spreading over a great part of Europe, America, and the coast of Guinea, and bringing back vast profits to this country. The manufacture of ticking, tapes, filletting, and other small wares, of silk goods, and of hats, is also carried on at Manchester, from which various sources of wealth, it has attained greater opulence than almost any of the trading towns in England. Its buildings, especially the more modern ones, are on a proportional scale of size and elegance. Its chief ornaments are the college, the market-place, the exchange, the collegiate church, and the infirmary. Manchester contains 600 streets and 14 churches, besides other places of worship; 16,353 houses, and 98,573 inhab. By the river Irwell, over which it has an ancient and lofty stone bridge, it has a communication with the Mersey, and all the late various extensions of inland navigation. It is situated at the confluence of the above river and the Irk, 67 m. WSW of York, and 182 NNW of London. Market on Sat.

MANCHESTER, a town of Virginia, situated on James River, and a town in the State of Vermont.

MANFREDONIA, a sea-port of Capitanata, Naples, built in the year 1256, by King Manfroi, on the ruins of the ancient Sipontium. It is seated on a gulf of the same name in the Adriatic, in lat. 41 35 N and lon. 16 12 E.

MANGALORE, a sea-port in Hindostan, in the Canary country, on the coast of Malabar. It has an excellent road for ships to anchor in, while the rainy season lasts. On their festival days, the Hindoo inhab. carry their idols in triumph, being placed in a waggon, adorned on all sides with flowers. There are several sharp, crooked iron hoops fastened to the wheels, upon which the mad devotees throw themselves, and are crushed to pieces. It is the greatest place for trade of any in the kingdom; and the Portuguese have a factory here for rice, and a pretty large church, frequented by black converts. The houses are meanly built along the sides of the rivers. Lat. 12 50 N lon. 74 44 E.

MANGEEA, an island in the S. Sea, about 4 leagues in circumference. The coast is guarded by a reef of coral rocks, against which a heavy surf is continually breaking. In the interior parts it rises into small hills, whence there is an easy descent to the shore. They have neither hogs nor dogs; but they have plantains, taro, and bread-fruit. Captain Cook represents this as a very fine island; but the hostile appearance of its inhabitants obliged him to leave it (in the year 1777) without making any stay. Lat. 21 27 S lon. 158 13 W.

MARQUESAS, a group of islands in the South Sea, first discovered by Mendana, a Spaniard, in 1595. They are 5 in number, and named St. Christina, Magdalena, Dominica, St. Pedro, and Hood. Captain Cook lay some time at the first of these, in 1774. The natives are of a tawny complexion, but look almost black, from being punctured over the whole body. They go almost naked, having only a small piece of cloth, perfectly resembling that made by the people of Otaheite, round their waists and loins. Their beard and hair are of a fine jet black, like those of the other natives of the torrid zone. The island, though high and steep, has many valleys, which widen toward the sea, and are covered with fine forests to the summits of the interior mountains. The products of these islands are bread-fruit, bananas, plantains, cocoa-nuts, scarlet beans, paper-mulberries, of the bark of which their cloth is made, casuarinas, with other tropical plants and trees, and hogs and fowls. They have also plenty of fish. Captain Foster says, he never saw a single man deformed, or even ill-proportioned, among the natives: all were strong, tall, well-limbed, and active in the highest degree. Their arms were clubs and spears; and their government, like that of the Society Islands, monarchical. But they were not quite so cleanly as the inhabitants of the Society Isles, who, in that respect, surpass, perhaps, any other people in the world. The drink of the Marquesans is purely water, cocoa-nuts being rather scarce. Their music, musical instruments, dances, and canoes, resemble those of Otaheite. Indeed, the inhabitants of the Marquesas, Society and Friendly Islands, Easter Island, and New Zealand, seem to have all the same origin; their language, manners, customs, &c. bearing a great affinity in many respects. Lat. 9 55 S lon. 139 9 W.

MARSEILLES, a flourishing sea-port in the depart. of the Mouths of the Rhone, lately an episcopal see. It was so celebrated in the time of the Romans, that Cicero styled it the Athens of Gaul, and Pliny called it the Mistress of Education. It is seated on the Mediterranean, at the upper end of a gulph, covered and defended by many small islands, and is divided into the Old Town, or the City, and the New Town. The first appears like an amphitheatre to the vessels which enter the port; but the houses are mean, and the streets dirty, narrow, and steep. In the latter the streets are straight and broad, and adorned with handsome edifices. In this part is the principal church built by the Goths, on the ruins of the temple of Diana. This place was considered as endowed with an invaluable privilege confirmed by different popes; namely, that it should be for ever exempt from an interdict. The armory is the finest in the kingdom, and contains arms for 40,000 men. Here is also a large arsenal, well stored with all the implements for building and fitting out the gallies. The harbour is not deep enough for men of war. Gold and silver stuffs are made here. The inhabitants are estimated at 90,000. With respect to commerce, Marseilles has been eminent, since the days of antiquity, and it is now sometimes called Europe in Miniature, on account of the variety of dresses and languages. In 1649, the plague raged with great violence in Marseilles, and with still greater in 1720, 1721, and 1722, when it carried off 50,000 of the inhabitants. During this last dreadful visitation, M. de Belfunce (the "Marseilles good Bishop," celebrated by Pope), the canon Bourgeret, the Magistrate Moustiet, and the commandant Langeron, by their intrepid and indefatigable humanity, did the most signal honour to themselves and to human nature. Marseilles is 18 m. NW of Toulon, and 362 S by E of Paris. Lat. 43 18 N lon. 5 27 E.

MARSTRAND, a rocky island of W. Gothland, in the Cattegat, about 2 m. in circumference, 18 m. NW of Gotheborg. The town, which lies on the eastern side, consists of about 200 ruinous and almost uninhabited houses. The harbour is spacious, deep, secure, and commodious, but of difficult entrance. The inhabitants subsist chiefly by the herring fishery; by the number of ships which in rough weather take refuge in the harbour, and by a contraband trade.

MARTABAN, a town and province of Pegu, on the Gulf of Bengal, a long time an independent kingdom. The soil is fertile in rice, fruits and wines of all kinds. Its capital was a rich trading place before ships were sunk at the entrance of the harbour to choke it up, (by the king of Ava) which it has done effectually. The chief trade is now in earthenware and fish. The whole country, moreover, is now subject to the king of Ava, who in 1754, subdued the kingdom of Pegu, and rendered it a dependent province. The town of Martaban is situated on a bog or large river, 80 m. SE of Pegu. Lat. 16 38 N lon. 97 3 E.

MARTHA, ST. a province of S. America on the coast of Terra Firma. It is about 300 m. in length, and 200 in breadth, and is mostly a mountainous country, having Venezuela on the E and Carthagena on the W. It is extremely hot and sultry on the sea coast, but within cold, on account of the mountains. It abounds with fruit proper to the climates, and there are mines of gold and precious stones, and salt-works. The Spaniards possess but one part of this province, in which they have built St. Martha, the capital. The air about the town is wholesome, and it is seated near the sea, at the mouth of the River Guayra, having a harbour surrounded by high mountains. It was formerly very considerable, when the Spanish galleons were sent thither, but is now come almost to nothing. Lat. 11 27 N lon. 74 0 W.

MARTINIQUE, a considerable island of the West Indies, about 44 m. in length, and 120 in circumf. and contains 86,000 inhab. There are 3 high mountains, with numberless hills of a conical form, and several rivers and fertile valleys, but they will not bear either wheat or vines; however, the former is not much wanted, for those that are born here, prefer cassava to wheat bread. It possesses many natural advantages, and in particular, its harbours afford a certain shelter from the hurricanes. It exports sugar, cocoa, cassia, ginger, cotton, indigo, chocolate, aloes, pimento, tobacco, yarn, plantains, molasses, preserved fruits, &c. is extremely populous, and has several safe and commodious harbours. The principal places are Fort Royal, Fort St. Peter, Fort Trinity, and Fort-de Mouillage. There are still some of the ancient inhab. remaining. In 1769, France imported from Martinique, in 202 trading vessels, merchandise to the amount of 536,631l. sterl. In Feb. 3, 1794, this island was attacked by the English, under Sir John Jervis and Sir Charles Gray, and the conquest was completed on March 16. It was afterwards ceded to France at the peace, and it has again been lately conquered by the English, under General Beckwith, and Admiral Cochrane. Fort Royal is in lat. 14 44 N lon. 61 16 W.

MARYLAND, one of the United States of America, lying about the N end of Chesapeak Bay, which divides it into two parts, called the E and W shores: bounded on the N by Pennsylvania, on the E by the state of Delaware, on the SE and S by the sea and Virginia, and on the W by the interior country of America. It is 174 m. long, and 110 broad; divided into 18 counties, 10 of which are on the W and 8 on the E shore of the Chesapeak, and contains 380,546 inhab. The exports are wheat and tobacco, which are the staple commodities; timber, hemp, flax, and barrelled pork; there being vast numbers of swine, which run wild in the woods, feeding on the mast or nuts of various kinds of trees.—The chief towns are Annapolis and Baltimore. The climate of this province, which in most respects resembles Virginia, is generally mild and agreeable.

MARYPORT, a town in Cumberland, situated at the mouth of the Ellen, 7 m. NW of Cockermouth, and 307 NNW of London. It has 80 or 90 sail of shipping, from 50 to 300 tons burden; some of which sail up the Baltic for timber, flax, iron, &c. The coal and coasting trade and ship-building are carried on pretty extensively, and lately an extensive cotton manufactory has been erected. Here is a furnace for cast iron, and one of the finest glass-houses in the British dominions. By a late survey, the number of inhabitants amounted to 2625. Market on Frid.

Masbrook, Upper and Lower, Shrops. near Oswestry. Masbrough, a flourishing village of Yorks. near Rotherham. Here is a considerable iron manufactory, with furnaces for smelting the iron out of the ore, forges for making it malleable, and mills for flatting the tin plates, which are also tinned here. Great quantities of goods of hammered iron are made here for exportation; and they also convert iron into steel, and cast all kinds of vessels, &c. in the same metal.

MASCATE, the principal town of Oman, on the coast of Arabia, beside a small gulf encompassed with steep rocks, and forming an excellent harbour, in which the largest vessels may find shelter. Arrian calls it Mosca, and speaks of it as being in his time a great emporium of the trade of Arabia, Persia, and India; an advantage which it has ever enjoyed and still possesses. The Portuguese conquered it about the year 1508, but the Arabs took it from them in 1658, and put all the garrison to the sword, except 18, who turned Mahometans. The cathedral, built by the Portuguese, is now the palace of the wali, or governor, acting for the scheik or iman, and their other church is a magazine. There are neither trees, shrubs, nor grass to be seen on the coast near it, and only a few date-trees in a valley at the back of the town, though they have all things in plenty. The bazars, or market-places, are covered with the leaves of date-trees, laid on beams, which reach from the house-tops on one side to those on the other. The horses, cattle, and sheep are accustomed to eat roasted fish; notwithstanding which, the beef and mutton are both good. Their religion is Mahometanism, and yet they suffer any one to go into their mosques, contrary to the custom of the Turks. There are about 1200 Banians in this city, who are permitted to bring their wives here, set up idols in their chambers, and burn their dead, &c. The products of the country are horses, dates, fine brimstone, coffee, and ruinous, a root that dyes red. Lat. 24 0 N lon. 57 26 E.

MAYO, one of the Cape de Verd Islands, lying in the Atlantic Ocean, about 21 m. in circumf. its form oval, with a variety of sharp rocks and points projecting into the sea about a mile. The soil consists of sand, or a loose crumbling stone, without rivulets, springs, or any natural moisture, except the dews in the night, and showers in the wet season; however, they have plenty of beeves, goats, and asses; as also some corn, yams, potatoes, plantains, figs, water-melons, citrons, oranges, pompions, and calavanas, or a species of bean. In the whole island is but one spring, which rises in the centre, and runs off in a small stream through a valley confined by the hills. Here are no large trees; what few they have are on the side of the hills. From a large salt-pond, 2 m. in length, and half a m. in breadth, many English ships are loaded in the summer time. The sea is plentifully stocked with a variety of fish. The inhabitants are negroes, who speak the Portuguese language, and are stout, lusty, and plump. There are only three villages, the principal of which is Pinosa, with a church, and about 200 inhab. many of whom go naked. Lat. 15 10 N, lon. 22 25 W.

MECCA, a city of Hedjas, in Arabia, seated on a barren spot in a valley, surrounded by little hills, about a day's journey from the Red Sea. It has neither walls nor gates, but the buildings are better here than in any other town of Arabia. What chiefly supports it is the annual resort of a great many thousand pilgrims at a certain season of the year; for at other times, the shops are scarcely open. The inhabitants are poor, very thin, lean, and swarthy. The hills about the town are numerous; all consist of a blackish rock; and some of them are half a mile in circumference. The town has plenty of water, and yet little garden-stuff; but there are several sorts of good fruit, as grapes, melons, water-melons, and cucumbers. Numbers of sheep are brought hither to be sold to the pilgrims. Mecca stands in a very hot climate, and the inhabitants usually sleep on the tops of their houses, for the sake of coolness. Among its edifices, the most remarkable is the famous Kaba, or house of God, held in high veneration by the Arghars, even before the days of Mahomet, and said to have been Abraham's house of prayer. The Kaba is a square tower, covered on the top with a piece of black, gold-embroidered silk stuff. It has 42 doors, and resembles, in its form, the Royal Exchange, but is near ten times as large. The ground in the middle, or area, is mostly covered with gravel. There are cloisters all round, and in the sides are cells for those who live a monastic life. The arcades around the square are said to be magnificent, and are illuminated with a vast number of lamps, and candlesticks of gold and silver. In the Kaba is a singular relic, the famous black stone, said to have been brought from heaven by the Angel Gabriel, which every Mussulman must kiss, or at least touch, every time he goes round the Kaba. Here also is the well of Zemzen, said to have been that where Hagar quenched the thirst of Ismael. Lat. 21 45 N lon. 40 55 E.

MECHLIN, or MALINES, a town and district of Austrian Brabant. It consists of several small islands, made by artificial canals, over which are a great many bridges. Here is a very large house, in which are brought up 800 or 1000 young girls, and a great foundery for ordnance of all kinds. It is famous for its manufactures, in bed-quilts, thread, and particularly in fine lace; and they brew a sort of beer, which is sent into the neighbouring provinces. It is seated on the river Dyle, 10 m. NNE of Brussels.

MECHOACAN, or VALLADOLID, a province of Mexico, on the South Sea, bounded on the N by part of Guasteca, and the provinces of Zacatecas and Guadalajara, and on the S by Mexico Proper, and the South Sea. It extends about 70 leagues along the coast, and still farther inland; the soil is remarkably fertile, and the climate good. It is very rich, and abounds in excellent horses, honey, wax, and all the necessaries of life. It has also mines of silver and copper, and great plenty of cocoa-nuts, beside a great deal of silk. The capital of the same name is about 70 m. from Mexico, in lat. 20 5 N lon. 103 37 W.

MEDINA, a city of Hedjas, in Arabia Felix, celebrated for being the burial-place of Mahomet. It is of moderate extent, is walled round, and has a large mosque, but nothing like the temple at Mecca. In one corner is a place, 24 paces square, with great windows, and brass gates, and in the middle the tomb of Mahomet, inclosed with iron rails, hung with curtains and surrounded by a vast number of lamps. The tomb is not exposed to any, except the 40 eunuchs who guard it, and light the lamps. It is placed between two other tombs, in which rest the ashes of the two first Caliphs. The story of its being suspended in the air by a loadstone is now well known to be a fable. Provisions are brought to this place out of Nubia, across the Red Sea, in an odd sort of vessels, whose sails are made of mats. It is called the city of the Prophet, because here he was protected by the inhabitants when he fled from Mecca; and here he was first invested with regal power. The time of his death was in 637; but the Mahometan epoch begins in 622, from the time of his flight. It is seated on a sandy plain, abounding in palm-trees, 176 m. NNW of Mecca. Lat. 24 20 N lon. 39 33 E.

MEDWAY, a river rising in Surry, in four different branches, which unite in Kent, where it waters Tunbridge, and from Maidstone is navigable to Rochester; below which, at Chatham, it is a station for the royal navy. It falls into the Thames at the Nore. From Rochester Bridge to Sheerness, the distance is about 17 m. In this part of the river, the channel is so deep, the banks so soft, and the reaches so short, that it is one of the best and safest harbours in the world. The forts of Upnor and Gillingham, erected on opposite shores of the river, are well furnished with cannon, and defend all the ships which ride between them and the bridge. There is also a platform of guns at the Swam, and another at Cockhamwood. But the principal defence of this river is the castle and works at Sheerness. On the 22d of June, 1667, the Dutch squadron sailed boldly up to Blackstakes, and 7 of their largest ships went as far as Upnor, where they burnt the London, and several other men of war, damaged most of the ships within reach of their cannon, and carried off the Royal Charles, a first-rate of 100 guns.

MENTON, a town of Monaco, in Italy, with a castle, 5 m. NE of Monaco.

MENTZ, a large populous city in the circle of the Lower Rhine, capital of the late electorate of Mentz, with an university, and an archbishop's see. The archbishop was an elector, arch-chancellor of the empire, keeper of the archives, and director of the general and particular assemblies. He also convoked the electoral colleges, and was the first state of the empire, after the emperor and the king. The chapter consisted of 5 prelates, and 19 capitulars. This city is finely situated, built, however, in an irregular manner, with narrow streets and old fashioned houses, and containing, besides the parish churches, 6 monasteries, 5 nunneries, and 6 hospitals. The cathedral is a gloomy fabric. Here are manufactures of stockings and stuffs. Many of the public buildings, and private houses, have been destroyed, or greatly injured, during the late sieges. Mentz is seated on the Rhine, (soon after its confluence with the Maine) over which is a bridge of boats communicating with Cassel. Mentz claims the honour of the invention of the art of Printing by John Fust. It is 20 m. N of Worms. Lat. 49 59 N lon. 8 20 E.

MENTZ, THE ARCHBISHOPRICK OF, a country of Germany, in the circle of the Lower Rhine, and lying upon that river. It is about 50 m. in length, and 20 in breadth, a very fertile territory, but considerably dispersed. In the whole electoral circle were 41 cities and 21 boroughs. Besides the proper archbishopric, the elector of Mentz was sovereign of the county of Eichsfeld, Eisfeld, or Eifeld; and also of the city and territory of Erfort.

MEQUINEZ, a city of Fez, in Morocco, 26 m. SW of Fez, the residence of the emperor, and the capital of the whole empire. Hither the bashaws and alcayds resort with the tribute and presents every two or three years. In the middle of the city the Jews have a place to themselves, walled in and guarded, with an alcayd to protect them. It is death for them to curse, or lift up a hand against a Moor, insomuch that the boys kick them about at their pleasure. They are obliged to wear black clothes and caps, and to pull off their shoes whenever they pass by a mosque. Close by Mequinez, on the NW side, stands a large negro town, which takes up as much ground as the city, but the houses are not so high, nor so well built. The palace stands on the S side, and is guarded by several hundreds of black eunuchs, who are armed with knives and scimiters, covered with wrought silver. It is an extensive building, and includes several gardens. The streets are exceedingly narrow, with hardly any of the windows to be seen, except little holes to look out at. The houses are flat at the top, so that, in many places, they can walk a great way upon them. The women live in the upper apartments, and often visit each other from the tops of the houses. When they go abroad, they have their heads covered with their outward garment, which comes down close to their eyes; and underneath they tie a piece of white cloth, to hide the lower part of their faces. They are quite covered all over, except their legs, which are generally naked; but within doors they appear in their hair, and have only a single fillet over their foreheads. Here, as well as at Morocco, is a hospital or convent of Spanish Recollects, founded by the Kings of Spain, for the benefit of Christian captives, the fathers of both which supply the poor with medicines gratis. It is seated in a plain, surrounded with fertile well watered valleys and eminences, 26 m. SW of Fez, and 165 NE of Morocco. Lat. 33 56 N lon. 6 6 W.

MERIDA, a city of Spanish Estremadura, built by the Romans before the Christian æra, and called Augusta Emerita. It is seated on the Guadiana, 12 m. E of Badajos. Here are several fine remains of antiquity. The gate of the temple of Mars forms the entrance to a modern church. A short distance from the site of the Temple are three antique Roman altars, placed one above another, forming a pedestal to a statue. The area of the temple of Diana has now a modern building in which the columns, with their capitals, are preserved entire. The triumphal arch forming the entrance to the city is of prodigious magnitude. Beyond the town are two amphitheatres, the largest supposed to have been the Naumachia for the exhibition of sea-fights.

MEXICO, a city of N. America, capital of the province of that name. It was a flourishing place before the Spaniards entered the country, and is seated on several islands, in a salt-water lake, to which there is no entrance, but by five causeways, three of which are about 2 m. in length. It formerly contained 80,000 houses, with several large temples, full of rich idols, and three palaces, where the emperor of Mexico resided. Mexico was taken by Ferdinand Cortez, in 1521, after a siege of three months. As the Mexicans defended themselves from street to street, it was almost ruined, but afterwards rebuilt by the Spaniards. It now contains about 35,000 houses built of stone and brick, with a suburb of 3000 houses, inhabited by the native Americans, 29 churches, and 22 monasteries and nunneries. The inhab. are about 1,200,000 Spaniards, 2,500,000 Indians, and 2,400,000 mongrels. It is the usual residence of the viceroy, whose employment continues 3 years, and has a royal audience, a university, and the tribunal of the inquisition. All the streets are straight, and exactly disposed in point of regularity, and it is remarkable for having neither gates, walls, nor artillery. The revenue of the cathedral amounts to nearly 80,000l. a year, out of which the archbishop receives annually 15,000l. besides vast sums that arise by perquisites. The inhab. are immensely wealthy, and a vast abundance of silver, gold, and jewels, is exposed in plate and toys in the streets, by the goldsmiths, and shopkeepers. Mexico enjoys a prodigious commerce, being the centre of all the trade carried on between Spanish America and Europe, and Spanish America and the E. Indies. An incredible number of horses and mules are employed in transporting goods from Acapulco to Vera Cruz, and from Vera Cruz to Acapulco. Hither all the gold and silver is brought to be coined; here the king's fifth is deposited; and all that immense quantity of plate wrought which is annually sent to Europe. This place was overflowed by an inundation in October, 1629, in which 40,000 persons were drowned. This obliged the Spaniards to make a great conduit through a mountain, in order to empty the lake; which being done, part of the town became seated on dry land. Mexico is supplied with fresh water by an aqueduct of three miles in length. The Spaniards do not make a tenth part of the inhab. the others being negroes, mulattoes, native Americans, and a mixture of them all. It is 130 m. W by N of Vera Cruz, and 250 NE by N of Acapulco. Lat. 19 54 N lon. 100 0 W.

MEXICO, or NEW SPAIN, a country of N. America, including, in its largest sense, all that extensive peninsula situated between Louisiana and unknown countries on the N and Terra Firma, in S. America, on the S; but the audience of Mexico contains only the provinces of Mexico Proper, Mechoacan, Guasteca, Tlascala, Guaxaca, Tabasco, and Yucatan. It is washed on the E by the Atlantic Ocean; and on the S and W by the S. Sea, and is above 2000 miles in length, and from 60 to 600 in breadth. It is divided into 23 districts or provinces, the principal of which is that of Mexico Proper, and contains mines of gold and silver, of the latter of which they count above a thousand, besides, mines of iron, copper, lead, alum, crystal, vitriol, precious stones, marble, &c. The soil produces Indian corn, cabbage-trees, cocoa-nuts, vanillas, plantains, pine-apples, cochineal, cotton, and several other fruits, gums, and drugs, proper to the climate. Before the Spaniards came here, they had a sort of dogs that did not bark, but howled like wolves; grey lions, less formidable than those of Africa; and also small tigers, bears, though uncommon, elks, or moose-deer, pecaries, warres, beavers, opossums, armadillos, guanoes, flying squirrels, racoons, crocodiles, manattes, or sea-cows, monkeys, parrots, macaws, pelicans, cormorants, and a great variety of other birds, snakes, scorpions, and other insects. The Spanish clergy are very numerous, and there are a great number of convents. The inhab. may be divided into three classes, the Spaniards about 1,200,000, the Indians about 2,500,000, and the Mongrels, being a mixture of both, about 2,400,000. Being a very mountainous country, the temperature depends less upon the latitude than the height of the land above the level of the sea. Under the 19 and 22 deg. sugar, cotton, cocoa, and indigo, will not thrive abundantly but on the most elevated ground. The highest mountains are on the coast of the S. Sea, and there are five burning volcanoes. Earthquakes are frequent, but do not produce such terrible effects as those which afflicted Peru. The eastern shore is a flat, level country, full of bogs and morasses, overflowed in the rainy season, which is at the same time as our summer. In some places, the collection of the public revenue, and the exercise of the police, are deposited in the hands of their chiefs, while the laws of the Spanish government, upon the whole, have a tendency to make them good subjects, rather than miserable and discontented slaves. Among the inferior orders of Indians, many are admitted to offices in the church, army, magistracy, and in all the principal Spanish towns, they are invited to a full incorporation with the natives of Spain. The revenues of the crown arise from a fifth part of the gold and silver, and from the duties and customs, as well as from the lands held of the crown.

MEXICO, NEW, a large country of N. America, bounded on the W by the gulf of California; its other limits are uncertain. The soil and climate are as rich, plentiful, and temperate as any country of America, or any other part of the world. It is inhabited by a great number of people, whose languages and customs are very different; some wander about, and others dwell in towns and villages. The chief divisions are New Mexico Proper, New Leon, New Navarre, and California; the principal Spanish colonies are St. Barbe, and Santa Fé, the capital town.

MIDDLESEX, a county of England, bounded on the N by Hertfords.; on the E by Essex; on the S by Surry, and a corner of Kent; and on the W by Buckinghams. It is one of the least counties in England, being only about 22 m. in length, and 14 in breadth, but is much the richest and most populous, and pays more taxes than any ten beside. It contains 7 market towns, and about 200 parishes, without including those in London and Westminster. The air is healthy; but the soil, in general, being of a lean gravel, it is naturally a district of little fertility; though, by means of the vicinity to the metropolis, many parts of it are converted into rich beds of manure, clothed with almost perpetual verdure. There are still, however, very extensive tracts of uncultivated heath. It contains 138,750 houses, and 953,276 inhab.; and sends 8 members to Parliament: being 2 for the county, 4 for London, and 2 for Westminster. Besides the Thames, the Lea, and the Colne, Middlesex is watered by several streams; one of which, called the New River, is artificially brought from Amwell, in Herts, for the purpose of supplying London with water. Indeed, the whole county may be considered as a demesne to the metropolis, the land being laid out in gardens, pastures, and inclosures of all sorts for its convenience and support.

MILAN, a city of Italy, capital of a duchy of the same name. It was the ancient capital of Lombardy, and is the largest city of Italy, except Rome; but although it is thought rather to exceed Naples in size, it does not contain above one half the number of inhabitants. It is seated in a pleasant plain, between the rivers Adda and Tesin. It is about 10 m. in circumf. and called by the Italians, Milan the Great. Here are 22 gates, 230 churches, 90 convents, 100 religious fraternities, 120 schools, and about 250,000 inhab. Broad and straight streets are but few in comparison of the narrow and crooked: and the many paper windows, or glass and paper panes intermixed, even in the finest palaces, have a mean appearance. The governor's palace, or the old regency-house, is the most stately and spacious. The cathedral is a grand structure, being 500 feet long, 200 broad, and 400 high. It stands in the centre of the city, and, next to St. Peter's at Rome, is the largest in Italy. This vast fabric is entirely built of solid, white marble, and is supported by 50 columns, said to be 84 feet high. The 4 pillars under the cupola are 28 feet in circumf. The college of St. Ambrose has a library, which, beside some thousands of manuscripts, contains 45,000 printed volumes. In it is an academy of painting. The most considerable commerce of the inhab. is in grain (especially rice,) cattle, and cheese, which they export; and they have manufactures of silk and velvet stuffs, stockings, handkerchiefs, ribbons, gold and silver laces, and embroideries, woollen and linen cloths, glass, and earthen ware, in imitation of China. Here are several rivers and many canals. It is 65 m. N of Genoa, 145 NNW of Florence, and 270 NW of Rome. Lat. 45 28 N lon. 9 16 E.

MILAN, THE DUCHY OF, a considerable country of Italy, bounded on the N by Switzerland, and the country of the Grisons; on the E by the ci-devant state of Venice, and the duchies of Parma and Mantua; on the S by Parma and Piedmont; and on the W by Piedmont and Savoy, being about 108 m. in length, and 96 in breadth. The soil is as fertile as that of any country in Europe, in corn, wine, fruits, rice, olives, and vegetables; and the district of Lodi breeds vast herds of cattle. The rivers are, the Secchia, Tesin, Adda, and Oglio. There are likewise several lakes, the three principal of which are those of Maggiore, Como, and Lugano. This duchy, including the Milanese Proper, the dukedom of Mantua, the territories of Como, Pavia, Lodi, and Cremona, has been, since the beginning of this century, subject to the house of Austria, but in the present war it has been overrun by French troops, and now forms a principal part of the new Cisalpine Republic.

MILBORN-PORT, a borough of Somersets. surrounded in a manner by Dorsets. It is seated on a branch of the river Parret, 2 m. from Sherborne, in Dorsets. The inhab. are about 1100. It is no market town, though it appears in Domesday Book to have had a market once, and 56 burgesses.

MILFORD-HAVEN, a deep inlet of the Irish Sea, on the coast of Pembrokes. universally allowed to be the best harbour in Great Britain, and as safe and spacious as any in Europe. It has 16 deep and safe creeks, 5 bays, and 3 roads, all distinguished by their several names, in which 1000 sail of ships may ride in perfect security, and at sufficient distance from each other. There is no danger in sailing in or out with the tide, by day or night, from whatever point the wind may happen to blow; and if a ship in distress comes in, without either anchor or cable, she may run on shore on soft ooze, and there lie in safety till she is refitted. The spring tide rises in this harbour 36 feet, so that ships may at any time be laid ashore. Dale Harbour is a ready outlet for small vessels, where they may ride in 2 or 3 fathoms at low water. In the reign of Queen Elizabeth, before the Spanish invasion, two forts were begun at the entrance of the haven, one on each side, called Nangle and Dale Blockhouses, but they were not finished. In the middle of the entrance, between Nangle and Dale, the Stack Rock rises above water. The breadth of the entrance, between rock and rock, is but 200 yards at high water, and 112 at low water. One great advantage attending this harbour is that a ship may be in or out of it in an hour's time, and in 8 or 10 hours may be on the coast of Ireland, or off the Land's End; they may also get out to the W much sooner than from either Plymouth or Falmouth.

MILO, an island of the Archipelago, about 50 m. in circumf. with one of the best and largest harbours in the Mediterranean. All its productions are of incomparable excellence. The earth, constantly heated by subterraneous fires, produces, almost without intermission, wheat, barley, cotton, exquisite wines, and delicious melons. The cattle, especially goats, are very good, and here are mines of iron and sulphur. In the spring, the fields are enamelled with anemonies of all sorts. The inhabitants, who are all Greeks, except the cadi, are good sailors. A sort of plumous alum is found here, in large lumps, composed of threads as fine as the softest silk, silvered over, and shining very prettily; it has the same taste as rock alum. Here is a waiwode, who is a Greek, and 3 consuls, who can depose the cadi when he fails in his duty; here are likewise 2 bishops; one of the Greek, and the other of the Latin church. There is a town of the same name in the eastern part of the island, which is a poor dirty place. The whole island, which in the time of Tournefort, in 1700, had upwards of 20,000 inhabitants, from the pestilence, and the oppression of the Turks, does not now contain above 700. MINDANAO, one of the Philippine Islands, and next to Luconia in point of size, being 180 m. in length, and 120 in breadth. It is intersected with so many points running out into the sea, and deep bays, that a man may go across it any where in a day and a half. It is generally a mountainous country, full of hills, and valleys; but the mould is deep, black, and fruitful. There are many lofty trees, of kinds not known in Europe, and the valleys are well watered with rivulets. The inhabitants find very good gold, by digging deep in the ground, as also in the rivers, making trenches before the floods. The libby-trees produce the sago, of which, when reduced into meal, the poor people make bread and biscuits. Here are all the various sorts of fruits proper to the climate, besides plenty of rice. The cinnamon-tree grows here, on the mountains, without culture, and has no owner but him that finds it. They have horses, beeves, buffaloes, goats, deer, monkeys, guanoes, bats of a large size, lizards, and snakes; but they have neither lions nor tigers. Their hogs are accounted very ugly creatures, they have all great nobs growing over their eyes; their flesh, however, is sweet. Their fowls are, ducks, hens, pigeons, parrots, parroquets, and turtle-doves, beside many small birds. The air is temperate, they having sea-breezes by day, and cooling land-winds at night. The inhabitants are of a mean, low, stature, with small limbs, and little heads. They have flat foreheads, black small eyes, short low noses, and pretty large mouths. Their hair is black and straight, and their complexion tawny, but more inclined to yellow than that of other Indians. The chief trades are goldsmiths, blacksmiths, and carpenters; they build pretty good vessels for the sea, and easily collect sulphur enough for all sorts of use, from the several burning mountains. Their houses are built on posts, from 14 to 20 feet high: and they have ladders to go up out of the streets. They have but one floor, which is divided into several rooms, and the roofs are covered with palmetto leaves.

MISSISSIPPI, a considerable river of N. America, which is the great channel of the waters of the Ohio, the Illinois, and their numerous branches from the E, and of the Missouri and other rivers from the W. Its source is unknown, but its length (in a southerly direction) is supposed to be upward of 3000 m. in all its windings, to its entrance into the Gulf of Mexico, between the 89th and 90th degrees of W lon. In this river, in lat. 44 30 N, are the Falls of St. Anthony, where the whole river, which is more than 250 yards wide, falls perpendicularly about 30 feet.

Mis Sliabh, or Mountains of the Moon, two mountains of Ireland; one in Antrim, Ulster, the other in Kerry, Munster, near Tralee Bay.

MISSOURI, a large river of N. America, whose source is unknown. It joins the Mississippi, in lat. 39 N and lon. 91 W, but is a longer, broader, and deeper river than that, and is, in fact, the principal stream. It has been ascended by the French traders upwards of 1200 m. and from the depth and breadth of the river, at that distance, appeared to be navigable much higher.

Misterton, Leices. E of the Avon, opposite to Lutterworth. Misterton, Nott. in the N part of the county, called North Clay. Mistley, Essex, near Manningtree, is generally called Mistley Thorn. Its port here on the Orwell, called Ipswich Water, has several vessels in the coasting trade. Mistole, Kent, SW of Canterbury. Miston, Berks, between Wantage and Abingdon.

MOCAMPOUR, a town and country of India, N of Bengal. Lat. 27 35 N. lon. 85 37 E.

MOCHA, a considerable town, with a harbour of Yemen, in Arabia, built about 400 years ago; it is surrounded by walls, consisting of half stone and half earth; and several towers, guarded by soldiers. The women, except a small number of the common sort, never appear in the streets in the day time, but visit each other in the evening. Over their other dress, they wear a large veil of painted calico, that they can see through without being seen. They have also little buskins of Morocco leather: some of the women of rank are handsome, and not browner than the Spanish women. Mocha was the last city in Yemen of which the Turks retained possession. It has now no other master than the Iman. The inhabitants are computed at 10,000 without comprehending the Armenians, or the Jews, who inhabit the suburbs. Here are about 700 Banians, Rajaputs, and other Indians, who, when they have made a small fortune, commonly return to India. The English engross, almost exclusively, the trade of this place, which consists (the Arabs having scarcely any other article for exportation) in exporting coffee, and importing iron (of which a great quantity is sold in Arabia), purchased chiefly from the Danes; and they often gain considerably by carrying money to India, with which the Arabian merchants intrust them. It is seated in a dry, sandy country, abounding in date-trees, near the Straits of Babelmandel. Lat. 13 19 N lon. 43 23 E.

MODENA, a city of Italy, capital of the Modenese, seated between the rivers Secchia and Penaro. It is pretty large and populous, having several piazzas; but the streets are narrow, the houses without beauty or symmetry, and the walks low and dark. The churches have little or nothing worth notice, but the ducal palace is large and splendid, and is richly furnished. The picture-gallery consists of six rooms, all filled with select pieces of the most famous masters. In a chamber under the cathedral is shown the so-much-talked-of Secchia rapita, or well-bucket, with iron hoops, taken in a petty war from the doors of one of the inhabitants of Bologna. The inhabitants are said to be 40,000. It is 22 m. NW of Bologna. Lat. 44 39 N lon. 11 18 E.

MODENESE, THE, or the territory of Modena, is bounded on the W by the duchy of Parma, and the state of Genoa; on the N by the duchy of Mantua; on the E by the Bolognese; and on the S by part of Tuscany and the republic of Lucca. It is about 60 m. in its greatest length, and from 20 to 36 in breadth. The soil is fertile in corn, wine, oil, fruits, and other productions. It also feeds a great number of cattle. The duchy of Modena consists of Modena Proper, the duchies of Reggio, and Mirandola, the principalities of Correggio, Carpi, and Novellara, with a few other estates.

MOHILLA, one of the Comora Islands, between the N end of the island of Madagascar and the continent of Africa. The inland parts are mountainous and woody, and there are villages scattered here and there, whose houses are made of reeds and straw. The inhabitants tattoo their skins. Some of them are Mahometans, and have a few mosques, built with wood and straw without, and matted neatly within. It produces buffaloes, goats, tortoises, hens, large bats, cameleons, rice, pease, honey, cocoa-nuts, plantains, oranges, lemons, citrons, pine-apples, cucumbers, tamarinds, and sugar-canes. There are several fine streams, and the grass and trees are green all the year. The cattle, called buffaloes, have a great bunch on their shoulders, but in other respects are not like those of the East Indies. Here is a good road for ships. Lat. 12 30 S lon. 44 5 E.

MOHILEF, or MOGILEY, one of the 41 governments of the Russian Empire, containing 12 districts, part of Lithuania, dismembered from Poland, by the partition treaty of 1772. Its capital is

The principal rivers are the Pruth, Moldau, Bardalach, and Sereth. The soil is rich and it abounds in good pastures, which feed a great number of horses, oxen, and sheep: it also produces corn, pulse, honey, wax, fruits, with plenty of game, fish, and fowls. The inhabitants are Christians of the Greek church. The Turks oblige the hospodar, or waiwode, to pay an annual tribute, and to raise a large body of troops at his own expence, in time of war. Jassy is the capital.

MOLE, a mountain in the depart. of Mont Blanc, which from its height and fine sloping peak, is an object of great beauty, when seen from the Lake of Geneva.

Mole, in ancient deeds called Emley, a river in Surry, which is supposed to run under ground from Boxhill, near Darking, till it appears again near Leatherhead; it afterwards enters the Thames opposite Hampton Court.

Perhaps it is rather absorbed, especially in dry seasons, by a tract of soft ground, called the Swallows, near two miles in length, and by caverns in the sides of the banks: yet not so far as to prevent a constant stream from taking its course in an open channel above ground, winding in the valleys from Darking to Leatherhead, except in a very dry summer; in such seasons, at Burfordbridge, beyond Mickleham, its channel is sometimes dry. Mole, Kent, N of Tunbridge. Mole-Hall, Essex, near Tendring. Mole, or Moad-Hall, Essex, near Bardfield. Molecop, or Mowcop, Staffordshire, on the borders of Cheshire, towards Congleton. Molesworth, Cheshire, in Delamere Forest. Molesworth, Huntingdons. MOLUCCAS, or SPICE ISLANDS, a cluster of small but valuable islands in the Eastern Ocean, lying mostly within sight of each other. The principal are Ternate, Amboyna, Tydore, Machian, Timor, or Motyr, Bachian, Bourso, and Ceram. They are situated to the E and S of Celebes. Their coasts are rendered very dangerous by sands and shelves. They produce neither corn, rice, nor cattle, except goats; but they have oranges, lemons, coarse tobacco, and other fruits; and are most remarkable for spices, especially nutmegs and cloves. Here are parrots of extraordinary beauty, and many birds of paradise. They have large snakes which are not venomous, but very dangerous lizards, or land crocodiles. The natives are Pagans, but there are many Mahometans. All the particular kings of these islands are subject to the king of Ternate, who is in alliance with the Dutch. Most of them have been reduced by the English, since the commencement of the last war.

MOLWITZ, a town of Brieg, Silesia.

MOMBAZA, or MONBAZA, a town and country of Africa, on the eastern coast, in Zanguebar, S of Melinda. The soil is fruitful, producing rice, millet, and other grain, variety of fruit-trees, vegetables, and esculents. Here is also plenty of cattle and poultry, and the country abounds with springs of fresh water. The climate is temperate, and the air healthy. The city was held some time by the Portuguese, but they were driven out in 1631, by an Arabian scheik, and their converts are mostly turned Mahometans. Lat. 3 45 S lon. 39 0 E.

They assume to be of the same original as those who accompanied Tamerlane in the conquests of India, Persia, and other countries, and called, in most histories, Moguls. The country is very little known, except that part of it which the caravans pass through in travelling from Russia to China. The Monguls dwell in tents, or little moveable houses, and live entirely on the produce of their cattle, which are horses, camels, cows, and sheep. They exchange their commodities for rice, sugar, tea, tobacco, cotton, cloth, and several sorts of household utensils; not having the use of money. The religion of the Monguls of the W is that of the Dalay Dama, which is full of ceremonies, not unlike Popery.

MONMOUTH, the county town of Monmouths. pleasantly seated at the confluence of the rivers Wye, Mynnow, and Frothy, which almost surround it. It is a large handsome town, contains 670 houses, and 3,503 inhab. and carries on a considerable trade with Bristol by the Wye. In its once stately castle, the remains of which show it to have been very strong, Henry V. from hence called Henry of Monmouth, the conqueror of France, was born. It is 21 m. W by S of Gloucester, and 128 W by N of London. A plentiful market for corn and provisions on Satur. Fairs on Whitsun Tuesday, Sept. 4th, and Nov. 22d.

MONMOUTH, a town of New Jersey.

MONMOUTHSHIRE, a county of England, bounded on the N by Herefords. and Brecknocks. on the E by Gloucesters. on the SE by the mouth of the Severn, and on the W by the counties of Brecknock and Glamorgan. Its extent from N to S is about 28 m. and from E to W 20. It is divided into 6 hundreds, and contains 7 market towns, 127 parishes, 11,766 inhabited houses, and 62,127 inhab. The air is temperate and healthy, and the soil fruitful, though mountainous and woody. The hills feed sheep, goats, and horned cattle; and the vallies produce plenty of grass and corn. Beside the Wye, the Mynnow, and the Rhyney, or Rumney, this county has almost peculiar to itself the river Usk, which divides it into two unequal portions, the eastern, and larger part of which is a tract, fertile, on the whole, in corn and pasture, and well wooded. It abounds with limestone which is burnt on the spot, for the general manure of the country. The smaller western portion is mountainous, and, in great part, unfavourable for cultivation; whence it is devoted to the feeding of sheep. It has several long, narrow valleys, watered by streams that fall into the Bristol Channel. All the rivers above mentioned, particularly the Wye and Usk, abound with fish, especially salmon and trout. Monmouths. was formerly reckoned one of the counties of Wales; and, from the names of its towns and villages, its mountainous, rugged surface, as well as its situation beyond the Wye, which seems to form a natural boundary between England and Wales in this part; it certainly partakes most of the character of the latter country, though, since the reign of Charles II. when it was added to the Oxford circuit, it has been considered as an English county. The people use the Welsh language, but the English tongue is coming more into use. The principal manufacture of this county is flannels.

MONNERON, a small island in the Channel of Tartary.

MONOEMUGI, or NIMAAMA, a kingdom of Africa, lying near the equator, said to be bounded by Abyssinia on the N, Mongallo, Mozambique, and other states of Zanguebar on the E, Monomotapa on the S, and Congo and Angola on the W, but the real limits are unknown. The sovereign, however, is rich and powerful, having subdued most of the petty kings around. His subjects carry on a commerce with Abyssinia and the eastern coasts in gold, and vast quantities of ivory, elephants being very numerous here, which they exchange for European and Indian commodities.

MONOMOTAPA, a country of Africa, extending from the Indian Sea to a considerable distance from it, between lat. 15 0 and 23 0 S, and between lon. 24 and 35 E. The climate is temperate, the air is clear and healthy, and the soil fertile, well watered, and abounding with pasture grounds. Sugar-canes grow here without cultivation. There are a great many ostriches, and vast herds of elephants; their forests swarm with wild beasts and game, and on their pasture-grounds are bred vast multitudes of cattle. Their rivers abound with gold as well as fish, and they have mines of silver. They exchange their gold and silver with the Portuguese for cotton-cloth, and other merchandise, and trinkets brought from India and Europe. The houses in Benemotapa, the metropolis, called by some Medrogan, are white-washed within and without, and adorned with beautiful cloths of cotton, finely wrought and dyed. The palace is a large spacious fabric of wood, well flanked with towers, and with four avenues or stately gates, continually kept by a numerous guard. The natives are all black, with woolly hair, notwithstanding their distance from the equator. They believe in one God that created the world, and admit of polygamy. The metropolis is about 20 m. W of Sofala.

MONOPOLI, a town of Bari, Naples, situated on the Adriatic.

MONS, called by the Flemings BERGHEN in HANEGOW, a city of the late Austrian Hainault, having manufactures of says, grograms, &c. and a good trade. It was taken by the Duke of Luxembourg, in 1691, and by the Duke of Marlborough and Prince Eugene, Oct. 20, 1709. MONTPELLIER, a large, rich, and beautiful city, in the depart. of Herault. Before the revolution, here was a university, with a celebrated school of medicine, founded by physicians, who were expelled from Spain in the year 1180. The scarlet gown of that witty philosopher, Rabelais, with which doctors of physic are, or were, invested here, at taking their degrees, has long since ceased to be an original, the students having, from time to time, cut off little slips, so that the robe now, or lately used, is, at least, the third or fourth substitute. Here is a botanic garden, the first established in Europe, and an academy of sciences. The town-house is remarkable for its halls, which are embellished with fine paintings. It has many fine houses, and several stately edifices, but the streets are very narrow. The number of inhabitants is 32,700, who trade in verdigrease, which is the principal manufacture, wool, wine, aqua-vitæ, Hungary-water, cinnamon-water, capillaire, essence of bergamot, lemons, &c. also in woollen carpets, dimities, fustians, and silk stockings. These commodities are sent, by the canal, to Cette, which is the sea-port of Montpellier. The air is extremely healthy, and a great number of persons flock hither, from all parts, to recover their health. Montpellier is pleasantly seated upon a hill, by the river Lez, 5 m. from the Mediterranean, 27 SW of Nismes, and 212 S by E of Paris.

MONT REAL, a town of Arragon; and a town of Navarre, both in Spain: and a town of Sicily, 3 m. WSW of Palermo.

MONTREAL, an isle of N. America, in the river St. Lawrence, about 30 m. in length, and 12 in breadth. The soil is very fertile, and the air wholesome. It was surrendered by the French, in 1760, to the English, by a capitulation, by which all Canada was likewise ceded. It has a town of the same name, with wide, open streets, built on the side of the river, whence there is a gradual, easy ascent to what is called the Upper Town. It is pretty strongly fortified by a citadel, wall, bastions, &c. and has suffered much by fires, since it has been in the possession of the English. The only staple commodity is furs, and the skins of foxes, racoons, deer, and other peltry, produced by their trade with the Indians, together with corn and lumber to the W. Indies. Montreal is now the capital of the province of Upper Canada, and is 120 m. SW of Quebec, and 110 N of Albany. Lat. 45 38 N lon. 73 W.

MONTROSE, a town and borough of Angusshire, or Forfar, containing 1064 houses, and 8955 inhab. At high water it is almost surrounded by the sea. The harbour is a fine semicircular bason, with a handsome stone pier; and a great number of trading vessels belong to this port. The buildings are neat, and many of them in the modern taste. The most remarkable are the town-house, the presbyterian church, and an elegant episcopal chapel. A great quantity of malt is made here; and there are manufactures of sail-cloth, linen, coloured and white thread, brown sheeting, Osnaburgs, and cotton stockings, as also a tannery and rope-works. The salmon fisheries on the N. and S. Esk form a valuable branch of commerce. Montrose is seated on a gentle eminence, in a peninsula, formed by the estuary of the S. Esk (over which a new bridge has been lately erected) and the German Ocean, 48 m. NE of Edinburgh.

MONTRONGE, a town of France, 2 m. S of Paris.

MONTSERRAT, a singular mountain in Catalonia, on which is a celebrated monastery and chapel, with hermitages, inhabited by monks of several nations, who entertain all that come out of devotion, or curiosity, for three days, gratis. This mountain is said to be 10 m. in circumf. and 5 high. From the top of it is a view of the country to the distance of 150 m. It is 20 m. NW of Barcelona.

MONTSERRAT, a well-watered fruitful island in the W. Indies, discovered, in 1493, by Columbus, and so named by him from its resemblance to the above mentioned mountain in Spain. It is about 9 m. in length, and as much in breadth, and is divided into two parishes. The mountains are covered with cedar, cypress, the iron-tree, with other woods, and some odoriferous shrubs. As to soil, animals, and commerce, Montserrat is much the same as the other Caribbee Islands. It is possessed by the English, and is 30 m. SW. of Antigua. Lat. 16 54 N lon. 61 34 W.

MORLACHIA, a mountainous country, chiefly in the N part of Dalmatia, the inhabitants of which are called Morlacks, or Morlacchi. They inhabit the pleasant valleys of Koter, along the rivers Kerka, Cettina, Narenta, and among the inland mountains of Dalmatia. They are said, by some, to be of Wallachian extraction; but this is denied by Abbé Fortis, who thinks their origin involved in the darkness of barbarous ages. Among a variety of curious particulars respecting their manners and customs, he presents some very pleasing traits of character. "Friendship," he says, "is lasting among the Morlacchi. They have even made it a kind of religious point, and tie the sacred bond at the foot of the altar. The Sclavonian ritual contains a particular benediction, for the solemn union of two male or two female friends, in the presence of the congregation. He was present at the union of two young women, who were made Posestre, in the church of Perussich. The satisfaction," he continues, "that sparkled in their eyes, when the ceremony was performed, gave a convincing proof, that delicacy of sentiment can lodge in minds not formed, or rather not corrupted by society which we call civilized. The male friends, thus united, are called Pobratimi, and the females Posestreme, which mean half-brothers and half-sisters. Friendships between those of different sexes are not bound with so much solemnity, though perhaps in more ancient and innocent ages it was also the custom. From these consecrated friendships among the Morlacchi, and other nations of the same origin, it should seem, that the sworn brothers arose, a denomination frequent enough among the common people in many parts of Europe. If discord happens to arise between two friends, among the Morlacchi, it is talked of, over all the country, as a scandalous novelty; and there have been some examples of it of late years, to the great affliction of the old Morlacchi, who attribute the depravity of their countrymen, to their intercourse with the Italians. Wine, and strong liquors, of which the nation is beginning to make daily abuse, after our example, will, of course, produce the same bad effects as among us."

MORLAIX, a considerable sea-port in the depart. of Finisterre, with a tide-harbour. The church of Notre-Dame is a singular structure, and the hospital is very handsome; the inhab. carry on a considerable trade in linen, hemp, and tobacco. It is seated on a river of the same name, 30 m. NE of Brest.

MOROCCO, an empire of Africa, comprehending a considerable part of the ancient Mauritania, bounded on the W by the Atlantic Ocean, on the E by Algiers and Biledulgerid, on the N. by the Mediterranean, and on the S by Zahara. Its greatest length is about 450 m.; and, where widest, about 390. The territories of Morocco are formed by the union of several small kingdoms, anciently limited to a single province, and perpetually at variance with each other, till, at last, they were all subdued, and united under one sovereign, by the sherifs. The S part of the empire contains the kingdoms of Suz, Tarudant, Morocco Proper, Tafiletz, and Segilmessa; and the N part, those of Fez, Mequinez, and Tremesen; but the latter having been conquered by the Turks of Algiers, is now a part of that regency. The air of this country is very pure, and pretty temperate, especially to the N of Mount Atlas. The soil, though sandy and dry on the western coast, is exceedingly fertile; the land containing within itself salts sufficient to make it fruitful. The increase of corn is often as sixty to one. The fruits, such as vines, figs, melons, apricots, apples, pears, olives, and the prickly pear, or Barbary fig, the palm-tree, as well as the pastures, are excellent, but dates ripen with difficulty, and indeed the country, &c. is not properly cultivated, as two thirds of it, at least, lie waste. Acorns, which taste like chesnuts, salt and wax, abound here. The humidity of the atmosphere is so corrosive, that it quickly covers with rust, iron, steel, metals, and even the keys and scissars carried in the pocket. The Moors make food of the locusts; prodigious quantities of them are brought to market, salted and dried like red herrings. The inhabitants are Mahometans, of a tawny complexion, robust, and very skilful in managing a horse and wielding a lance. There are two sorts of inhabitants; the Arabs, who dwell in moveable villages, composed of about 100 tents, and the Bereberies, or Brebes, who are the ancient inhabitants, and dwell in cities and towns. There are a great number of Christian slaves, and some merchants, upon the coast, beside a multitude of Jews, who carry on almost all the trade; especially by land with the negroes, to whom they send large caravans, who travel over vast deserts, almost destitute of water. They carry with them woollen manufactures, silk, salt, &c. and, in return, have slaves, gold, and elephants' teeth. Out of the slaves the emperor recruits his cavalry. They also send large caravans to Mecca every year, partly out of devotion, and partly for trade, consisting of several thousand camels, horses, and mules. Their commodities are woollen manufactures, Morocco leather, indigo, cochineal, ostrich feathers, salt, and wax; in return for which they have silks, muslins, calicos, coffee, and drugs. In the deserts are lions, tigers, leopards, and serpents of several kinds. The fruits are dates, figs, grapes, almonds, lemons, oranges, melons, pomegranates, apples, pears, &c. They have also flax and hemp, but little timber. The naval force consists chiefly of rovers, who now and then take large prizes, especially those belonging to Sallee. The emperor is absolute, his will being a law, and he often exercises great cruelties. His usual taxes are, one tenth of the goods of his Mahometan subjects, and six crowns a year of the Jews; but he often breaks through these rules; and seizes what he pleases. He can bring 100,000 men into the field, half of which are foot, and half horse; but they are poorly armed, and know but little of the art of war.

MOROCCO, the capital city of the kingdom of Morocco, seated in a beautiful plain, planted with palm-trees, formed by a chain of mountains on the N, having Mount Atlas, from which it is distant about 20 m. on the S and E. Though one of the capitals of the empire (for there are three, Morocco, Mequinez, and Fez), it has nothing to recommend it but its great extent, and the royal palace. It is inclosed by remarkable strong walls, built of tabby, the extent of which still exists entire, and supposes a city which might contain 300,000 souls; they are flanked by square towers, and surrounded by a wide and deep ditch. The mosques are more numerous than magnificent. The streets are narrow, dirty, and irregular, and many of the houses uninhabited, and falling to ruin. Those which are decent are built of tabby, and inclosed in gardens; but the generality of them, which are not better than ruins of houses heaped one upon another, serve only to harbour thieves, who lurk among them, in order to rob passengers. M. Chenier doubts whether Morocco contains 30,000 inhab. even when the court is there. The Jews, who are pretty numerous here, have a separate town, walled in, and under the charge of an alcade, appointed by the emperor. They have a market of their own; and when they enter the Moorish town, market, or palace, they are compelled to be bare-footed. It has two gates, which are regularly shut every evening at nine o'clock, after which no person can enter or depart till they are opened the next morning. The palace is a very extensive and solid building, with gates composed of Gothic arches, embellished with ornaments in the Arabian taste. Within the walls are various courts and gardens, elegantly laid out by European gardeners. Lat. 31 12 N lon. 6 45 W.

MORON, a town in Seville, Andalusia, and a town in the depart. of Morbihan.

MOROTOI, one of the Sandwich Isles, about 7 m. WNW of Mowee. Yams are its principal produce; yet it has but little wood. The coast, on the southern and western sides of the island, forms several bays, which promise a tolerable shelter from the trade winds. Lat. 21 10 N lon. 157 14 W.

MORPETH, a borough town of Northumb. seated on the river Wansbeck, 28 m. N of Durham, and 287 N by W of London. A good market on Sat. for corn, cattle, and provisions, and a very large one on Wed. for live cattle. Fairs on Wed. Thurs. and Fri. before Whitsunday; and the Wed. before July 22d.

MOSAMBIQUE, a kingdom of Africa, on the coast of Zanguebar, so called from the capital of the same name, situated on an island, principal of 3 islands which form a part of the kingdom. This island is not more than 3 m. in length, and half as much in breadth, and is about 2 m. from the continent. It was seized by the Portuguese in 1497, and they have kept possession of it ever since. The town is large, well built, and rich, with handsome churches, and convents, and a fort or castle, the strongest and best contrived the Portuguese have on this coast. The soil, on the continent, is fat and fertile, and the country breeds numerous herds of cattle, and sheep with large tails. They also swarm with stags, wild boars, other wild beasts, and elephants so fierce and destructive, that the natives dare not stir far from their homes without lighted firebrands in their hands to frighten them away. The country has also rich mines of gold. The governor is changed every three years, and the Portuguese export gold, silver, copper, elephants' teeth, ebony, wax, rice, other provisions, slaves and cattle, in exchange for little bells, knives, scissars, razors, and other European goods. Their ships always call here in going to the East Indies; and the harbour is so commodious, that whole fleets may anchor here, and refit their vessels, as well as provide themselves with all necessaries; and they have a large hospital for sick sailors. Lat. 15 5 S lon. 40 49 E.

MOSCOVY. See RUSSIA.

MOSCOW, one of the most ancient and conspicuous provinces of Russia, formerly a duchy, but now one of the 41 governments of that vast empire. Its capital is of the same name.

MOSCOW, a large city of the Russian empire, capital of the government of Moscow, and formerly of the whole empire. It may be considered as a town built upon the Asiatic model, but gradually becoming more and more European; exhibiting, in its present state, a motley mixture of discordant architecture. It is distributed into the following divisions. 1. Kremelin, which is the central and highest part of the city, surrounded by high walls of stone and brick, two m. in circumf. This division is not deformed by wooden houses. It contains the ancient palace of the czars, several churches, two convents, the patriarchal palace, and the arsenal, now in ruins. 2. The Khitaigorod, or the Chinese town, which is much larger than the Kremelin: it contains the university, the printing-house, and many other public buildings, with all the tradesmen's shops. The houses are mostly stuccoed, or white-washed; and it has the only street in Moscow in which the houses stand close to each other, without any interval between them. 3. The Bielgorod, or White Town, which runs round the two preceding divisions: it takes its name from a white wall, by which it was formerly surrounded. 4. Semlainogorod, which environs all the other three quarters; and is so denominated from a circular rampart of earth by which it is encompassed. The two last mentioned divisions exhibit a grotesque group of churches, convents, palaces, brick and wooden houses, and mean hovels. 5. The Sloboda, or suburbs, which form a vast exterior circle round all the parts already described, and are invested by a low rampart and ditch. These suburbs contain, besides buildings of all kinds, corn-fields, much open pasture, and some small lakes, which give rise to the Neglina. The Moskva, from which the city takes its name, flows through it in a winding channel; but, excepting in spring, is only navigable for rafts. It receives the Yausa in the Semlainogorod, and the Neglina at the western extremity of the Kremelin; but the beds of both these last mentioned rivulets are, in summer, little better than dry channels. Moscow exhibits an astonishing degree of extent and variety, irregularity, and contrast. The streets, in general, are very long and broad. Some of them are paved; others, particularly in the suburbs, are formed with trunks of trees, or are boarded with planks like the floor of a room. Wretched hovels are blended with large palaces; cottages of one story stand next to the most stately mansions; many brick structures are covered with wooden tops; some of the wooden houses are painted; others have iron doors and roofs. Numerous churches appear in every quarter, built in a peculiar style of architecture; some with domes of copper, others of tin, gilt, or painted green, and many roofed with wood. In a word, some parts of this vast city have the appearance of a sequestered desert; others, the quarters of a populous town; some of a poor village; others of a great capital. Moscow is certainly the largest town in Europe; its circumf. within the rampart that incloses the suburbs, being 26 m.; but it is built in such a straggling manner, that its population corresponds, in no degree, with its extent. It has, however, been pretty well ascertained: it contains, within the ramparts, 200,000 souls. It is still the most populous city in the empire, notwithstanding the residence of the court is at Petersburgh. Here the chief nobles reside, who do not belong to the court: they here support a large number of retainers: gratify their taste for a ruder and more expensive magnificence in the ancient feudal style; and are not, as at St. Petersburgh, eclipsed by the superior splendor of the court. The places of public worship in Moscow, including chapels, amount to above 1000; of these, 484 are public churches, 199 of which are of brick, stuccoed, or white-washed: and the others of wood, painted red. Some of their bells are of a stupendous size: they hang in belfries detached from the church, are fixed immoveably to the beams, and are rung by a rope tied to the clapper. It has always been esteemed here a meritorious act of religion to present a church with bells; and the piety of the donor has been measured by their magnitude. Accordingly, Boris Godunuf, who gave a bell of 288,000 pounds to the cathedral of Moscow, was the most pious sovereign of Russia, till he was surpassed by the empress Anne, who presented a bell that weighs 432,000 pounds, and is the largest in the known world. Among the public institutions in Moscow, is the Foundling Hospital, endowed, in 1764, by Catharine, and supported by voluntary contributions; to encourage which, she granted to all benefactors some valuable privileges, in proportion to the extent of their liberality; and, it is remarkable, that a private merchant, named Dimidof, has expended on this charity 200,000l. There are, besides the university, 3 academies, 1 theatre; besides 3 gymnasia. The gardens hereabouts yield the famous transparent apple, called by the Russians Naliwi, with variety of other fruits. Moscow is the centre of the inland commerce of Russia, particularly connecting the trade between Europe and Siberia. The navigation to this city is formed solely by the Moskva, which rises near Ruza, and falling into the Occa, near Colomna, communicates, by that river, with the Volga. But as the Moskva is navigable in the spring only, upon the melting of the snows, the principal merchandise is conveyed upon sledges in winter. On the 14th Sept. 1813, when the French army, with Buonaparte at their head, entered Moscow, nearly two thirds of the city was consumed by fire, and left hardly any shelter for the troops but bare walls, and he was obliged to evacuate it on the 19th following, having committed every excess and every atrocity it was possible to glut his ferocity with, on those unfortunates who had not time or opportunity to fly the city. Even tombs and coffins were broken open for plunder of the dead bodies, and where the shells of magnificent buildings remained they were battered down by cannon, but nearly the whole has again been re-built almost in its original state. This city is 460 m. SE of Petersburgh, 600 ENE of Warsaw, 1200 N by E of Constantinople. Lat. 55 45 N lon. 37 31 E.

Mosley, in the parish of Ashton-under-Line, Staffords.

MOSQUITO SHORE, a country of Mexico, in N. America, lying on the Atlantic Ocean. It is bounded on the N and E by the sea, on the S by Nicaragua, and on the W by Honduras. In magnitude it exceeds the kingdom of Portugal; is well watered by navigable rivers and lakes; abounds in fish, game, and provisions of all sorts; furnishes every necessary for raising cattle and stock on plantations of every kind, and to any extent; and is clothed with woods, producing timber for every use and purpose at land or sea. The soil is superior to that of the W. India Islands; the air and climate are more salubrious; and the destructive ravages of hurricanes and earthquakes have never been known here. The Spaniards have no settlements in the Mosquito country, and reckon it a part of Honduras. When they first invaded this part of Mexico, they massacred most of the natives, which gave those that escaped into the inaccessible part of the country, an insuperable aversion to them; and they have always appeared ready to join Europeans that came upon their coasts, and particularly the English, who frequently came hither against the Spaniards. The Mosquito-men being excellent marksmen, the English long employed them in striking the maratee fish, &c. and many of the Mosquito Indians went to Jamaica, and sailed with the English in their voyages. They are so situated between morasses and inaccessible mountains, and a coast full of rocks and shoals, that no attempts against them by the Spaniards, whom they mortally hate, could ever succeed. The connection between the English and the Mosquitos no longer exists: By a convention with Spain, in 1786, the former, in consideration of certain cessions on the coast of Honduras, agreed to evacuate this country totally; and it is now a province of Spain. See HONDURAS.

Its products are cotton, wine, sugar, opium, galls, brimstone, &c. It is, or has been subject to the scheiks; but its capital, Moultan, has been garrisoned by the king of Candahar, ever since 1779.

MOULTAN, one of the most ancient cities in Hindostan, capital of the province of the same name. Thevenot describes it as a city of small extent, but strongly fortified, having a pagoda temple much reverenced. He mentions the river that led to Moultan as having been partly choked up in his time (1665), and that this had greatly lessened its trade. He also notices a particular sect of Hindoos in this city, called Catry; a tribe, which he elsewhere explains to mean Rajpoots, or warriors; that is the Kuttry tribe, which Rennel supposed to be the Catheri, or Cathei, with whom Alexander warred on the banks of the Malli. The king of Candahar keeps a garrison here. The country of Moultan has Lahore to the N, Delhi to the E, Agimere and Sindy to the S, and Persia to the W. Moultan had formerly considerable manufactures of cotton, and is seated on the Chunaub, 200 m. SW of Lahore, and 800 m. from the sea by the course of the river. Lat. 29 52 N lon. 70 40 E.

Mourne, a river of Donegal, which issues from a lake of the same name in that county, and runs into the Foyle at Lifford.

MOURZOOK, a city, the capital of Fezzan, in Africa, situated on a small river, and supplied with water from a multitude of springs and wells. Being formerly built of stone, it still retains the appellation of a Christian town; and the medley which it presents to the eye, of the vast ruins of ancient buildings, and the humble cottages of earth and sand that form the dwellings of its present Arab inhab. is singularly grotesque and strange. It is surrounded by a high wall, which enables the government to collect, at its three gates, a tax on all goods (provisions excepted) that are brought for the supply of its people. A caravan sets out annually from Mesurata to this place; and hence, the Fezzaneers themselves dispatch, every year, a caravan to Cashna, and another to Bornou. Mourzook is 262 m. S of Mesurata. Lat. 27 20 N lon. 15 5 E.

Mousehole, Cornw. on the W side of Mountsbay; here is a harbour for fishing-boats. Mouseley, Leicesters. NW of Harborough, in parish of Knaptoft. Moushall, Staffords. S of Wolverhampton. Moushold-Hill, an eminence near Norwich, where Ket hanged his followers in 1549.

MOUSUL, or MOSUL, a town of Turkey, in Asia, in Diarbec, seated on the W bank of the river Tigris. It is a large place surrounded by high walls, and defended by a strong castle; but the houses are ill-built, and in several places gone to ruins. It is a place of great trade, particularly in cloth, and all sorts of cottons and silks. The inhab. are a mixture of Arabians, Persians, Turks, Curds, Maronite and Armenian Christians. Here are considerable manufactures of cotton. Merchandise from India is brought hither by the way of Bassora, and European goods by the way of Aleppo. At Elkash, near this town, the Nestorian patriarch of Syria resides. It is 130 m. SE of Diarbekir, and 190 NW of Bagdad. Lat. 35 40 N lon. 41 15 E.

MOUTIER, or MONSTIER, anciently FORUM CLAUDII, and, in the succeeding ages, MONASTERIUM CENTRONUM, a town of the Tarentine, in the depart. of Mont Blanc, seated on the river Isere, at its confluence with the Doiron, 27 m. MOWEE, one of the Sandwich Islands, about 140 m. in circumference. A low isthmus divides it into two circular peninsulas, of which the eastern is double the size of the western. The mountains in both rise to a great height, and may be seen at the distance of more than 30 leagues. The northern shores, like those of Owhyhee, afford no soundings, and the country presents the same appearance of verdure and fertility. Near the W point of the smaller peninsula is a spacious bay, with a sandy beech shaded with cocoa-nut trees. The country behind has a romantic appearance, the hills rising almost perpendicularly in a great variety of peaked forms; and their steep sides, and the deep chasms between them, are covered with trees. The inhab. are computed at 65,000. Lat. 20 53 N lon. 157 56 W.

Mowswell, Northumb. between Wooler and Sunderland. Mowall, Warwicks. in Wishaw parish. Moxby, Yorks. near Stillington. Moxon, Isle of Wight, in W. Medina.

MULHAUSEN, a town of Alsace, which though situated at the distance of some miles from the frontiers of Switzerland, and insulated by the French depart. of the Upper Rhine, is not only in alliance with the Helvetic confederacy, but is considered and respected as a part of it, and entitled to all the privileges enjoyed by that body. The walls of the town inclose a circumference of not more than two miles, and its whole territory is confined within a precinct of eight miles. This little republic maintained its privileges, which had been granted by the emperors in the feudal times, by contracting alliances, at different periods, with Basil, Strasburg, the towns of Alsace and Suabia, Bern, Friburg, and Soleure. In 1515, it was received into the Helvetic confederacy; which league has preserved its liberty and independence from the encroachments of the empire, on the one hand, and, on the other, from the attacks of France. The town contains about 6000 inhab. who are Protestants; and there are 2000 people in its adjacent villages. It owes its present flourishing state to its manufactures, which are chiefly of printed linens and cottons. The government is aristodemocratical. The supreme power resides in the great and little council, consisting together of 78 persons, and drawn from the burghers, whose number amounts to 700, distributed into six tribes. Mulhausen is 15 m. NW of Basle.

MULHEIM, two towns of Berg, Westphalia; one on the Ruhr, and the other on the E side of the Rhine, 3 m. N of Cologne.

MUNICH, one of the most pleasant and handsome cities in Germany, capital of the duchy of Bavaria, and containing about 40,000 inhab. The houses are high, and the streets large and spacious, with canals in many of them. The palace of the late electors of Bavaria; which now belongs to the elector-palatine of the Rhine, as Duke of Bavaria, is a stupendous structure, magnificently adorned. The cabinet of curiosities, in which are 200 marble statues and busts of Roman emperors, and some other antiques, mostly brought from Italy, the museum, the library, and the ducal gardens, attract the attention of travellers. The cathedral contains 25 chapels, and 30 altars; but the two steeples, and the tomb of one of the emperors, of black marble, adorned with statues of bronze, are the most remarkable things belonging to it. There are many other fine buildings, both ecclesiastical and civil, in this city, and the streets are straight and broad. The market-place is very beautiful; and here are manufactures of silk, velvet, woollen-cloth, and tapestry. It is seated on the river Iser, 15 m. SE of Augsburg, and 62 SSW of Ratisbon. Lat. 48 10 N lon. 11 36 E.

MUNSTER, one of the four provinces of Ireland; bounded on the N and NE by Leinster and Connaught, and on all other sides by the ocean. It is about 135 m. in length and 120 in breadth. The chief rivers are the Suier, the Audluffe, the Lee, the Bande, the Leane, and the Cashon. There are a great many bays and harbours, and many rich towns, and the air is mild and temperate. Some places are mountainous, but the valleys are embellished with corn-fields. The most general commodities are corn, cattle, wood, wool, and fish. It contains the counties of Clare, Tipperary, Waterford, Cork, Limerick, and Kerry.

MUNSTERBURG, a town and principality of Silesia, noted for the culture of hops. It is 19 m. SW of Glatz.

MUNSTER-MEINFELT, a town of Treves, 12 m. WSW of Coblentz.

MURANO, an island and town of Italy, about one mile N of Venice, formerly a very flourishing place, as its great manufactories served all Europe with looking-glasses. Instead of being cast as in England and France, the Murano mirrors are all blown in the manner of bottles.

MURAT, a town of France, in depart. of Cantal, 7 m. WNW of St. Hour.

MURCIA, a very mountainous province, formerly a kingdom of Spain, on the coast of the Mediterranean, about 115 m. in length, and 100 in breadth. Its principal rivers are the Segura and the Guadalentin. The soil is dry, because it seldom rains here, and therefore produces little corn or wine; but there is plenty of oranges, citrons, lemons, olives, almonds, figs, mulberries, rice, pulse, sugar, silk, and medicinal plants. The air is very healthful, and the principal town is of the same name.

MURCIA, a large, handsome, and populous city of Spain, capital of a province of the same name; it was a Roman city, and from its delightful situation dedicated to Venus Myrtia. It has a superb cathedral, and the steps of the steeple are so contrived, that a man may ride up to the top either on horseback or in a coach. The inns here, like those in most of the great roads, &c. of Spain, afford but wretched lodgings and accommodations, being generally kept by Gitans, or Gipsies. It is seated on a plain, which abounds in fine gardens about the city, on the river Segura, 96 m. SSW of Valencia, and 212 SE of Madrid.

Murcot, Gloucester, in Wickham parish.

MYCENE, formerly the capital of a famous kingdom in the Morea, but now reduced to a small village.

MYCONI, an island of the Archipelago, 21 m. in circumference. The harbour is very open, and deep enough for the largest ships, where they may ride secure from the N wind. There are about 500 sea-faring men in the island, who belong to about 150 vessels, and are accounted pretty good sailors. The soil is dry and mountainous, but the mountains are of no great height. Water is very scarce in summer; but in the town there is a large well, which is the only one in the island. The island produces little wheat, but plenty of partridges, quails, woodcocks, turtle-doves, rabbits, and beccaficos; beside which there are excellent grapes and figs. The inhabitants, who are about 3000, are almost all Greeks, governed by a Cadi, have fifty churches, chapels, or monasteries. Lat. 37 28 N lon. 28 51 E.

Mydloe, Huntingdons. near Hailweston. Myles, Essex, near Kelvedon. Mylston, Shropshire, near Clebury. Minchinbarrow, Somersets. near Bath. Myshall, in Carlow, Leinster. Myms, N. and S. See Mims.

MYSORE, a fortified town of Hindostan, anciently the capital of the kingdom so called. It is situated about 10 m. S from the river Cauvery, and as many S of Seringapatam.

MYSORE, a kingdom in the peninsula of Hindostan, subject to Tippoo Sultan, who styles himself regent of the country. It includes generally, beside the Mysore Proper, the countries of Bednore, Coimbettore, Canara, and Dindigul; beside the conquests of his late father, Hyder Ally, (who usurped the throne) to the northward; namely, Meritz, Soonda, Chittledroog, Harponelly, Sanore, Bancapour, Roydroog, Gooty, Condanore, Canoul, and Cuddapah. The extent of Tippoo's territory, from N to S, is near 500 m. its breadth, in the widest place (the N part of the peninsula) 330 m. but proceeding to the S, it diminishes till it ends in a point. By the peace of 1782, Hyder Ally was to relinquish all but his ancient possessions. How far his successor fulfilled the terms of that treaty, cannot easily be ascertained; but, on the termination of the late war, that prince agreed, besides paying a large sum of money, to cede one half of his dominions to the English East India Company, and their allies the Mahrattas, and the nizam of the Deccan. The country, in general, is dry, rugged, mountainous, and barren; insomuch, that sustenance for men and animals cannot be raised upon it, but by the most persevering industry in its inhabitants. See SERINGAPATAM.

Myssise, Yorks. NW of Ripon.

MYSZ, a town of Lithuania, 36 m. of Novogrodek.

NAIRN, a small sea-port and borough town of Nairns, exporting fish, corn, and yarn. It is seated at the entrance of the Frith of Murray, 10 m. E of Inverness, and 104 N of Edinburgh. It contains 623 houses. The river Nairn separates the county of Murray from Inverness, crosses Nairns, and runs into the Frith of Murray near Nairn.

NAIRNSHIRE, a populous county of Scotland, bounded on the N by the Frith of Murray, and enclosed on every other side by the counties of Inverness and Murray. Its extent from N to S is about 12 m. and its breadth about 10. It contains 1960 houses, and 8251 inhab. The soil, though rocky, is fertile, and, in general, well cultivated. It contains several lakes, which abound in fish, and some forests of firs. Nairn is the county town.

NAKSIVAN, a town of Persian Armenia, capital of a province of the same name, with an archbishop's see, some considerable bazars, caravanseras, public baths, and other buildings. It is supposed to have been the ancient Artaxata, and once contained 40,000 houses. In the last century, here were 2000 houses. It is 90 m. SE of Erivan.

NAMPHIO. See NANFIO.

NAMPTWICH, a large well-built town of Cheshire, with very regular streets, and manufactures of cotton (lately established), and of shoes. It is seated on the river Weever, near the Chester canal, which is finished here with a handsome broad bason, forming a kind of harbour. Here are salt-springs, which lie on the banks of a fresh-water stream, from which they make great quantities of fine white salt. The principal dairies of Chesh. are about this town. It is a great thoroughfare to Ireland, and is 26 m. SE of Chester, and 162 NW of London. A large market on Sat. for corn, cattle, &c.

NAMUR, a city of the Netherlands, said to take its name from an ancient idol called Nami, supposed to be Neptune. It has, or had, a very strong castle, built on the opposite side of the Sambre, on a sharp rock, and defended by Fort William, and many other considerable forts, so as to be supposed almost impregnable. In 1692, it was besieged by Louis XIV. and the Duke of Luxemburg, with an army of 120,000 men, and surrendered in sight of King William's army after an obstinate defence. Vauban and Cohorn, the two greatest engineers Europe ever bred, exhausted the whole science of attack and defence in the siege of this place. Cohorn was dangerously wounded in the defence of Fort Cohorn. Namur was, however, retaken by King William, in 1695, after many desperate, bloody, and dreadful attacks. The trenches were opened on July 11, and the citadel surrendered on the 1st day of September. The garrison, consisting of 16,000 men, was commanded by Marshal Boufflers. It is seated at the confluence of the Maese and Sambre, 25 m. SW of Liege. Lat. 50 29 N lon. 4 50 E.

NAMUR, a county of the Netherlands, one of the ten catholic provinces, lying between the rivers Sambre and Maese. It is pretty fertile, has several forests, marble quarries, and mines of iron, lead, and coal, and is about 30 m. in length and 20 in breadth. Namur is the capital.

NAMUSA, a small island in the Pacific Ocean.

NANCI, a large and handsome city, alternately capital with Luneville, of the depart. of Meurthe. It contains about 34,000 inhab. and is divided into the Old and New Town, which are separated by a canal. The first, though irregularly built, is rich and populous, and contains the palace of the ancient Dukes of Lorrain. The New Town, whose streets are as straight as a line, was already one of the finest in Europe, before the magnificent works with which Stanislaus I. titular King of Poland, and Duke of Lorrain, enriched it. Before the revolution, it had a university, an academy of sciences, and a medical college. It is 10 m. E of Toul, and 20 S of Metz. Lat. 48 41 N lon. 6 17 E.

Naneby, Leicesters. NE of Bosworth. Naneby, S of Lincoln. Naneworth, Westmorel. near Penrith.

NANFIO, an island of the Archipelago, a little to the N of the island of Santorino, about 16 m. in circumference. It has no harbour; the mountains are nothing but bare rocks, and there are not springs sufficient to water the fields. The inhab. are all Greeks, whose trade consists in onions, wax, and honey. There are vast numbers of partridges, whose eggs they endeavour to destroy every year to preserve the corn, yet there are still great numbers of them. The ruins of the temple of Apollo are yet to be seen, and consist chiefly of marble columns. Lat. 36 27 N lon. 26 10 E.

NANGASAKI, a town of Japan, situated on the W coast of the island of Ximo, with a well-frequented harbour. It is the only port of Japan open to foreigners. The inhab. carry on a great trade with the Chinese and Dutch. The latter are never suffered to come into the city, unless when their ships arrive, and then they deliver up their guns, helms, and sails, as pledges of their good behaviour. Lat. 32 32 N lon. 130 52 E.

NANKING, or KIANGNIN, a city of China, capital of the province of Kiangnan, and formerly the imperial city. It is the largest in China, being 17 m. in circumf. and about 3 m. distant from the great river Yang-tise-Chiang, from which canals are cut, so large, that vessels may enter the town. This place is greatly fallen from its ancient splendour; for it had a magnificent palace, not a vestige of which is now to be seen, as well as temples, tombs of the emperors, and other ancient monuments. A third part of the city is desolate, but the rest is extremely populous, well inhabited, and full of business. The streets are narrow, but handsome and well paved, and on each side are shops, neatly furnished. The public buildings are mean, except a few temples, the city gates, and the famous tower of porcelain, 200 feet high, and divided into nine stories, by projections, &c. covered with green varnished tiles. They had several manufactures in silk and wool. The number of the inhab. is said to be 1,000,000, without comprehending the garrison of 40,000 men. Here the physicians have their principal academy. It is seated near the river Yantsekiang, 500 m. SSE of Peking. Lat. 32 4 N lon. 119 25 E.

Nans, Cornwall, W of Redruth.

NANTCHANG, a city of China of the first rank, capital of the province of Kiangsi. It is 695 m. S of Peking.

Nantenane, in Limerick, Munster.

NANTES, an ancient and pretty large city in the depart. of Lower Loire. It is one of the most considerable places in the kingdom, and contains the richest merchants. The bridges over the river Loire, in which are some islands, are almost a league in length. The suburbs are so large, that they exceed the city. The inhab. are computed at 80,000. Before the revolution, here was a university, a society of agriculture and arts, and a school of anatomy and surgery; the merchants, also, had commonly, on their own account, more than 120 ships for Guinea, the French W. India Islands, Spain, and the Spanish colonies; indeed this port, in respect to the slave trade, might, before that time, be considered as the Liverpool of France. Vessels were fitted out here for the cod-fishery in N. America; and Nantes had a considerable share in the commerce with the United States. A great quantity of salt is made in the territory of Nantes; both at the bay of Bourgneuf, and in the salt-marshes of Guerande and Croisic. Large vessels can come no higher than Paimbœuf, which is some m. below Nantes. It is 37 m. SW of Angers, and 217 SW of Paris.

Nantgissel-cove, Cornwall, at the Land's End.

Nantglin, Denbighs. N. Wales.

Nantgynnle, Cardigan, Wales, 9 m. from Lampeter. Nantmel, Radnor, Wales, 6 m. from Rhayader. Nanton, near Winchcomb, Gloucesters.

NANTUA, a town in the depart. of Ain, situated at the extremity of a great lake of the same name, 18 m. SSE of Bourg.

NANTUCKET, an island of N. America, in the state of Massachusetts, of which it is a county, containing about 23,000 acres. It lies to the S of Cape Cod, and had once the most considerable whale fishery on the coast; but it was almost ruined by the American war. It has begun, however, to revive lately; the greatest part of the inhab. being whalers and fishermen. As the island is low, sandy, and unproductive, it is calculated for such people only as are willing to depend almost entirely on the watery element for subsistence. It has one town, called Sherburne. The inhab. are mostly quakers. Lat. 41 0 N lon. 70 0 W.

NANTWICH. See NAMPTWICH.

NANYANG, a city of China, of the province of Honan, of the first rank. It is 462 m. SSW of Peking.

NANXONG, a city of China, of the first rank, in the province of Quantong. It is 902 m. S of Peking.

NAOURS, a town of France, 9 m. N of Amiens.

NAPAUL, a province of Hindostan, between the NW part of Bengal and the mountainous ridge of Himmaleh, N of Mocampour; it is subject to Thibet. Catmandu is the capital.

NAPLES, an ancient, large, rich, and trading city of Lavora, in Italy, one of the finest in the world, capital of a kingdom of the same name, with a university. It is seated at the bottom of the bay of Naples, and is built in the form of a vast amphitheatre, sloping from the hills to the sea. Although the style of architecture is inferior to what prevails at Rome, and it cannot vie with that city in the number or magnificence of the churches, palaces, and public buildings, the private houses, in general, are better built, and the streets are broader and better paved. No street in Rome equals in beauty the Strada di Toledo at Naples; nor can any of them be compared to the beautiful streets which lie open to the bay, and here the excessive heat of the sun is often tempered with the sea-breezes, and with gales wafting the perfumes of the Campagna Felice. The houses, in general, are five or six stories in height, and flat at the top; on which are placed numbers of flower-vases, or fruit-trees, in boxes of earth, producing a very gay and agreeable effect. On the mountain, St. Erno, in a most pleasant situation, is a convent of Carthusians, on which much expence has been lavished, to render the building, the apartments, and the gardens, equal to the situation. Naples is admirably situated for commerce, and no kingdom produces the necessaries and luxuries of life in greater profusion; and yet trade is but in a languishing condition. The best silks come from Lyons, and the best woollen cloths from England. The articles exported are silk and silk stuffs, oil, sulphur, manna, rosemary, aniseed, resin, tartar, figs, soap, essences, silk waistcoats, snuff-boxes of tortoise-shell, and of the lava of Mount Vesuvius; tables and ornamental furniture, of marble. They excel in liquors and confections; particularly in one kind of confection called Diabolonis, which is sold at a very high price, and is of a very hot and stimulating nature. The inhab. are computed to be 350,000, which is very probable; for though Naples is not one-third of the size of London, yet many of the streets are here more crowded; and a great proportion of the poorer sort are obliged to spend the night in them, as well as the day, for want of habitations. There is not a city in the world, perhaps, with the same number of inhab. in which so few contribute to the wealth of the community by useful and productive labour, as Naples; the number of priests and monks, of whom there are 10,000; fidlers, lawyers, of whom there are 8,000; footmen, and lazaronies, is immense; and the last alone are computed at 40,000. The king, it is said, counts a hundred persons with the title of prince, and still a greater number with that of duke, among his subjects. Six or seven of them have estates from 10 to 13,000*l.* a year; a considerable number have possessions to about half that amount; and the annual revenue of many is not above one or two thousand pounds. The inferior order of nobility are much poorer; many counts and marquises not having above three or four hundred pounds a year paternal estate; many still less; and not a few enjoy the title without any estate whatever. Although the churches and convents of Naples are not to be compared with those of Rome in respect of magnificent architecture, or for good paintings, they surpass them in rich jewels, and the quantity of silver and golden crucifixes, vessels, and other ornaments. The cathedral is a grand Gothic edifice, and, of all the palaces, that of the king is not only the most magnificent, but in the best style of architecture. The monasteries and convents, of both sexes, are computed at 149; besides which, there are 34 houses for poor boys, girls, and women; 11 hospitals; 5 seminaries for ecclesiastics; 4 capital churches; 32 parish churches; 70 other churches and chapels; and about 130 oratories, or chapels of religious fraternities. The harbour, which is spacious, is protected by a mole; and the bay of Naples is one of the finest in the world, being almost of a circular figure, about 30 m. in diameter, shut out from the Mediterranean by the island of Caprea, and three parts of it sheltered by a circuit of woods and mountains. Naples is 110 m. SSE of Rome. Lat. 40 55 N lon. 14 20 E.

NAPLES, a kingdom of Italy, bounded on the NW by the Pope's territories; on the S and W by the Mediterranean; and on the E by the Adriatic. Its greatest length from NW to SE is upwards of 300 m. and from NE to SW from 96 to 100; its breadth is variously estimated at from 90 to 30. It is divided into 12 provinces; namely, Terra di Lavora, which was the ancient Campania Felix, and of which the city of Naples is the capital; Principato Citeriore and Ulteriore (hither and farther); Molise; Basilicata; Calabria Citeriore and Ulteriore; Abruzzo Citeriore and Ulteriore; Capitanata; Terra di Bari; and Terra di Otranto; the last three forming the ancient Apulia (now called Puglio), on the E side of the kingdom; containing 443,421 inhab. The climate is extremely hot in summer; but the most disagreeable part of the climate is the siroc, or SE wind, which is very common in spring, and is still more relaxing. In winter there is seldom any ice or snow, except on the mountains. On account of its fertility, the country has been termed a terrestrial paradise; it abounds with all sorts of grain, the finest fruits, and vegetables of all kinds, with rice, flax, oil, wine, saffron, and manna; poultry, game, and fish, are also plentiful and cheap. It affords also alum, vitriol, sulphur, rock-crystal, marble, and several sorts of minerals, together with fine wool and silk. Besides these products, and the manufactures spoken of in the account of the city of Naples, waistcoats, caps, stockings, and gloves, are also made of the hair or filaments of a shell-fish, which are warmer than those of wool, and of a beautiful glossy green. The principal mountains are the Apennines, which traverse it from S to N, and the celebrated volcano, Mount Vesuvius. One of the greatest inconveniences to which this kingdom is exposed is earthquakes (See CALABRIA), which the eruptions of Mount Vesuvius contribute in some measure to prevent. The established religion is the Romish; and the clergy and convents possess two-thirds of the whole kingdom; but the Jews are allowed to settle here. The inhab. of this country have, at all times, borne but an indifferent character among other nations; gluttony is here a predominant vice, while instances of ebriety are said to be comparatively rare. In the female sex, the passion for finery is almost superior to any other; and chastity is not accounted the characteristic virtue of the country. The breach of the conjugal vow sometimes occasions quarrels and assassinations among people of an inferior rank; and, in the metropolis, assassinations are often perpetrated from much less cogent motives. These vices are attributed to the slavery and oppression under which they groan, and to a radical defect in the administration of justice. In 1734, the Spaniards made themselves masters of Naples and Sicily, for the Infant Don Carlos; and in 1736, the emperor, by a formal instrument, ceded both these kingdoms to his heirs, male and female, and in default thereof, to his younger brother and sisters.

NAPOLI-DI-MALVASIA, a sea-port of Turkey in Europe, in the Morea; seated on the promontory of Malvasia, at the entrance of the Gulf of Napoli-di-Romania. It has a fine harbour, and a long wooden bridge, which joins it to Terra Firma, and was formerly noted for a temple of Esculapius.

NAPOLI-DI-ROMANIA, a sea-port of Turkey in Europe, in the Morea; seated at the bottom of the bay of the same name, with a spacious harbour, having a narrow mouth, through which one ship only can enter at a time, and defended by a strong castle. It is a large place, inhabited by Greeks, Turks, and Jews; and is 56 m. SW of Setines. Lat. 37 36 N lon. 23 4 E.

Nappay, Yorks. SE of Settle. Nappay, Yorks. by the Ure, near Askrig. Napsbury, Herts, near London Colony.

Napton, Warwicks. 2 m. from Southam.

NARA, a town of Niphon, in Japan.

NARANPOUR, the name of several towns in Hindostan.

NARBERTH, a town of Pembrokes. seated on the summit of a hill, 12 m. N of Pembroke, and 229 W by N of London. It had formerly a castle, the ruins of which are still visible. Market on Wed.

NARBONNE, an ancient fortified city in the depart. of Aude. In the time of the Romans, it was the capital of that part of Gaul, called Gallia Narbonensis. Some Roman inscriptions, in different parts of the city, are still visible, and the canal, from the river Aude, through the city, to the Mediterranean, was cut by them. Narbonne is famous for its honey, wheat, much esteemed for seed corn and olives, and contains about 10,000 inhab. In the cathedral, which is remarkable for its noble choir, is the tomb of Philip the Bold, king of France. It is situated in a low plain, exposed to inundations from several adjoining rivers, 5 m. from the Mediterranean, and 75 E by S of Toulouse.

NARBOROUGH, a small island near the coast of Chili, discovered by Sir John Narborough. It affords wood and water, but is without inhab. Lat. 45 12 S.

Narborough, Northampton, near East Deeping. Narborough, Norf. W of Castle-Acre. Narborough, 4 m. W of Leicester.

NARCONDAM, an island in the E. Indian Sea, 20 m. in circumf. Lat. 13 23 N lon. 94 40 E.

NARDO, a town of Otranto, Naples, 22 m. W of Otranto.

NARENZA, a town in Venetian Dalmatia, situated on a river of the same name, 36 m. NNW of Ragusa. In the year 987, the Venetians made themselves masters of this town, then possessed by the Sclavonians, who, under the title of Narentani, had seated themselves here, molesting the navigation of these parts.

NAREW, a town of Poland, 12 m. NE of Bielsk.

Narford, Norfolk, on the Nar, E of Narborough.

NARNI, a handsome town of Spoleto, in Italy, seated on the river Nera. Here are the ruins of a marble bridge, built by Augustus, one of whose arches was 150 feet high and 200 broad, as also of an aqueduct, that brings water from a spring at the distance of 15 m. It is 16 m. S of Spoleto, and 38 NNE of Rome.

NAROVA, or NARVA, a river of Russia, noted for two picturesque waterfalls. It issues from the Tchudskoi Lake, and watering Narva, flows into the Gulf of Finland, 8 m. below that town.

NARSINGAPATAM, a town of Hindostan, situated in the territory of Cattack, near the coast of the bay of Bengal, 45 m. S of Cattack.

NARVA, a town of Ingria, in Russia, in the government of Revel. The houses are built of brick, stuccoed white; and it has more the appearance of a German than of a Russian town. In the suburbs, called Ivangorod, or John's Town, the stupendous remains of an ancient fortress, built by Ivan Vassilievitch the Great, impend, in a picturesque manner, over the steep banks of the river. The principal exports from it are hemp, flax, timber, and corn. Near it is the celebrated spot where Charles XII. of Sweden, in his 19th year, gained a complete victory over the Russian army in 1700. It is situated on the river Narova, 8 m. from its mouth, in the Gulf of Finland, 68 m. SW of Petersburgh. Lat. 59 18 N lon. 27 52 E.

NARWAH, or NARWHA, a town of Hindostan in the province of Agra, seated near the river Cally Sinde, which falls below it, into the Chumbull, a branch of the Jumna. It is 98 m. S of Agra.

Naseby, Northamp. 12 m. N of Northampton, famous for a victory gained by the Parliamentarians over the Royalists, in 1645.

NATOLIA, or ANADOLI, a country formerly called Asia Minor; the most western part of Turkey in Asia; it is a large peninsula, extending from the river Euphrates, as far as the Archipelago, the Sea of Marmora, the Dardanelles, and the Strait of Constantinople, which separate it from Europe on the W. It is bounded on the N by the Black Sea, and on the S by the Mediterranean. In its modern division it comprehends the provinces of Anatolia, Caramania, Amasia, and Aladulia. Anciently it contained Bithynia, Paphlagonia, Galatia, Phrygia, Mysia, Eolia, Ionia, Lydia, Caria, Doris, Pisidia, Lycia, and Pamphylia. It is now governed by a Beglerbeg, who resides at Kiutaja, under whom are several sangiacks. The air is temperate and wholesome, the soil, in general, fertile, and the commerce considerable, particularly in carpets, leather, drugs, cotton, and silks. It is crossed by a chain of mountains formerly called Taurus, from E to W, and watered by a great number of rivers.

NATOLIA PROPER. See ANATOLIA.

NAVAN, a town of Meath, in Leinster, seated at the conflux of the Blackwater and the Boyne, 7 m. NE of Trim, and 23 NW of Dublin.

NAVARINO, a large and populous town of the Morea, with an excellent harbour, defended by a citadel. It is situated on the W coast, on the Gulf of Zonchio, 8 m. NE of Modon, and 17 NW of Coron.

NAVARRE, a country of Europe, and formerly a kingdom, lying partly in France and partly in Spain, and divided into the Upper and Lower. The Upper, which belongs to Spain, extends about 54 m. in length and 45 in breadth. The air is more mild, temperate, and wholesome, than in the neighbouring provinces of Spain; and, though a mountainous country, it is pretty fertile, abounding in good corn, excellent wine, venison, and wildfowl, good pastures, exceedingly well stocked with sheep and goats; and also in iron mines. The inhabitants are polite, hardy, lively, and laborious. It is divided into five jurisdictions, whose capital towns are Pampeluna, Estella, Tudela, Olita, and St. Guesca. Lower Navarre is subject to France, and now forms the department of the Lower Pyrenees. It is separated from Spanish Navarre by the Pyrenees, and is a mountainous, barren, country, about 20 m. in length and 12 in breadth. In 1620, Louis XIII. son of Henry IV. annexed Lower Navarre and Bearn to the crown of France.

NAVARRE, NEW, a province in Mexico, bounded on the S by Culiacan, and on the W by the Gulph of California. The chief Spanish town is St. Juan de Cinaloa.

NAVARREINS, a town in the depart. of the Lower Pyrenees, seated on the river Gave d'Oleron, 18 m. W of Pau.

NAXKOW, a town of Denmark, in the isle of Laland, 60 m. SW of Copenhagen, with a harbour commodious for trade, and a plentiful fishery. Lat. 54 52 N lon. 11 31 E.

NAXOS, or NAXIA, the most fertile island in the Archipelago, about 50 m. in circumf. It is covered with orange, olive, lemon, cedar, citron, pomegranate, fig, and mulberry trees, and their wine still maintains its former excellence. It has no harbour, and yet they carry on a considerable trade in barley, wine, figs, cotton, silk, flax, cheese, salt, oxen, sheep, mules, and oil. They burn only oil of mastic, though olive-oil is exceedingly cheap. It contains about 8000 inhab. chiefly Greeks and Latins, and between 40 and 50 villages. They have here a mine of emery, which is so common and so cheap, that the English often use it for ballast. The female dress of this island is absurd in its appearance. The two wings of black velvet, which they fix behind to their shoulders, are altogether preposterous. The Greek women at Smyrna cover their breast with a single gause: at Naxia they wear a heavy stomacher or breast-piece of velvet, covered with embroidery and small pearls; and they wear round their loins a sort of circular shell, calculated to support the ends of a kind of laced lappets, hanging down from their shoulders. They add to this cumbrous dress, all the coquetry of behaviour they can assume; they paint, blacken their eye-brows and eye-lashes, and cover their face with patches made of the leaves of a black shining talc, which they find in the island; these patches, or pretended blotch-covers, they sometimes cut triangularly, sometimes like a star; but a patch like a crescent, placed between the eyes, is thought to be irresistibly beautiful. When they return out of the country to their town-houses, they will have perhaps 40 women in their train, some on asses, and some on foot; one of whom carries a napkin or two; a second a petticoat; a third a pair of stockings, and so on: all of which composes a very whimsical kind of procession to strangers.

NAXOS, or NAXIA, a considerable town, capital of the isle Naxos, over against the isle of Paros, with two archbishops' sees, the one Greek and the other Latin. It is one of the most beautiful places in the Grecian Archipelago. Lat. 37 8 N lon. 25 59 E.

NAYLAND, a town of Suffolk, in the parish of Stoke, with a manufacture of soap. It is situated on the river Stour, which divides it from Essex, 6 m. N of Colchester, and 56 NE of London. Market on Frid.

Nayland Point, Kent, near Margate Bay. Naylesey, Somers. between Clevedon and Bristol. Naylesworth, Glouces. near Minching Hampton.

NAZARENES, or NEZEIRES, THE, a sect of Asiatic Christians: among the festivals which they observe, is one, which they call that of the womb; on which day they prostrate themselves before the women and embrace their knees, with an appearance of the deepest veneration. On this, and other festivals, when assembled in their places of worship, the windows are shut, the lights are extinguished, and the most unbridled licentiousness takes place.

NAZARETH, a small village of Palestine, in Syria, where the monks of St. Francis have a convent; and a Moravian town of Pennsylvania, 47 m. N of Philadelphia.

NAZE-POINT, on the coast of Essex, with the North Foreland, in Kent, 60 m. to the S, forms the mouth of the Thames.

NEAGH LOUGH. See LOUGH NEAGH.

Neal, in Mayo, Connaught.

NEATH, a town of Glamorgans, seated on a river of the same name, over which is a bridge, where a number of small vessels come to load coal. It contains 550 houses. In the neighbourhood are iron forges, extensive tin works, smelting works for copper, and many coal-mines. On an eminence near Neath stands Knott Castle, an elegant seat; and 5 m. distant is the cascade of Mellincourt. A navigable canal, 12 m. in length, has been lately cut from hence to the county of Brecon.

It is situated near the Bristol Channel, 8 m. NE of Swansea, and 197 from London, and 200 W by N of London. Markets on Wed. and Sat.

Neath, a river in Brecknock and Glamorgans. which runs into the Bristol Channel, near Coldfrank-Forest. Neath-Vethan, a small village of Brecon, 6 m. S of Brecon.

NED-ROMA, a town of Tremesen, in Africa, situated in a charming country, surrounded with magnificent ruins, 50 m. WSW of Oran.

NEDSJED, an extensive province of Arabia, comprehending all the interior parts, and chiefly inhabited by Bedwins, of a warlike character; at once robbers and hospitable. It has Hedsjas on the W and Hadramaut and Yemen on the S.

Needen, in Kerry, Munster.

Needham, Norfolk, near Harleston.

NEEDHAM, a town of Suffolk, having formerly a good trade of Suffolk cloths, now gone nearly to decay. The poorer sort of women are employed in spinning and weaving bonelace. It is seated on the river Orwell, 10 m. NW of Ipswich, and 73 NE of London. Market on Wed.

NEEDLES, two sharp pointed rocks at the NW end of the Isle of Wight, so called from their sharp extremities. Here were formerly three of these lofty white rocks; but the tallest of them, called Lot's Wife, in its shape resembled a needle, which rose 120 feet above low-water mark, being undermined by the waves, in the year 1776, overset and totally disappeared. Lat. 50 42 N. Needwood-Forest, Staffords. between the Trent, Dove, and Blyth; it is said to exceed all the forests in England in the excellency of its soil, and the fineness of its turf.

NEEHEEHEOW, or ONEEHOW, one of the Sandwich Islands, about 5 leagues W of Atooi. The eastern coast is high, and rises abruptly from the sea; but the rest of the island consists of low ground, except a round bluff head on the SE point. It produces abundance of yams, and of a sweet root; and it contains about 10,000 inhab.

Neen Savage, Shrops. N. of Cleburv. Neen Solars, Salop, 2 m. from Cleobury. Neenton, Salop, 4 m. from Bridgnorth. Neesdon, Midd. 3 m. SE of Harrow-on-the-Hill.

NEFTA, a populous town of Tunis.

NEGAPATAM, a sea-port of Tanjore, taken from the Dutch by the English in 1782, but restored at the peace. It is situated on the coast of Coromandel, 42 m. E of Tanjore, and 150 S of Madras. Lat. 10 46 N lon. 79 56 E.

NEGOMBO, a sea-port of Ceylon, 12 m. N of Columbo.

NEGRAIS, a sea-port and island near the SE coast of Ava, on the E side of the Bay of Bengal, in the mouth of the river Persaim. Lat. 15 50 N lon. 93 33 E.

NEGRIL POINT, a promontory of Jamaica, on the W coast, near Negril Bay, or Harbour. Lat. 18 23 N.

NEGRO CAPE, a promontory of Benguela. Lat. 16 15 S lon. 12 30 E.

NEGROES ISLAND, one of the Philippine Islands, about 240 m. in circumf. producing chiefly rice and cacao. About 3000 of the inhab. are tributary to the Spaniards.

NEGROLAND, or NIGRITIA, called by the Arabs SOUDAN, and by the natives AAFNOU, a vast extent of country in Africa, through which the river Niger is supposed to run. It has a great desert, called Zahara, on the N, and stretches far to the S, but little more is known of the inland parts than the names of some of the towns and kingdoms of which it is composed. However, the Europeans have many settlements on the coast, where they barter European goods for slaves, gold-dust, elephants' teeth, gums, and drugs.

NEGROPONT, an island of Turkey in Europe, near 100 m. long, and from 8 to 16 broad, with a harbour, which is commonly the station of the Turkish ships. It abounds exceedingly in corn, wine, oil, fruits, flesh, fish, and fowls, and provisions are very cheap. It has a Greek archbishop's see. The captain-bashaw resides here, who commands the whole island. The bridge reaches from the city to the continent, across the strait of Negropont. This strait was formerly called Euripus, and was much celebrated for the stated irregularities of its motions. This irregularity has baffled the researches of both ancients and moderns, to account for it satisfactorily. In the first eight days of the month, viz. from the 14th to the 20th, and also in the three last days, the tide is regular both in its ebb and in its flood, but on the other days the ebb and flood return from 10 to 14 times within 24 or 25 hours. It was taken from the Venetians in 1469, by the Turks, after a six months' siege, at the cost of 40,000 men. The Venetians attempted to retake it in 1688, without effect. It is 30 m. NE of Setines, or Athens, and 260 SW of Constantinople. Lat. 38 30 N lon. 24 8 E.

NEHAVEND, a town of Irac, in Persia, 63 m. S of Amadan.

Neilston, a village of Renfrewshire, S of Paisley, with a cotton manufactory.

Neir, or Slieve Neir, a mountain in Down, Ulster, in the barony of Upper Iveach.

NEISSE, a city and principality of Prussian Silesia. It is surrounded by thick walls and deep ditches, and most of the houses are well built. The bishop of Breslaw generally resides here, and has a magnificent palace. The air is very wholesome, provisions are cheap, and the inhabitants carry on a considerable trade in linens and wine. It is seated on the river Neisse (which rises in the N part of Bohemia, enters Lusatia, passes by Goritz Guben, &c. after which it runs into the Oder), 44 m. S of Breslaw. Lat. 50 19 N lon. 17 35 E.

Neithrop, in the parish of Banbury, Oxford.

NEITRA, a town of Hungary, 11 m. E of Serat.

NETHERLANDS, or the LOW COUNTRIES, in German, NIEDERLANDE, a large country of Europe, anciently called Gallia Belgica. In the fifth century the Francs, a people of Germany, coming to settle in Gaul, founded a new kingdom, to which they gave the name of France. In the 9th century, the sons of the emperor, Louis the Pious, having divided the dominions of their father, who possessed Germany, France, and Italy, a new kingdom was formed, comprehending Germany and France, which extended from the Mediterranean to the ocean, and contained a part of the Netherlands. It was called Lotharia, but did not long subsist, for it was soon divided into two; and that seated near the Mediterranean was called the kingdom of Burgundy; while the other, to the N, had the name of Austrasia. Neither did this last continue long, it being divided into small provinces, under different names, which still depended on the empire of Germany, and were called Lower Germany. In process of time, the house of Burgundy purchased many of them, and was about to form them with Burgundy, into a kingdom; but Charles the Bold, the last duke of Burgundy, being killed by the Swiss in 1477, his part of the Netherlands devolved on his only child and heiress, Mary; by whose marriage with the emperor Maximilian, the Netherlands became an acquisition to the house of Austria. The emperor Charles V. king of Spain, in 1555, abdicated the sovereignty of the Netherlands, and, sometime afterward, the Spanish crown, in favour of his son Philip. The tyranny of this cruel bigot, Philip II. who endeavoured to introduce the inquisition into the Low Countries, with the barbarities exercised by the duke of Alva, exasperated the people to such a degree, that they threw off the Spanish yoke, and under the conduct of William I. prince of Orange, formed the famous league of Utrecht, in 1579, which proved the foundation of the republic of the United Provinces. The provinces which compose this republic, are those of Holland, West Friesland, Guelderland, Utrecht, Overyssel, and Groningen. After a long and bloody war, the Spaniards agreed to a truce of 12 years, with the United Provinces, the very first article of which acknowledged them to be free and independent states. The war was renewed in 1621, till at last, by the treaty of Westphalia, in 1648, Philip IV. of Spain expressly renounced all claim to sovereignty over the United Provinces. The other 10 provinces, however, returned under the dominion of Spain, but with very favourable stipulations, with respect to their ancient laws and liberties. On the death of Charles II. king of Spain, and the subsequent accession of a branch of the house of Bourbon, to that monarchy, it was stipulated, by the treaty of Baden, in 1714, that the Spanish Netherlands should return to the German branch of the house of Austria, in which they remained till the reign of Joseph II. but not without diminution and dismemberment; for some considerable parts were obtained by conquest, or cession, by the French and Dutch. The only territories that belonged entirely to Austria, were those of Namur and Mechlin. The Dutch had part of Brabant, Limburg, and Flanders. The French had Artois and the Cambresis, and they had likewise part of Luxemburg, Flanders, and Hainault. But on the other hand, part of Guelderland, one of the Seven United Provinces, belonged to Austria, and another to Prussia. The emperor, Charles VI. left the Austrian Netherlands to his daughter Maria Theresa, queen of Hungary and Bohemia, who married Francis, grand duke of Tuscany, afterwards emperor. During her reign, no sovereign could be more beloved; no people more content and happy. But her son Joseph II. having projected many innovations in the constitution, both in church and state, and enforcing them with violence, a universal spirit of revolt broke out; an army of 40,000 men rose, as if by magic, to support the renunciation of all allegiance, which several of the provinces now openly made; a congress was formed from the different states, in whom the supreme government was vested; and by the end of 1790, the Austrian forces were entirely expelled from the Netherlands. The new government, however, was not of long duration. Leopold II. (the successor of the capricious Joseph, who died in the early part of 1790) partly by force of arms, partly by conciliatory measures, and partly by the mediation of the courts of London, Berlin, and the Hague, recovered the entire possession of his authority in these provinces, and that, apparently, to the satisfaction of the people; the ministers of the mediating courts having guaranteed the restoration of the ancient Belgic constitution, as enjoyed under the happy reign of the empress queen, Maria Theresa. But since the death of Leopold, his son Francis, having joined the conspiracy against the French, these countries have endured the horrors and ravages of war, and been alternately in the possession of the different parties. After being in the possession of the French, who had reduced them into departments, and annexed them to their republic, they are again under the Austrian government. The Netherlands, in general, are 360 m. long, and 260 broad; and are bounded on the W, the N and NW by the German Ocean, and Holland; on the E by Germany; and on the S by France. The principal rivers are the Scheldt, Rhine, Maese, Moselle, Sambre, and Lis; and there are many fine navigable canals, which are of great advantage to the commerce of the country. The air is temperate; but the mouths of the rivers and harbours are frozen up in winter. The soil is extremely fertile in corn and pastures; and there are several fine manufactures of lace, lawns, cambrics, tapestry, &c.

NEUCHATEL, a territory of Switzerland, which, with that of Vallengin, forms one principality, that stretches from the Lake of Neuchatel to the limits of the late province of Franche Compté, in France, containing, in length, about 10 leagues and 4 in breadth. By the death of the duchess of Nemours, in 1707, the sovereignty of Neuchatel and Vallengin was claimed by Frederic I. king of Prussia, as heir to the Prince of Orange; his right was acknowledged by the states of the country, and from him it descended to his great grandson, Frederic William II. The constitution of this country is a kind of limited monarchy. The inhab. are Protestants, except in the two districts of Landeron and Cressier, where the Romish religion is predominant. In 1529, this populous principality entered into a strict alliance with the cantons of Bern, Friburg, Soleure, and Lucerne. The air is healthy and temperate, but the soil not everywhere equally fertile; however, there are large vineyards, which produce white and red wine, which last is excellent. The pastures on the mountains feed a great number of all sorts of cattle, and there are plenty of deer in the forests, beside large trouts, and other good fish, in the lakes and rivers. The people are ingenious, polite, active, and industrious.

NEUCHATEL, a lake of Switzerland, which stretches about 24 m. in length, from the town Yverdun to that of Neuchatel, at which extremity it has a communication with the Lake of Bienne by a narrow outlet. The shores, near Yverdun are covered with country houses and cultivated farms.

NEUFCHATEL, a handsome town of Switzerland, capital of a principality of the same name; but it is a small place, containing not more than 3000 people. It lies partly on the little plain between the Lake of Neuchatel and the Jura, and partly on the declivity of that mountain; and some of its streets, in course, are very steep. The chief article of exportation is wine, produced from the neighbouring vineyards, and much esteemed. Manufactures also of painted linens and cottons have been established with success. Many public works have been lately executed at Neufchatel, at an expence far exceeding the revenues of this little state; but for these they are indebted to a private citizen, Mr. David Pury, who, beside contributions in his life time to the amount of 40,000l. left his country heir to a sum of 160,000l. he himself having none but distant relations. Among these public works are the new town-house, and the superb causeway leading toward the valley of St. Imier. Neufchatel has a grand and little council; the first is composed of 40 persons; the second consists of 24 members, comprehending the mayor, who is president. These two councils assemble regularly every month. The town is situated on the lake of the same name, 25 m. NNW of Bern.

NEWBURY, a large well-frequented town in Berks, with spacious streets and a large marketplace. It contains 1000 houses and 4898 inhab. It was formerly eminent for the clothing manufacture, and still makes a considerable quantity of shalloons and druggets, and many of the poor are employed in spinning. They also send a great quantity of malt to London. In the reign of Henry VIII. Ormon John Winchcomb, commonly called Jack of Newbury, employed 100 looms in his own house; and in the expedition against the Scots, marched to Floddenfield, with 100 of his own men, all armed and clothed at his own expence; he also built all the W part of the church. It is seated on the river Kennet, which abounds with excellent trout, eels, and crayfish, on the great road between London and Bristol, 16 m. W of Reading, and 56 W of London. A well-supplied market on Thurs.

NEWCASTLE, or NEWCASTLE-UNDER-LINE, a considerable and well-built town in Staffords. containing 1245 houses, and 6175 inhab. with a manufactory of cloth, and a large one of hats, here being an incorporated company of felt-makers. In the neighbourhood are many manufactures of stone ware, the sale of which is supposed to average, annually, about 100,000l. It is seated on a branch of the Trent, 15 m. N of Stafford, and 149 NW of London.

NEWCASTLE, or NEWCASTLE-UPON-TYNE, the largest and most populous town in Northumb. situated among steep hills, on the Tyne, which is here a fine and deep river; so that ships of 3 or 400 tons burden may safely come up to the town, though the large colliers are stationed at Shields. It contains 4 parishes, 3146 houses, and 27,587 inhab. It is so secure a haven, that vessels, when they have passed Tynemouth Bar, are in no danger either from storms or shallows. It is defended by Clifford's Fort, which effectually commands all vessels that enter the river. The town may be considered as divided into two parts, of which Gateshead, on the Durham side, is one; and both were joined by a strong bridge, which had stood above 500 years. It originally consisted of 12 arches; but by the embankment of the river for the purpose of forming the quays on the N side, they were reduced to nine. On this bridge were houses, which, in general, stood at some distance from each other. In 1771, a dreadful flood carried away four of these arches, with the houses that stood upon them. This part of the bridge was rebuilt in 1779. The town rises on the N bank of the river, where the streets, upon the ascent, are exceedingly steep. Many of the houses are built of stone; but some of them are of timber, and the rest of brick. The castle, which is old and ruinous, overlooks the whole town. The exchange, churches, and other public buildings, are elegant; and the quay for landing goods is long and large. Here is a hall for the surgeons; a large hospital, built by the contribution of the keel-men, for the maintenance of the poor of their fraternity; and several charitable foundations. It is situated in the centre of the great collieries, which have for centuries supplied London, all the eastern, and most of the southern parts of the kingdom, with coal. This trade has been the source of great opulence to Newcastle; which, besides, exports large quantities of lead, salt, salmon, butter, tallow, and grindstones; and imports wine and fruit from the S of Europe, and timber, iron, hemp, &c. from the Baltic and Norway. Ships are sent hence to the Greenland fishery. It also possesses manufactories of steel, iron, and woollen cloth; and in the town and neighbourhood are several glass-houses. The streets in the old part of Newcastle are unsightly and narrow, and the buildings greatly crowded together; but some of the newer parts are handsome and commodious. The suburbs are chiefly inhabited by keel-men, a rough and sturdy race, employed in carrying the coal down the river in keels, or lighters, to the large ships. Newcastle was made a borough by William the Conqueror; and the first charter which was granted to the townsmen for digging coal was by Henry III. in 1239; but, in 1306, the use of coal for fuel was prohibited in London, by royal proclamation, chiefly because it injured the sale of wood for fuel, great quantities of which were then growing about that city; but this interdiction did not long continue, and we may consider coal as having been dug and exported from this place for more than 400 years. The castle was built by Robert Curthose, eldest son of William the Conqueror. Newcastle is 14 m. N of Durham, 94 N of York, and 271 N by W of London, on the great road to Edinburgh. Markets on Tues. and Sat.

NEWCASTLE, a town of N. America, in the State of Delaware, first settled by the Swedes, about the year 1627, and called Stockholm; but afterwards taken by the Dutch, and called New Amsterdam. When it fell into the hands of the English, it was called Newcastle. It was the first town settled on the river Delaware, and was formerly the seat of government. It now contains about 60 houses, which have the aspect of decay, and is seated on the W bank of the Delaware, 30 m. SSW of Philadelphia.

NEW FOREST, a forest in Hants, situated in that part of the county which is bounded on the E by Southampton Water, and on the S by the English Channel. According to the plan taken of it in 1683 (the last on record), it extends from Godshell on the NW to the sea on the SE, about 20 miles, and from Hardley on the E to Ringwood on the W, about 15 m. It contains within those limits about 92,365 acres, statute measure. Of these, however, only 63,845 acres are woods and waste lands; the rest are inclosed lands, held by the master-keepers and groom-keepers, with their respective lodges, &c. There are nine walks in it, and a keeper to every one, under a lord-warden, besides two rangers and a bow-bearer. King Henry VIII. built some castles in it, and it has now several pretty towns and villages. It has advantages of situation with respect to conveyance by water-carriage, and vicinage to Portsmouth dock-yards, superior to every other forest, having in its neighbourhood several places for shipping timber. It was afforested by William the Conqueror, who expelled the inhabitants and laid waste the country for that purpose. His son, William Rufus, was killed in this forest by an arrow shot by Walter Tyrrel, a French knight, and which is said to have accidentally glanced against a tree.

NEWFOUNDLAND, a large island lying on the eastern coast of N. America, between 47 and 52 deg. lat. It is 350 m. in length from [illegible] in breadth, at the base, from [illegible]. It is a mountainous, barren country, [illegible] much colder than England, being covered [illegible] nine months in the year. It seems never to [illegible] inhabitants of its own, but in the summer time is visited by the Eskimaux Indians. About 500 English families, however, continue here all the year, besides the garrison at St. John's, Placentia, and other forts or villages westward, towards Cape Raze, and from thence to Cape Bona Vista. The remainder, both of the country and coast, northward and westward, is entirely desert. The whole coast of the island is a succession of spacious and perfectly secure harbours, near each other; they all grow gradually narrower from the entrance, so that at the end there is scarcely room for a single vessel to anchor. In the fishing season it is resorted to by at least 10,000 people, on account of the fishing-banks to the E of this island; for here they cure the cod, which is carried, not only to England, but to all parts of Europe. There is great plenty of venison, fish, and fowls, but very little corn, fruit, or cattle; upon which account the inhabitants have not only their clothes and furniture, but likewise their provisions, from England. In 1785, 292 British fishing vessels, and 85 British trading ships, carried off from hence 591,276 quintals of fish for foreign markets. In 1787, 14,000 seamen were thought to be employed in these fisheries.

NIAGARA, a river of N. America, which forms the communication between Lake Erie and Lake Ontario, and runs from S to N about 30 m. At the entrance of this river, on its eastern shore, on the S side of Lake Ontario, is Fort Niagara (in lat. 43 14 N and lon. 79 W), about 18 m. N from which are those remarkable falls which are reckoned among the greatest natural curiosities in the world. The waters which supply the river Niagara, rise near 2000 m. to the NW passing through the lakes Superior, Michigan, Huron, and Erie, receiving, in their course, constant accumulations, rush, at last, with astonishing grandeur, down a stupendous precipice of 140 feet perpendicular; and in a strong rapid, that extends to the distance of about 9 m. below, fall nearly as much more. The river then loses itself in Lake Ontario. Where the water strikes the bottom, it rebounds to a great height in the air, occasioning a thick cloud of vapours, on which the sun shines, paints a beautiful rainbow.

NICARIA, an island of the Archipelago, between Samos and Tine, 18 m. long, and 3 wide. It was anciently called Icaria, and is full of rocks; in the caverns of which the poor inhabitants make their abode. These people are of the Greek church, and about 3000 in number. They apply themselves to swimming and diving for sponges, and for goods lost by shipwreck. "The richest men in the island," says Thevenot, "give their daughters to the best divers, who are tried before the maid and her father; and he who remains longest under water, wins her." "The women," he adds, "have the ascendency; and as soon as the husband arrives from any place in his boat, the wife goes to the sea-side, takes the oars, and carries them home; after which the husband can dispose of nothing without her permission."

NICHOSBUR, a town of Brunn, Moravia, 22 m. S of Brunn.

NICOBAR ISLANDS, situated to the NW of Sumatra, at the entrance of the Gulf of Bengal. The natives are tall and active, with long faces, black eyes, black lank hair, and copper-coloured skins. They are excellent swimmers, and sometimes will overtake ships under sail. They have no corn, but a fruit which serves them instead of bread, and they catch plenty of fish. They are ready to supply the ships that stop there with provisions, for they have hogs and poultry enough; and, in return, they take iron, linen, and tobacco. The largest of these islands, which gives name to the rest, is about 40 m. in length, and 15 in breadth. Its south end is in lat. 8 0 N lon. 94 23 E.

NICOLAS, ST. one of the most considerable of the Cape-de-Verd Islands, lying between St. Lucia and St. Jago. It is of a triangular figure, and about 90 m. in circumf. The centre is mountainous and stony, and the coasts are barren. The inhab. who are black or copper-coloured, under the direction of a Portuguese priest, are about 1500 in number. Lat. 16 32 N lon. 24 6 W.

NICOLO, ST. the most considerable and best peopled of the Isles of Tremiti, in the Gulf of Venice, about 12 m. from the coast of Italy. It has a harbour, and is in lat. 42 10 N lon. 15 37 E.

NICOMEDIA, a town of Natolia, now called Is Nikmid, or Schmit; supposed to be the ancient capital of Bithynia. It was formerly very large, as appears by the ruins, and now contains 30,000 inhab.; who consist of Greeks, Armenians, and Turks. It is still a place of consequence, and carries on a trade in silk, cotton, glass, and earthen ware. It is the see of a Greek archbishop, and is situated on a bay of the sea of Marmora, 45 m. ESE of Constantinople.

NICOPOLI, a town of Bulgaria, 164 m. NW of Adrianople.

NICOPOLI, or GLANICH, a town of Armenia, 15 m. S of Erzerum.

NICOSIA, a town of Asia, capital of Cyprus, seated within a chain of mountains, which surround it on all sides, in the centre of the island. It is about 3 m. in circumf.; and there are plantations of olives, almonds, lemons, oranges, mulberries, and cypress-trees, interspersed among the houses, which give the town a rural appearance. Under the family of the Lusignans, Nicosia was the royal residence, and an archiepiscopal see; it contained 300 churches, Greek and Latin, and a great number of palaces and public buildings, the ruinous remains of which attest its greatness in that and former ages. The church of St. Sophia is a beautiful Greek structure, which the Turks have turned into a mosque. Here the kings of Cyprus were formerly crowned. It is 100 m. SW of Aleppo. Lat. 35 12 N lon. 34 45 E.

NICOTERA, a town of Calabria Ultra.

NICOYA, a town of Costa Rica, Mexico, situated on the coast of the S. Sea, at the bottom of a bay, 45 m. SE of Nicaragua. Lat. 10 42 N lon. 85 7 W.

NIEBLA, a town of Seville, Andalusia.

NIEMECZ, a strong town of Moldavia.

NIEMEN, a large river, which rises in the palatinate of Minsk, Lithuania, and empties itself into the Curisch Haff.

NIEMERSAT, a town of Prussia, 8 m. N of Memel.

NIENBURG, a town of Berg; a town of Munster; and a town of Hoya; all in Westphalia: and a town of Anhalt-Cothen, Upper Saxony.

NIENDORF, a town of Holstein, 5 m. ESE of Gluckstadt.

NIENHUS, a town of Bentheim, Westphalia, 17 m. SE of Coverden.

NIESTER. See DNIESTER.

NIEUHAUS, a town of Bechin, in Bohemia; a town of Worms, Upper Rhine; and a town of Paderborn, in Westphalia.

NIEUPORT, a sea-port of the ci-devant Flanders, situated on a branch of the Yperlee, 8 m. SSW of Ostend. The harbour is dry at low water. The chief trade of the inhab. who are principally fishermen, is the making of nets and cordage for vessels.

NIGER, a river, supposed to be one of the largest in Africa. Its rise and termination are unknown; but its course is said to be from E to W, running S of the kingdom of Cashna toward Tombuctoo, in the sands of which country it is supposed to be lost; but others account the great rivers Senegal, Gambia, and Rio Grande, to be only so many branches or mouths, whereby this vast river discharges itself into the Atlantic. The Africans have two names for this river: namely, Neel il Abeed, or River of the Negroes, and Neel il Kibeer, or the Great River. They also term the Nile, Neel Shem, that is, the Egyptian River! so that the term Neel, whence our Nile is derived, is nothing more than the appellative of River, like Ganges, or Sinde. So great is the rapidity with which the Niger traverses the empire of Cashna, that no vessel can ascend the stream; and such is the want of skill, or of commercial inducements, among the inhabitants of its borders, that even with the current, neither vessels nor boats are seen to navigate. Even the food, which the bounty of the river would give, is in vain offered to their acceptance; for such is the want of skill, or such the settled dislike of the people to this sort of provisions, that the fish are never disturbed. In the rainy season, the Niger swells above its banks, floods the adjacent lands, and often sweeps before it the cattle and cottages of the short-sighted, or too confident inhabitants.

Niger, a river in Norfolk, running into the sea at Clay. Nighton, Isle of Wight, in E. Medina. Nighton, St. Cornwall, SE of Lestwithiel.

NIKOPING, a town of Denmark, capital of the island of Falster, or Hulster, in the Baltic, 55 m. SSW of Copenhagen.

NIKOPING, a town of Sweden, formerly the residence of the kings and princes of Sudermania, and now capital of that province. It has some manufactures of cloth and Morocco leather, a brass hammer-mill, and a considerable trade by sea. It is seated near the Baltic, 50 m. SW of Stockholm.

Niland, Upper and Lower, Dorsets. near Great Kington.

NILE, a great river of Africa, which rises in the mountains of Abyssinia, called the Mountains of the Moon, near the village of Geesh, in lat. 10 50 N lon. 36 55 E. It runs first NE, afterwards turns directly E and enters the great lake Dambia or Dembia, running through it, and passing among the rocks, the sight of it is almost lost. Then it crosses the country of Nubia, and enters Egypt at Syene, which country it divides into two parts: a little below Cairo, it divides itself into two great branches, which, with the Mediterranean Sea, forms the island [illegible]. The ancients reckoned eleven mouths of the Nile, of which seven were considerable; at present there are only two that are navigable at all times; and those are [illegible] Damietta. In the middle of the river between Old Cairo and Gize is situated the island Raouda, which is almost as long as Old Cairo. It is 500 paces in breadth in the middle; the front of the Mekias [illegible] of the Saracens, takes up all the breadth of the southern part. Here [illegible] by means of a gradual [illegible] centre of a low channel [illegible] with the bed of the Nile), the increase of the waters of that river, and the public criers regulate the proclamations they make of these events, at different hours, through the city. In some parts of this river there are rocks, whence the water falls several feet, and these are called the cataracts of the Nile. It overflows regularly every year, from the 15th of June to the 17th of September, when it begins to decrease. The fertility of Egypt depends upon the overflowing of the Nile; and they reckon it will be a bad year when it is less than 14 cubits, and above 18; but that 16 cubits is the proper height; and when this happens, they make public rejoicings throughout the Delta. This river affords plenty of fish, and breeds a great number of crocodiles, which are very large and dangerous. The Delta, or Lower Egypt, is always overflowed; and when the waters are almost gone off, they sow it with rice, which delights in watery grounds. During the inundation, the little towns, standing upon eminences, look like so many islands; and they go from one to the other by boats. In Cairo there is a canal called Khalis, which is opened when the water is high enough; thence it is conveyed into reservoirs and cisterns, and is afterwards distributed into the fields and gardens, as occasion requires. This inundation of the Nile is caused by the periodical rains which fall every year between the tropics, and more particularly in Abyssinia. Off the mouth of this river, August 1, 1798, Rear Admiral Sir Horatio Nelson took, or destroyed, a French fleet of 13 sail of the line and 2 frigates. The British fleet consisted of thirteen 74-gun ships and one of 50 guns: in the French line of battle were 1 of 120 guns, the L'Orient, Admiral Brueys, burnt and blown up, 3 of 80 guns, 9 of 74, and four frigates. The French armament was directed against Egypt, where General Bonaparte had previously landed with a considerable military force.

NIMEGUEN, a town of the United Provinces, capital of Dutch Guelderland, and the chief town of the country of Betewe. It has a magnificent town-house, a citadel, and an ancient palace, and is noted for the peace concluded here, June 30, 1678, between France and the Emperor, Spain and the United Provinces. It is seated on the S side of the river [illegible] 18 m. SE of Utrecht.

[illegible] near Bell-Bar. Nimpsfield, [illegible] m. NE of Durs-

[illegible], or NINGPO, a sea-port of China [illegible] province of Chekiang. It is a city of [illegible] rank, and is called by Europeans, Liampo. The streets are very narrow, and appear so on account of penthouses over [illegible]. The Chinese merchants of Siam [illegible] go thither yearly to buy silks; and [illegible] to Japan, it being but [illegible] it. It is situated in [illegible] a garden for its level[illegible] cultivation: it is full of towns and [illegible] and divided by a great number of ca[illegible] Lat. 30 0 N lon. 120 20 E.

NINEVEH, or NINUS, an antient town of Assyria, Asia; the ruins of which, according to travellers, are opposite to Mosul, on the river Tigris.

NINOVE, a town of Flanders county, situated on the Dender. It is in the depart. of the Dyle, 13 m. W of Brussels.

Ninwick, Northumb. in Simondsburn parish.

NIO, an island in the Archipelago (anciently called Ino, Ios, and Dios), S of Naxia, about 30 m. in circumf. It is fertile in corn, but has very little wood or oil. "The regular manners and behaviour of these islanders, one among another," says the Count de Choiseu Gouffier, "with their kind treatment of strangers, revives an idea of the simplicity of primitive ages. Men, women, and children, appear eager to do any good offices for travellers, without permitting their servants to share in their endeavours. This benevolent disposition is without any mixture of impertinent curiosity or interest, but is the genuine remains of ancient hospitality." An ingenious gentleman, who was lately on the island, experienced the truth of this representation. He could not prevail on any of them to accept the least pecuniary recompence for their trouble; they only required an attestation of the welcome he received; their character in this respect seeming to be what these honest people chiefly prided themselves in. The island has some good harbours. Lat. 36 43 N lon. 25 35 W.

NIORT, a considerable town in the depart. of the Two Sevres, with manufactures of druggets, serges, and other coarse woollen goods. Their dry sweetmeats are much esteemed. It is 28 m. NE of Rochelle.

NIPHON, or HIPHON, an island of Asia, and the largest of Japan, being 660 m. in length, and from 150 to 400 in breadth, containing 55 provinces. The principal cities in this island are Meaco, Jeddo, Osacca, Gurunga, and Saccai.

NISHNEI NOVOGOROD, or NISHGOROD, a populous town of Russia, with a considerable trade, capital of the government of the same name. As it was the appendage and place of residence of the ancient Russian princes, many of them lie buried here. It is seated at the confluence of the Volga and Occa, 220 m. E by N of Moscow. Lat. 56 18 N lon. 46 30 E.

NISIBIN, a town of Diarbekir, situated on the river Tigris, 78 m. SSE of Diarbek.

NISIDA, a small island in the Gulf of Naples, very fertile (being a kind of large garden, laid out in slopes and terraces) and would be more so but for the great number of rabbits. It has a small harbour, called Porto Pavone, and on a neighbouring rock stands a lazaretto, where ships bound for Naples perform quarantine.

NISMES, an ancient, large, and flourishing town, capital of the depart. of Gard. There are several monuments of antiquity, a public fountain, a mausoleum, and an amphitheatre, built by the Romans. The maison-quarrée, or the square house, is a temple of the Corinthian order, in exquisite taste, raised by the inhabitants of Nismes, in the year of Rome 754, to the memory of Caius and Lucius, sons of Agrippa. The temple of Diana is, in part, gone to ruin. This city was taken by the English in 1417. Before the revolution, it was the see of a bishop, and contained a seminary, a college, an academy of ancient history and belles lettres, and about 40,000 inhab. of whom one third was supposed to be Protestants. It is seated in a fine plain, abounding in wine, oil, game, and cattle, 27 m. NE of Montpellier.

NISSA, a town in Servia, situated on a river of the same name.

NITH, a river of Dumfriessh. which rises in the mountains to the NW, and gives the name of Nithsdale to that part of the country through which it flows. A little above Dumfries, it joins the Cairn, and their united streams form a fine estuary in Solway Frith.

NITRACHT, a town of Hungary, 42 m. from Presburg. Lat. 48 41 N lon. 18 34 E.

NITRIA, a famous desert of Egypt, 37 m. in length, bounded on the N by the Mediterranean, on the E by the Nile, on the S by the Desert of Seta, and on the W by St. Hilarion. It had formerly a great number of monasteries, which are now reduced to four; and it takes its name from a salt lake, out of which is got the natrum of the ancients, in which they carry on a great trade.

NIVELLE, a town of the late Austrian Brabant, in the depart. of the Dyle, having a good manufacture of cambrics. It is 15 m. S of Brussels.

NIVERNOIS, a ci-devant province of France. It is pretty fertile, contains mines of iron, and is watered by a great number of rivers, of which the Loire, Allier, and Yonne, are the principal. It is now chiefly in the departs. of Nievre and Yonne.

NORDKIOPING, a large inland town of E. Gothland, Sweden, next to Stockholm in extent, 76 m. SW of Stockholm. It contains 5 churches, and about 10,000 inhab. but the houses are small and scattered. Its situation on the Motala is exceedingly picturesque. That river flows through the town, forms a series of cataracts, and is divided into 4 principal streams, which encircle several rocky islands, covered with houses and manufactories. At the extremity of the town is a commodious quay. Here are many fabrics of woollen cloth, some sugar-houses, one of snuff, several paper-mills, 50 mills for grinding corn, 2 copper-mills, and a hammer-mill for brass. Corn is exported hence in great quantities; and a salmon fishery gives employment to many of the inhab.

NORENBURG, a town of Germany, 43 m. WSW of New Stettin.

NORFOLK, a county of England, bounded on the N and E by the German Ocean; on the W by Cambridges. Lincolns. and the Wash; and on the S and SE by Suffolk. It extends about 60 m. from E to W, and 40 from N to S. It contains 33 hundreds, 1 city, 32 market towns, 660 parishes, and 51,776 houses, and 292,000 inhab. The face of this county varies less than in most tracts of equal extent in England. Not one hill of any considerable height is to be seen in the whole county; yet, in most parts, its surface is broken into gentle swells and depressions. The soil, however, is more various than that of any other county, comprehending all the sorts that are to be found in the island; yet the worst of them are far from being unprofitable. At the western extremity is a considerable tract of flat, fenny land; and, on the E, a narrow tract of marshes runs from the sea, near Yarmouth, to some distance up the country. Several of the western hundreds, from Thetford, northward, are open and bare, consisting of extensive heaths, the soil of which is a light sand, or hungry gravel. The rest of the county, in general, is arable land, varying in its degrees of fertility. To the NE the soil is a light sandy loam, easy of tillage, and equal in value to the best parts of the Netherlands, to which it is similar. The SE has a richer and deeper soil. The middle and south abound in clay; and various parts yield chalk and marle. The products of the county vary according to the soil and situation. The lighter arable lands produce barley in great plenty. Wheat is cultivated in the strongest soils; but turnips are more generally grown here than in any other part of the kingdom, and form the basis of the Norfolk husbandry. The peculiar excellence of this culture is, that the ground never lies fallow, as the turnips serve to prepare it for corn, beside fattening great numbers of cattle. Much buckwheat is also grown in the light soils, and used for feeding swine and poultry. The fenny parts yield great quantities of butter, which is sent to London under the name of Cambridge butter. The sheep are a hardy, small breed, much valued for their mutton. Turkeys are reared here to a larger size than elsewhere. Rabbits are extremely numerous on the sandy heaths; and there is likewise abundance of game, especially of pheasants. On the sea-coast, herrings and mackerel are caught in great plenty; and Yarmouth, in particular, is noted for the curing of red herrings. The air of this county is sharp and piercing, which throws the seasons more backward than in other counties under the same latitude: but is very wholesome, particularly in the inland parts. No county has a greater share of river and sea navigation. The manufactures of Norfolk are chiefly worsted, woollens, and silks. Its principal rivers are the Great Ouse, Neu, Little Ouse, Waveney, Yare, and Bure. Norwich is the capital.

NORFOLK ISLAND, an island in the S. Pacific Ocean, lying E of New South Wales, and settled by a colony of convicts, subordinate to that government. The number of men by the last advices, amounted to 44, the women only to 16. It is a fertile spot, and is very hilly. Some of the valleys are tolerably large, but most of them are only deep hollows. Mount Pitt, the only remarkable hill, is 12,000 feet high. The whole island is covered with a very thick forest, choked with underwood. The timber trees are a sort of spruce pine, resembling the live oak, a yellow wood, a hard black wood, and a wood resembling beech. The spring is perceptible in our autumn, but the trees are in a constant succession of flowering and fruiting the whole year-round. The flax-plant is more luxuriant here than in any part of New Zealand; but the chief produce is the pine, which grows in great abundance, and to a large size, many of the trees being as thick, breast high, as two men can fathom, and exceedingly straight and tall. It is very useful in building, and seems to be durable. The soil is rich and deep. In summer the heat is excessive. All the grain and European plants seed in December. From February to August may be called the rainy season. The winter, from April to July, is very pleasant: there is never any frost; but when the SW wind blows, the air is raw and cold. This island is well supplied with many streams of good water, which abound with very fine eels. The cliffs round the coast are 240 feet high, and quite perpendicular. The want of a safe harbour is a great inconvenience; and the vast number of coral rocks render anchorage very insecure. The settlement is formed in Sydney-Bay, on the S side of the island. Lat. 29 30 S lon. 168 12 E.

Norgill, Yorks. NW of Barnard's Castle. Norgrave, Worcesters. near Upton. Norham, Durham, insulated in Northumberl. and giving name to a tract of country called Northamshire. It stands on the Tweed, near the mouth of the Till, 6 m. SW of Berwick, and 330 N of London.

NW of Gisborough.

NORMANDY, a ci-devant province of France, on the English Channel, about 150 m. in length, 80 in breadth, and 600 in circumf. It is one of the most fertile tracts in France, and abounds in all its productions, except wine, but they supply that defect by cider and perry. It contains mines of iron and copper, and a great number of rivers and harbours. The Normans, a people of Denmark and Norway, having entered France, under Rollo, Charles the Simple ceded this country to them in 912, which, from that time, was called Normandy. Rolla, the first duke, having been baptized, Charles gave him his daughter Gisle in marriage. He held Normandy as a fief of the crown of France, and several of his successors after him, till William, the seventh duke, conquered England in 1066, from which time it became a province of England, but was lost in the reign of King John, and reunited to the crown of France; the English, however, still keep the islands on the coast of Normandy. Rouen was the capital. It now forms the departs. of Calvados, Eure, the Channel, Orne, Lower Seine, with a small part of Eure and Loire.

A good market on Wed. for cattle, corn, &c. Fairs on Jan. 2d, and on St. Bartholomew's-Day.

Northam, Devons. between Barnstaple-Bay and Biddeford.

NORTHAMPTON, the county town of Northamptons. seated on an eminence, gently sloping to the river Nen, which is joined here by another rivulet, and has been made navigable to Lynn. It contains 1576 houses, and 8427 inhab. Its principal manufacture is that of boots and shoes, of which many are made here, and in other parts of the country, for exportation. Some stockings and lace are also made here. The horse-fairs of this place are reckoned to exceed all others in the kingdom. It is a handsome, well-built town, and has a regular spacious market-place, one of the finest in England, a good free-school, and a county infirmary and goal. Within ¼ a m. of Northampton is a fine Gothic structure, called Queen's Cross, erected by Edward I. in memory of his queen, Eleanor, who, at the hazard of her own life, had saved his, by sucking the poison from a wound which he received in the crusades. This town is a great thoroughfare, both in the N and W roads, and is 50 m. W of Cambridge, 30 SE of Coventry, and 66 NW by N of London. Markets on Wedn. Frid. and Saturd. Fairs on Feb. 20, April 15, May 4, Aug. 5 and 26, Sept. 19, Nov. 28, and Dec. 19.

NORTHAMPTONSHIRE, a county of England, bounded on the NW by Leicesters. and Rutlands. on the N by Lincolns. on the E by the counties of Cambridge, Huntingdon, and Bedford, on the S by Bucks and Oxfords. and on the W by that county and Warwicks. It is divided into 20 hundreds, containing a city, 13 market towns, 336 parishes, 28,318 houses, and 141,353 inhab. The air of this county is very healthy, except in the NE part near Peterborough, which being surrounded and intersected by rivers, is very liable to inundations, and forms the commencement of the fenny tract extending to the Lincolns. Washes. With this single exception, Northamptons. is, in a manner, proverbially regarded as a fine and pleasant county; an opinion, confirmed by the number of seats of the nobility and gentry which it contains. Its greatest defect is a scarcity of fuel: this is but scantily supplied by its woods, which, like those in all other parts of the kingdom, have been much diminished by agriculture; and though coal is brought into this county by the river Nen, it is at a very dear rate. Northamptons. however, possesses some considerable remains of its old forests, particularly those of Rockingham on the NW, and of Salcey and Whittlebury on the S. In this last, that fiercest of British animals of prey, the wild cat, is still found. There is but one piece of waste ground in this country, and that is a barren heath near Whittering. The products are, in general, the same with those of other farming countries. It is, indeed, peculiarly celebrated for grazing land; the tract especially, which lies from Northampton northward to the Leicesters. border. Horned cattle, and other animals, are here fed to extraordinary sizes; and many horses of the large black breed are reared. Woad for the dyers is cultivated in this part: but the county is not distinguished for manufactures, excepting some of sergés, tammies, shalloons, boots, and shoes; and the trifling one of bone lace. The principal rivers are the Nen and Welland; beside which, it is partly watered by the Ouse, Leam, Cherwell, and Avon. The county-town is Northampton.

North Town, Staffords. near King's Bromley.

NORTHUMBERLAND, a county of England, receiving its name from being situated to the N of the Humber. In the Saxon heptarchy it was a part of the kingdom of the Northumbrians, which contained not only the county now called Northumb. but also Yorks. Lancas. Durham, Cumberl. and Westmorel. It is seated on the extremity of England next to Scotland, and is bounded on the E by the German Ocean, on the S by the bishopric of Durham, on the W and SW by Cumberl. and on the NW and N by Scotland. It extends about 64 m. in length from N to S, and 48 in breadth from E to W, and is divided into 6 wards, which contain 13 towns, 460 parishes, 28,258 houses, and 172,161 inhab. The air is not so cold as might be imagined, from the latitude in which it lies; for its situation between two seas, in the narrowest part of England, gives it the advantage of having the cold moderated by the temperate breezes of each; and for this reason the snow seldom lies long in Northumb. except on the top of high hills. The air is extremely healthful, and many of the inhab. enjoy health to a great age. The soil is various; the eastern part being fruitful, having very good wheat, and most sorts of corn, with rich meadows on the banks of the rivers; but the western part is generally barren, it being mostly heathy and mountainous. The SE part abounds with pit-coal; the SW angle has very rich lead-mines, but very little wood. The rivers abound with salmon, trout, &c. and the coasts are rich in cod, ling, turbot, soles, &c. This county is well watered by rivers, the principal of which are the Tyne, Tweed, Coquet, and Alne. Alnwick is the county-town.

NORTHUMBERLAND, a county of Virginia, and a county and town of Pennsylvania, the last of which is situated on the N side of the Susquehana, opposite Sunbury.

NORTHWICH, a handsome town of Chesh. chiefly noted for its salt mines, which were discovered in the beginning of the last century. Here are four deep brine-pits, from which immense quantities of salt are raised, partly to be purified on the spot by re-dissolving and boiling, and partly to be exported in its crude state. Most of the latter goes to Liverpool by the river Weaver. The salt quarries here (discovered within these few years, on the S side of the town), when a person is let down into them by a bucket, to the depth of 150 feet, afford a truly pleasing and picturesque appearance, looking very much like a subterraneous cathedral. They extend several acres, and are supported by rows of pillars, having a crystal roof, all of the same rock, and transparent and glittering from the numerous candles burnt there to light the workmen, who dig it away with steel pick-axes. The stratum of salt lies above 40 yards deep, above it is a bed of whitish clay. The clear annual duty received by government for Chesh. salt, amounts to 200,000l. Here is also a large cotton manufacture. Northwich is seated on the river Weaver, near its conflux with the Dane (by which it communicates with all the late inland navigations), 20 m. NE of Chester, and 173 NW of London. Market on Frid.

NORWALK, a town of Connecticut.

NORWAY, a kingdom in the N of Europe, the most westerly part of the ancient Scandinavia. It is formed naturally into two divisions; namely, Northern and Southern or Proper Norway, separate from each other by the small Swedish province of Herndahl. Northern Norway is a long and narrow slip of land, extending as far as Cape North, the most northern part of Europe, beyond 71 o N lat. and bounded on the W and N by the Northern Ocean, by Swedish and Russian Lapland on the E and by Sweden on the S. It is divided into Nordland and Finmark, and comprehended in the government of Drontheim. Southern Norway is bounded on the E by Sweden, and on the S and W by the Northern Ocean. It is divided into the four governments of Aggerhuys or Christiania, Christiansand, Berghen, and Drontheim. From its rocky soil and northern position, Norway is not populous in proportion to its extent. Mr. Coxe has calculated the number of inhab. to be 750,000, who, like the Swiss mountaineers, are esteemed good soldiers, and are exceedingly attached to their country. The horses are small, but strong, active, and hardy. In Norway, they have a particular code, called the Norway Law, compiled by Griffelseld, at the command of Christian V. the great legislator of this country. By this law, the palladium of Norway, peasants are free, a few only excepted, on some estates near Fredericstadt. The benefits of this code are visible in the great difference, in their appearance, between the free peasants in Norway, and the enslaved vassals of Denmark, though both living under the same government. The Norwegian peasants possess much spirit and fire in their manner; are frank, open, and undaunted, yet not insolent; never fawning, yet paying proper respect. The same causes which affect the population of Norway, operate likewise on the state of tillage; for, although in some places vegetation is so quick, that the corn is sown and cut in 6 or 7 weeks, yet the country does not produce sufficient corn for its own consumption. It is, however, exceedingly rich in pasture, and consequently produces much cattle. The fisheries, particularly on the western coast, procure employment and wealth to the natives. The principal fish, which, dried and salted, furnish a considerable article of exportation, are the cod, the ling, and the whiting; their livers also yield train oil, and the smallest are given as winter fodder to the cattle. The extensive forests of oak and pine produce timber spars, beams, and planks, beside charcoal, turpentine, bark, fuel, and even manure; and the birch (the bark of which is used as a covering for the roofs of houses) not only supplies fuel, but also a kind of wine, which is produced by boring a hole in the trunk, and the wine distils into a flask placed under it. The twigs of the birch, also, as well as of the elder and aspen, are given to horses in scarcity of fodder. The general exports of Norway are tallow, butter, salt, dried fish, timber and planks, horses and horned cattle, silver, alum, Prussian blue, copper, and iron. Norway abounds in lakes and rivers: the former so large, that they appear like inlets of the sea; but the bays are so small, that they appear like lakes. It was formerly governed by its own hereditary sovereigns, was afterwards united to the crown of Denmark, and in 1814 was ceded to Sweden; but they have again declared their independence. The capital is Christiania.

NORWICH, an ancient, large, and populous city of Norfolk, seated on the river Yare, which runs through it, and is navigable hence to Yarmouth, without locks. Although it is 6 m. in circuit, the population is not so great as might be expected from that circumstance, as it contains a number of gardens and orchards within the walls. It has a stately ancient castle, on a hill, which commands a fine view of the city: this castle is the shire-house for the county, and the county gaol; the assizes for the city being held at the Guildhall. Norwich has a good public library, a city and county hospital, a lofty market-house of freestone, and a bridewell built of flints, remarkable for being beautifully cut into regular little squares, without any visible cement. It had formerly 58 parochial churches, besides monasteries; and has now 36 churches, beside the cathedral, chapels, and dissenting meeting-houses. It had also a flint-stone wall, now much decayed, about 3 m. in compass, which had 40 towers, and was finished in 1309. Here is a free-school, founded by Edward VI. and several other charitable foundations. Norwich long took the lead in point of commercial consequence among the inland towns. For this it was indebted to its great manufactures of crapes, bombazines, and stuffs of various kinds, which are still considerable, though somewhat declined, on account of the rivalship of the cotton branches, and in consequence of prohibitions in foreign countries. The manufacture is confined to the city, but the operations of spinning and preparing the wool, employ the poor of most of the small towns and villages in the county. It is computed that stuffs, such as damasks, camlets, black and white crapes, to the amount of 70,000*l.* have sometimes been manufactured here in a year. This city adds much to the trade of Yarmouth, by the vast cargoes of coals, and other heavy goods, which come to it from thence by the river Yare. Here are many good buildings, particularly a very spacious market-place; but the streets (that of St. Giles excepted) are narrow and ill-disposed. The market-place being on an ascent, is very clean, and has a fine effect. Norwich has 12 gates, 6 bridges over the Yare, 25 parishes, 8,336 houses, and 37,256 inhab. It is well supplied with provisions, and is 43 m. N of Ipswich, and 100 NE by N of London. Markets on Wed. Frid. and Sat.

NORWICH, a town of Connecticut, erected near the head of the river Thames, in a situation convenient for mills; at which place and Norwich the executive courts of law are held alternately. Here are considerable manufactories for paper, stockings, clocks and watches, chaises, buttons, stone and earthen ware, wire, oil, chocolate, bells, anchors, and all kinds of forge work. The number of houses is about 500. It is 12 m. N of New London, and 66 SW of Boston.

NORWICH, a town of Vermont.

Norwood, a village in Surry, situated on a fine hill, in the parishes of Croydon, Streatham, Lambeth, and Camberwell, 5 m. S of London. It is a wildly-rural spot, bearing the marks of unimproved nature, and was, some years ago, a principal haunt of the gypsies. Norwood, Isle of Wight, in E. Medina. Norwood, Kent, near Ramsgate. Norwood, Middlesex, a chapel of ease to Hayes. Norwood-Park, Nottinghams. near Southwell. Noseley, Leicesters. NW of Hallaton.

NOTRE DAME DE PORTE, 10 m. W of Agen.

NOTRE DAME DE ROCHE SESVIERE, 7 m. W of Montaign.

Nottar, Cornwall, NW of Saltash.

NOTTINGHAM, the county-town of Nottinghams. takes its name from the Saxon, Snottengaham, or House of Dens, so called from the spacious vaults dug in the rock, in which the ancient Britons are supposed to have resided. It is pleasantly seated on a rocky eminence, above the meadows bordering the Trent; on the highest part of which stands the castle—a large, elegant, and noble palace, belonging to the Duke of Newcastle, with a most extensive prospect. It is a large, populous, and handsome town, with a spacious market-place; it contains 6514 houses, and 34,253 inhab. and considered as one of the principal seats of the stocking manufacture, particularly of the finer kinds, as those of silk and cotton. It has also a manufactory of coarse earthenware, and a considerable trade in malt. It is remarkable for its vaults or cellars, cut into the rock. Many of the houses in the market-place have their fronts supported by lofty stone columns, which make a very handsome appearance, and at the same time afford shelter in wet weather. The streets are well paved, and, from their situation on a rock, many of them are always clean; and it has a neat theatre. Heavy goods are brought hither from London by sea, and up the river Trent; and many coal pits, within 3 or 4 m. of the town, afford plenty of fuel at little expence. It is 16 m. E of Derby, and 123 N by W of London. Markets on Wed. Frid. and Sat. Fairs on Frid. after Jan. 13th, May 7th, Thurs. before Easter, and Oct. 2d.

NOTTINGHAMSHIRE, a county of England, bounded on the N by Yorks. and Lincolns. on the E by the latter county, on the S by Leicesters. and on the W by Derbys. Its greatest length is 48 m.; its greatest breadth above 20. It is divided into 8 hundreds, and contains 13 towns, 168 parishes, 31,334 inhabited houses, and 162,900 inhab. Being agreeably situated between the mountainous country of Derbys. on the one hand, and the flat of Lincolns. on the other, it enjoys such a temperature of soil and climate, as to render it one of the most fertile and agreeable counties in England. The principal rivers are the Trent and Idle. Almost the whole of the middle and western parts of the county were formerly occupied by the extensive forest of Sherwood, which is the only royal forest N of the Trent, but the wood has in many parts been cleared, and the extent of the forest much contracted. A canal from Chesterfield, in Derbys. passes across the northern part of this county, and joins the Trent just as that river ceases to be its boundary. The chief products of this county are corn, malt, pit-coal, of which there is great plenty; and a kind of stone somewhat like alabaster, but not so hard, which, when burnt, makes a plaster harder than that of Paris, with which the inhab. generally plaster the floors of their upper rooms, instead of boarding them. Their other commodities are malt, wool, liquorice, wood, fish, and fowl. Their manufactures chiefly consist of frame-work knitting, glass, and earthen ware. The principal town is Nottingham.

Nottingham, Dorsets. N of Melcomb-Regis. Notton, Dorsets. near Crookston. Notton, Wilts, near Laycock and Corsham. Notwell Court, Devons. near Topsham.

NOVALE, a small town of the Trevisan.

NOVALLERA, a town and principality in Italy, subject to Modena. It is 10 m. NE of Reggio.

NOVARA, a town of Milan, capital of the Novarese, containing 17 parish churches, besides the cathedral, and 18 convents.

NOVA SCOTIA, a peninsula of Acadia, about 240 m. in length, and from 30 to 60 in breadth, joined to the continent by a narrow isthmus at the NE extremity of the Bay of Fundy. The whole province was formerly called Nova Scotia, or Acadia, but in 1784 it was divided into two governments, New Brunswick and Nova Scotia. Several new towns have been founded here, during and since the American war; and the country is in many parts cultivated and flourishing. The winter lasts here, with great severity, during at least 7 months in the year. The soil is tolerably fertile, though inferior to that in New England.

NOVA ZEMBLA. See ZEMBLA NOVA.

NOVI, a town of Italy, in Genoa.

NOVI BAZAR, or JENI BAZAR, a town of Bulgaria, situated on the river Ibar, 83 m. NE of Ragusa.

NOU-KIANG, the Chinese name of the river Ava.

NOVOGORODECK, a large town and a palatinate (otherwise called Black Russia) of Lithuania.

NOVOGOROD, or NOVGOROD, one of the most ancient cities of Russia, in the government of the same name. It was formerly called Great Novogorod, to distinguish it from other Russian towns of the same appellation. It was the great mart of trade between Russia and the Hanseatic cities, and made the most rapid advances in opulence and population. Its territory extended to the N as far as the frontiers of Livonia and Finland; comprising great part of the province of Archangel, and a large district beyond the NW limits of Siberia. At this period its dominions were so extensive, its powers so great, and its situation so impregnable, as to give rise to a proverb, "Who can resist the gods and Great Novogorod?" But in 1477, this independent republic was obliged to submit to the arms of Ivan Vassilivitch I. grand duke of Russia. An enormous bell, denominated by the inhab. eternal, and revered by them as the palladium of their liberty, was removed by their conqueror from Novogorod to Moscow. It continued, nevertheless, the largest and most commercial city in Russia, and contained at least 400,000 people. It was first desolated, in a manner, by the cruelties exercised here by Ivan Vassilivitch II. in 1570, but its splendour was not totally eclipsed until the Czar Peter built Petersburgh, to which favourite capital he transferred all the commerce of the Baltic that had before centered here. It now contains scarce 7000 inhab.; but a vast number of churches and convents stand melancholy monuments of its former magnificence. The town stretches on both sides of the Volchova, a beautiful river, of considerable depth and rapidity, which separates it into two divisions; namely, the Trading Part and the quarter of St. Sophia. The cathedral of St. Sophia is one of the most ancient in Russia: it was begun in 1044, by Vladimir Yaroslavitch, duke of Novogorod, and completed in 1051. Several princes of the ducal family of Russia are interred in this cathedral. Novogorod is situated near the Lake Ilmen, 92 m. SSE of Petersburgh, and 245 NW of Moscow. Lat. 58 20 N lon. 32 45 E.

NOVOGOROD, once an independent republic, finally reduced by Ivan Vassilivitch II. in 1570, and united to the Russian Empire, of which it now forms a government. It is bounded on the N by the government of Olonetz, and on the SW by the government of Pskov. The capital is of the same name.

NOVOGOROD, NISHNEI. See NISHNEI NOVOGOROD.

NOVOGOROD SEVERSKOI, a government of the Russian empire, comprising part of the Ukraine, or Little Russia. Its capital, which is of the same name, is 264 m. SSW of Moscow.

NOVOGRODOCK, a town and palatinate of Russian Lithuania, otherwise called BLACK RUSSIA, 200 m. ENE of Warsaw.

Nour Head, or Buoy at the Nore, Kent, in the Thames, opposite to Sheerness. Nowe, a river in Derbys. which runs into the Derwent, below Stratton. Nowstool-Hill, Derbys. in the High Peak. Nowton, Suffolk, near Bury.

NOYA, a sea-port of Gallicia, noted for building of ships. It is situated at the mouth of the Tambro. Lat. 42 49 N.

NOYERS, a town in the depart. of Yonne, seated on the river Serin; also a town in the depart. of Lower Alps; and a town in the depart. of the Meuse, 9 m. W of Bar-le-Duc.

NOYON, a town in the depart. of Oise, seated near the river Oise, 22 m. NW of Soissons, and 60 N by E of Paris.

NOZEROY, a town in the depart. of Jura, 27 m. S of Besançon.

Nubey, Yorks. W. Riding, SW of Gisborn. Nuby, Yorks. W. Riding, SE of Ingleton.

NUBIA, a kingdom of Africa, bounded on the N by Egypt, on the E by the Red Sea, on the S by Abissynia, and on the W by countries of Africa, of which hardly the names are known. The river Nile runs through it, on the banks of which, and those of the other rivers, it is uncommonly fertile, but in other places barren, sandy, and in want of water. Money is of no use in this country in the way of trade, it being all carried on by way of exchange. Their bread and drink is made of a small round seed, called doca, or seff, which is very ill tasted. Their houses have mud walls, being very low, and covered with reeds. The habit of the rich is a vest without sleeves, and they have no coverings for their heads, legs, and feet; others wrap a piece of linen cloth about them, and the children go quite naked. They profess to be Mahometans. Great part of the coast is under the power of the Turks, as well as the country between Egypt and Dungala; the rest is composed of several kingdoms, little known. The exports of this country are gold, elephants' teeth, civet, sandal-wood, and slaves. Millet grows in great abundance; and the sugar-cane is cultivated, but, for want of knowing well how to prepare it, the sugar is black. The principal districts known to the Europeans are Dungala and Sennaar.

NUREMBURG, an imperial city, one of the most handsome and flourishing places in Germany, and capital of Franconia. It is seated in a sandy, barren soil, and yet the inhab. are so industrious, that they have brought this republic into a very flourishing state. It is about 6 m. in circumference, surrounded by high walls, flanked with 365 towers, as also with a deep ditch. The river Pegnitz runs through the middle, and divides it into two parts; over it are 6 wooden bridges, and 6 others of stone. Among the public buildings, two of the churches, the arsenal, and the very magnificent council-house, are greatly admired. The townsmen are divided into eight quarters, or parts, and 131 captainships. The government is aristocratical. The great council is composed of 200 persons, and the supreme council of 34 patricians, and of 8 of the most reputable tradesmen. The burgesses are very industrious, and fine workmen in the arts. Their maps, prints, paintings, and engravings are in high esteem, as well as their musical and mathematical instruments; nor are they less curious in clock-work, and in the several manufactures of metal, ivory, wood, and alabaster. The trade in toys made here, and sold in England by the name of Dutch toys, is considerable, though it does not bring in so much money to the town as formerly. Here is also a famous academy for painting. The anatomical theatre, and the public library, are also worth notice. Geography is much indebted to the celebrated shop for land charts, established here by John Baptist Homann. In the cleanness of their streets, and the neatness of their houses, they imitate the Dutch; and though they formerly kept to their old habits, they now follow the most fashionable modes. Their religion is the Lutheran; yet several Roman Catholic customs are still retained in their divine service. The building, called the Church of the Holy Ghost, has a variety of relics, as also the imperial crown, the imperial sceptre, the globe of the empire, the sword of St. Maurice, the imperial mantle, the white robe of the emperors, called the Dalmatic, the golden surplice, the mantle of the choir, and the gloves, the slippers, and the hereditary crown of the emperor Rodolph II. All these rarities are placed in a chest, which is suspended by a rope in the dome, and they are never taken down but at the coronation of the emperor, or when any person of high distinction wants to see them. The ancient and superb castle, or palace, which the inhab. bought of the burgraves, is still standing at the extremity of the city. It was partly burnt down in 1420, and contains at present a granary, a pentagonal tower, and a prison. Here are four Latin schools, beside a famous college, or university. This town has, in process of time, obtained a considerable circle of territory, about 30 m. in diameter, and 100 in circumf. and in which are two large forests. Their manufactures are conveyed all over Europe by the means of two large fairs. The houses are all built of free-stone, and are four or five stories high. It is seated almost in the centre of Germany, 55 m. NW of Ratisbon, and 250 W by N of Vienna.

Lat. 22 27 S lon. 150 47 W.

OHIO, in N. America, one of the most beautiful rivers in the world; it has its source in the Allegany Mountains, and is called the Allegany, till its junction with the Monongahela, at Fort Pitt, when it first receives the name of Ohio. It runs a course of near 1200 miles, in a SW direction, till it joins the Mississippi, about 10 m. above New Madrid, forming the N boundary of the state of Kentucky, and receiving in its course, numbers of large and small rivers. The only disadvantage this river has is a rapid 1½ m. long, and 1¼ broad, called the Falls of Ohio, in lat. 38 8 N. In this place the river runs over a rocky bottom, and the descent is so gradual, that the fall does not, probably, in the whole, exceed 20 feet. When the stream is low, empty boats only can pass and repass this rapid; their lading must be transported by land; but, when high, boats of any burden may pass in safety. Excepting this place, there is hardly a finer river in the world for navigation by boats. At a salt-spring, near this river, very large bones have been found, far surpassing the size of any species of animals now in America. The head appears to have been about three feet long, the ribs seven, and the thigh bones about four; one of which is deposited in the library at Philadelphia, and is said to weigh seventy-eight pounds. The tusks are above a foot in length, the grinders above five inches square, and eight inches long. Specimens of these bones have been sent to France and England, where they have been found, upon comparison, to be remains of the same species of animal that produce the fossil bones, which have been discovered in Tartary, Chili, and several other places, both of the old and new continent. What animal this is, and by what means its ruins are found in regions so widely different, and where none such exists at present, is a question of difficult decision. The bones bear a great resemblance to those of the elephant. There is no terrestrial animal now known, large enough to produce them. The tusks, with which they are equally furnished, produce true ivory. But, from the form of the teeth, it has been observed, that they must have belonged to a carnivorous animal, whereas the habits of the elephant are foreign to such sustenance, and his jaws totally unprovided with the teeth necessary for its use. From the whole, it has been concluded, to the satisfaction of naturalists, that these bones belonged to a quadruped, now unknown, and whose race is probably extinct.

ONTARIO, a lake of N. America, about 600 m. in circumf. It abounds with fish of an excellent flavour, among which are the Oswego bass, weighing three or four pounds. On its S side it receives the waters of Lake Erie, by means of the river Niagara; near the SE part it receives the river Oswego; and on the NE its waters enter the river Iroquois, which river, at Montreal, takes the name of St. Lawrence.

OODOOANNULLAH, a town of Hindostan Proper in Bengal, seated on the W bank of the Ganges, which is high and cold, and at the foot of a chain of hills. The situation is esteemed unhealthy, on account of the forests in its vicinity. It was the seat of the government of Bengal under the Sultan Sujah, till he fell in the contest for empire with his brother Aurungzebe. The numerous ruins here and in the neighbourhood, evince his passion for building; and the great extent of many of them affords a proof of his magnificence. There still remains a part of the palace, which, in his time, was nearly destroyed by fire. Here is an elegant bridge over the Ganges, built by the same prince; and famous for the victory gained over Meer Cossim, in 1764, by the late Major Adams; 82 m. N by W of Moorshedabad. Lat. 24 58 N, lon. 87 55 E.

OONALASHKA, one of the islands of the Northern Archipelago, visited by Captain Cook in his last voyage. The native inhab. of this island are to all appearances, a very peaceable people, having been much polished by the Russians, who now keep them in a state of subjection. As the island furnishes them with subsistence, so it does, in some measure, with clothing, which is chiefly composed of skins. Fish, birds, roots, berries, and even sea-weed, compose their food. They dry quantities of fish during the summer, which they lay up in small huts for their use in winter. They did not appear to be very desirous of iron, nor to want any other instrument, except sewing needles, their own being formed of bone. With these they sew their canoes, and make their clothes, and also work very curious embroidery. They use, instead of thread, the fibres of plants, which they split to the thickness required. The females are shoemakers, taylors, and boat-builders. They manufacture mats, and baskets of grass, which are both strong and beautiful. Lat. 53 5 N lon. 168 0 W.

OOSTHORCH, a town in the island of Cadsand, 4 m. NE of Sluys.

OOSTENBY, a town of Sweden, in the island of Oeland, 27 m. S of Borkholm.

OPORTO, or PORTO, a handsome city and sea-port of Douro, in Portugal, with an exceellent harbour. It is noted for its strong wines, upwards of 80,000 pipes of which are exported annually; whence all red wines that come from Spain or Portugal to England, are called Port wines. The road is spacious, and will contain a large fleet; that from Brazil sometimes rides here. Next to Lisbon it is the richest, most populous, and most commercial town in the kingdom. Here is an arsenal for fitting out ships of war, which are built in the docks. It is seated on the declivity of a mountain, about 3 m. from the mouth of the Douro, and 147 N by E of Lisbon. Lat. 41 10 N lon. 8 21 W.

OPPELN, a town of Silesia, capital of a principality of the same name, with a fine hospital. The principality contains 27 towns, and but few villages. It is fortified in the ancient manner, and is seated on the river Oder, 35 m. SE of Breslau.

ORACH, a town of Turkish Bosnia.

ORAN, or WARRAN, a town of Tremesen, in Barbary, with several forts, and an excellent harbour. It is seated partly on the side of a hill, and partly on a plain, almost opposite to Carthagena, in Spain. It is about a mile and half in circumf. and is subject to the Spaniards. On the 8th of October, 1790, this place was nearly destroyed by an earthquake, little but the exterior walls being left standing; and 2000 persons perished on this occasion. It is 160 m. W by S of Algiers. Lat. 36 2 N, lon. 0 8 W.

ORANGE, an ancient and considerable town in the depart. of Drome. It was an important place in the time of the Romans. The triumphal arch, visited by connoisseurs, and which is 200 paces from the town, was formerly within its limits. This arch, which was much damaged in 1707 and 1709, was erected by Caius Marius and Luctatius Catullus, after the victory which they obtained over the Cimbri and the Teutones. Here are also the remains of a fine amphitheatre, and some aqueducts, which escaped the fury of the Goths and Saracens. The principality, which is about 10 m. long, and 7 broad, contains one city, two small towns, and nine villages. The sovereignty of it was lodged in the House of Nassau, from 1598 to 1702, when it reverted to Frederic William, king of Prussia, on the death of William III. king of England, and stadtholder of Holland. By the treaty of Utrecht, however, it was ceded to the house of Bourbon. Orange is seated in a fine plain, on the little river Aigues, 26 m. N of Avignon.

ORANIENBURG, a town and palace in the Middle Marche, Brandenburgh, seated on the river Havel.

ORIA, a town of Otranto, Naples.

ORIENT, or PORT L'ORIENT, a regular and handsome town in the depart. of Morbihan, built in 1720, by the French E. India company, who made it the exclusive mart of their commerce. It contains 20,000 inhabitants. The harbour, which is good, but not spacious, is opposite Port Louis, and at the bottom of the same bay. It is 5 m. SSW of Hennebon.

ORIGNY, France, 8 m. E of St. Quintin.

ORIGUELA, a town of Valencia, with a university; and a town of Arragon.

ORJIVA, a town of Granada, in Spain.

ORIO, a town of Guipuscoa, seated at the mouth of the river Orio; and a town of Negropont, in the Archipelago.

ORISSA, a province of Hindostan, bounded by Bahar and Bengal on the N, by Berar on the W, by the northern circars on the SW, and the bay of Bengal on the SE. The soil is flat and moist, but fertile, and the heat excessive. The district of Midniapour, in this province, is subject to the English E. India Company; but all the rest belongs to Berar Mahrattas.

ORISTAGNI, a town of the island of Sardinia, with a good harbour, and an archbishop's see. It is large, and well fortified, but thinly inhabited, on account of the unhealthy air; and is seated on the western coast, on a bay of the same name, 38 m. NW of Cagliari.

Oristown, in Meath, Leinster.

ORKEDAL, a town of Norway, 18 m. SW of Drontheim.

ORKNEY ISLANDS, a cluster of islands on the N of Scotland, from which they are separated by a channel, 20 m. in length, and 6 in its nearest breadth. Their number has generally been reckoned 30, of which 26 are inhabited; the rest are called holms, and are used only for pasturage. The principal one, called the Main Land, or Pomona, greatly exceeds the others in extent. Beyond this island, to the NE are seen, among others, Rowsay and Westra, Shappinsha, and Edda, Stronsa, Sanda, and N. Ronalsha. To the S appear the Isles of Hoy and S. Ronalsha, with others of inferior note. The currents and tides which flow between these islands, are extremely rapid and dangerous; and near the small Isle of Swinna are two whirlpools, that have been known to snatch in boats and light vessels, which were instantly swallowed up. The strait, called Pentland Frith, which divides these islands from the county of Caithness, is likewise very dangerous to those who are not well acquainted with the tides and currents; especially in passing the Pentland Skerries, a cluster of rocks that lie in the E entrance of the Frith. Springs of pure water are found in all the mountainous parts of these islands; and there are numerous lakes and rivulets abounding in fish. The heath on these mountains shelters grouse, plovers, snipes, &c. but here are neither partridges, hares nor foxes. There are numbers of sheep and small black cattle. The products of the valleys and plains are bear (an inferior kind of barley) and oats, but no other sort of grain. The climate of these islands is unfavourable; although they do not suffer so much from frost and snow, as might be supposed from their northerly position. In general, the air is moist; and they are often visited by dreadful storms of wind, rain and thunder. Their longest day is 19 hours and a half; their shortest four and a half. Thus for about three weeks in midsummer they enjoy the sight of the sun, almost without intermission; but, for the same space in winter, that luminary hardly rises above the horizon, and is commonly obscured by clouds and mists. In this gloomy season the absence of day is supplied partly by moon-light. But the radiance of the Aurora Borealis contributes still more effectually to supply this want. The almost incessant coruscations of these meteors are, indeed, sublimely beautiful; and we, who only see the extremities of these northern phenomena, have but a faint idea of their splendour and their motions, in the higher latitudes. The inhab. are robust and hardy: the inferior classes are active and industrious, while those of superior rank are distinguished for politeness and hospitality. The Teutonic, or Pictish language, was in general use here till the last century; but, except in Foula, where a few words are still known by aged people, it is quite lost. The English language, with a Norwegian accent, is now generally spoken in these islands, although many of the inhab. use the Norse. The principal trade of these islands is with Leith, Hamburgh, and Bergen. Their chief exports are linen and woollen yarn, stockings, butter, dried fish, herrings, oils, feathers, with skins of various kinds, and kelp. The Orkneys contain about 23,238 inhab. who are divided into 3 presbyteries, 18 ministeries, and 32 parishes.

ORLAMUNDA, a town of Altenburg, Upper Saxony, subject to the Duke of Saxe Gotha. It is seated at the conflux of the rivers Sala and Orla, 24 m. ESE of Erfurt.

ORLEANNOIS, a ci-devant province of France, which, with the Blaisois and Chartrain, is divided into the three departs. of Loire and Cher, Loiret, and Eure and Loire. It is divided by the river Loire, into the Upper and Lower, and is a very plentiful country. Orleans is the capital.

ORLEANS, a large, ancient, and handsome city of France, capital of the depart. of Loiret. It is built in the form of an oval, and contains 6 principal gates, 22 parishes, and about 42,000 inhab. The streets are spacious, but the houses are generally ill-built. That of the Fauxbourg of Paris is of a prodigious length. The commerce consists in wine, brandy, corn, grocery, and particularly sugar, which is brought raw from Nantes and Rochelle. About 100,000 cwts. of loaf sugar are sent annually from Orleans; a great part of which is taken by the merchants of Paris. Sheep-skins and stockings, both knit and woven, form also a considerable article of trade. This city has, or lately had, a society of natural philosophy, natural history, &c. and a public library. The environs are very pleasant; particularly the suburb of Olivet, on the left side of the Loire, which has a communication with the city by a bridge, the boldness and lightness of which are equally admired. It consists of 9 arches; the centre one of which is 100 feet wide. Orleans is seated on the river Loire, 30 m. NE of Blois, and 60 SSW of Paris. Lat. 47 54 N lon. 1 59 E.

ORLEANS, CANAL OF, commences at the river Loire, about 2 leagues above Orleans, crosses the Forest of Orleans, and the plain which succeeds it, joins the canal of Briarie, near Montargis, and passing by Nemours, falls into the river Seine. It was finished in 1682, and has 30 locks in its course, which is about 18 leagues in extent.

ORLEANS, FOREST OF, near the city of that name, contains 94,000 acres, planted with oak and other valuable trees. It is one of the most considerable of all France; and the sales of its timber and underwood produce annually a considerable revenue.

ORLEANS, NEW, a city of N. America, capital of Louisiana, built in the time of the regency of the duke of Orleans. In 1788, seven-eighths of it were destroyed by fire; but great progress has been since made in rebuilding it. Here are 2 convents, a parish church, magazines, forges, and some public buildings. The houses are chiefly of wood, on foundations of brick. It never contained above 1500 inhab. and is seated in a rich fertile soil, and with an excellent climate on the E side of the Mississippi, 54 m. from its mouth. Lat. 30 2 N lon. 89 53 W.

ORMSKIRK, a handsome town of Lancash. seated near the Grand Canal, 30 m. S of Lancaster, and 206 NNW of London. Market on Tues.

ORMUS, an island at the entrance of the Gulf of Persia, about 10 m. in circumf. Here is neither sweet water nor grass, it being, strictly speaking, no better than a rock of salt. The very dust of the country, within land, is white and pure, as well as pungent to the taste. It was formerly the greatest mart in the East, being visited by shipping from India, Africa, Egypt, and Arabia, as well as by caravans, who carried on a regular trade across the country, and brought with them immense quantities of the richest and most valuable commodities. The houses were then about 4000 in number, and contained 40,000 inhab. The Portuguese conquered this island in 1507, and kept it till 1622, when the Persians, by the assistance of an english squadron of 9 sail, took the place and demolished the houses. The trade was then transferred to Gambron. It is now almost deserted, yet is still the key of the Persian Gulf, on account of the commodiousness of its harbour. Lat. 27 20 N lon. 56 25 E.

ORNANS, a town in the depart. of Doubs. In its vicinity is a well, which, during the time of the great rains, overflows in such a manner as to inundate the adjacent country. The fishes which it disgorges are called umbres. There is a similar well about a league from Vesoul. Ornans is seated on the Louvre, 8 m. SE of Besançon.

ORNE, a depart. of France, part of the ci-devant Normandy, bounded on the N by the depart. of the Calvados, and on the W by that of the Channel. It takes its name from a river which rises in it, and passing by Sees, Argentan, &c. falls into the English Channel 8 m. below Caen. The capital is Alençon.

ORNES, a town of France, 6 m. NE of Verdun.

OROE, an island of Denmark, on the S end of the Little Belt, 8 m. SW of Funen.

OTAHA, one of the Society Islands in the S. Pacific Ocean. It lies N of Ulitea; and is divided from it by a strait, which, in the narrowest part, is not more than 2 m. broad. This island is smaller than Ulitea, and not so fertile, but it has two very good harbours. Lat. 16 33 S lon. 151 20 W.

OTAHEITEE, one of the Society Islands in the S. Pacific Ocean, about 90 m. in circumf. supposed to have been first seen by Quiros in 1606. It was first discovered to the English by Captain Wallis, in 1767, who called it George the Third's Island. Bougainville next arrived at it in 1768, and staid 10 days. Captain Cook, in the Endeavour, came hither, in 1769, to observe the transit of Venus, sailed round the whole island in a boat, and staid here three months. It was afterwards visited twice by that celebrated navigator. It consists of two peninsulas, great part of which is covered with woods and forests, consisting partly of bread-fruit trees, palms, cocoa-nut-trees, plantains, bananas, mulberries, sugar-canes, and others peculiar to that climate, particularly of a kind of ananas, or pine-apple, casuarinas, and dragon trees. The people have mild features and a pleasing countenance. They are about the largest size of the Europeans, of a clear olive or brunette complexion, with fine black hair and eyes, and wear a piece of cloth round the middle, of their own manufacture, and another wrapped about the head, in various picturesque shapes, like a turban. The women, who are accounted very handsome, wear a piece of cloth, with a hole in the middle, through which they pass their heads, so that one part of the garment hangs down behind, and the other before, to the knees; a fine white cloth, like muslin, passes over this, in various elegant turns, round the body, a little below the breast, forming a kind of tunic, of which one turn sometimes falls gracefully across the shoulder. "This dress," says Mr. Forster, "appeared more advantageous to the human figure than any modern fashion we had hitherto seen. Both sexes are adorned, or rather disfigured, by those black stains, occasioned by puncturing the skin, and rubbing a black colour into the wounds. This operation is performed upon the youth of both sexes, when about twelve or fourteen years of age." The houses of the natives consist only of a roof, thatched with the long prickly leaves of the palm-nut-tree, and supported by a few pillars made of the bread-fruit tree. As a roof is sufficient to shelter the natives from rains and nightly dews, and as the climate of this island is one of the finest in the world, the houses have seldom any walls, but are open on all sides. Various little birds are found among the shrubs and trees, that had a very agreeable note, though common report among the Europeans has denied the powers of harmony to the birds of warm climates. The birds most common are two sorts of parroquets, one of a beautiful sapphirine blue, another of a greenish colour, with a few red spots; a king's-fisher, of a dark green, with a collar of the same hue round his white throat; a large cuckoo; several sorts of pigeons or doves, herons, and doves. The cloth of the natives is made of the fibrous bark of the mulberry tree, which is beaten with a kind of mallet; and a glue, made of the hibiscus esculentus, is employed to make the pieces of bark cohere together. Some of these pieces are 2 or 3 yards wide, and 50 yards long. The colours with which they dye this cloth are principally red and yellow. The red is exceedingly beautiful, and of a brighter and more delicate colour than any known in Europe. Their matting is also finer and better in every respect, than any we have in Europe. They are also exceedingly neat in making basket and wicker work. Their fishing lines are also the best in the world, made of a kind of nettle which grows in the mountains, holding the strongest and most active fish, such as bonnettas and albicores. It is remarkable, that though the natives of this island far excel most of the Americans in the knowledge and practice of the arts of ingenuity, yet they have not invented any method of boiling water; and, having no vessel that could bear the fire, they had no more idea that water could be made hot, than that it could be made solid. The only quadrupeds found upon the island, are hogs, domestic dogs, and rats, which the inhabitants suffer to run about at pleasure, without ever trying to destroy them. The sea supplies them with a variety of excellent fish, in every expedient for taking which they are exceedingly ingenious. Long nails on the fingers are a mark of distinction among the natives, as among the Chinese. The two sexes here eat separately, as in many other countries. Their burying-places, called Morai, are built of several ranges of stones, like steps, each about three feet and a half in height, and covered with grasses, ferns, and small shrubs. At a little distance is an oblong inclosure round it, made of stone, about three feet high. The provisions of the Otaheiteans are chiefly fish, pork, cocoa-nuts, bread-fruit, and bananas. Their pork is exceedingly delicious, and entirely free from that luscious richness which makes it resist the stomach so soon in Europe. They are, indeed, much cleanlier than the European hogs, and have not their custom of wallowing in the mire. They are of the small breed, which is commonly called the Chinese, but they have the pendulous ears of ours. Mr. Forster is lavish in his praises of the gentleness, good-nature, and hospitality of this people; and also of the beauty, elegance, and gracefulness of the air, features, and persons of many of them, particularly those of the better sort. On the coast are several excellent bays and harbours, with room and depth of water sufficient for the largest ships. The whole island could furnish about 6780 fighting men.

OUDE, a soubah, or province of Hindostan, subject to a nabob, whose dominions lie on both sides of the Ganges, occupying (with the exception of the district of Rampour) all the flat country between that river and the mountains of Thibet, as well as the principal part of that fertile tract, lying between the Ganges and Jumna, known by the name of Dooab, to within 40 m. of the city of Delhi. The dimensions of Oude and its dependencies are estimated by Major Rennel at 360 m. in length from E to W, and in breadth from 150 to 180. The capital is Lucknow. The nabob is in alliance with the British power, and a brigade of the Bengal army is constantly stationed on the western frontier, covering Oude as well as Bengal, and keeping the western states in awe. The whole expence of this establishment is paid by the nabob of Oude, under the name of a subsidy.

OUDE, an ancient city of Hindostan Proper, in the soubah of Oude, the remains of which are seated on the Ganges, nearly adjoining Fyzabad. It is said to have been the first imperial city of Hindostan, and to have been built by their hero Krishen. In Colonel Dow's translation of Feritsha's history, it is mentioned as the capital of a great kingdom, 1209 years before the Christian era; and it is frequently mentioned in the Mahaberet, the famous Hindoo work in Sanscrit, (the learned language of the Bramins) under the name of Ajudia. It is considered as a place of sanctity; and the Hindoos frequently come hither, in pilgrimage, from all quarters of India.

OUDENARD, a rich and strong town of Flanders, with a manufacture of very fine linen, and of curious tapestry. This town was besieged by the French in 1708, but they were compelled to raise the siege by the Duke of Marlborough, who entirely routed their army, (commanded by the Du es of Burgundy and Vendôme) and took 5000 prisoners. OWYHEE, the easternmost, and by much the largest of the Sandwich Islands, of a triangular shape. Its greatest length, from N to S, is 28 leagues, and its breadth 24. It is divided into 6 districts, two of which, on the NE side, are separated by a mountain, that rises in three peaks, perpetually covered with snow, and may be seen clearly at 40 leagues' distance. To the N of this mountain, the coast consists of high and abrupt cliffs, down which fall many beautiful cascades; and the whole country is covered with cocoa-nut and bread-fruit trees. The peaks of the mountain, on the NE side appear to be about half a mile high, and are entirely covered with snow. To the S of this mountain, the coast presents a prospect of the most dreary kind, the whole country appearing to have undergone a total change from the effects of some dreadful convulsion. The ground is everywhere covered with cinders, and intersected in many places with black streaks, which seem to mark the course of a lava that has flowed, not many ages back, from the mountain to the shore. The southern promontory looks like the mere dregs of a volcano. The projecting headland is composed of broken and craggy rocks, piled irregularly on one another, and terminating in short points; yet, amid these ruins, are many patches of rich soil, carefully laid out in plantations. The fields are inclosed by stone fences, and are interspersed with groves of cocoa-nut trees. There are supposed to be on this island about 150,000 inhab. It was here, on February 14, 1779, that the celebrated Captain Cook fell a sacrifice to a sudden impulse of revenge in the natives, with whom he unfortunately had a misunderstanding or dispute. Lat. of the eastern extremity 19 28 N lon. 156 0 W.

OXFORD, city, the capital of Oxfords. is seated at the confluence of the Thames and Cherwell, on an eminence almost surrounded by meadows, except on the E side. The whole city, with the suburbs, is of a circular form, 3 m. in circumf. It consists chiefly of two spacious streets, which cross each other in the middle of the town; containing 14 parishes, 2000 houses, and 13,000 inhab. The origin of the university is involved in obscurity; a certain proof of its great antiquity. Alfred, who resided at Oxford, together with his three sons, is said to have founded three schools, or colleges here; one for philosophy, another for grammar, and a third for divinity. It is generally supposed, however, to have been a seminary of learning before his time, although it owed its revival and consequence to his liberal patronage; and it was certainly a place of study at the time of the Norman invasion. About the middle of the twelfth century, public lectures on the civil law were read here, not more than ten years after a copy of Justinian's Institutes had been found in Italy. In the reign of Henry III. there were said to be 15,000 scholars here, if they deserved that name, the sole object with many being only to read and write, while the greatest number attained to neither, and the most learned acquired only bad Latin and logic. Here are 20 colleges and 5 halls, several of which stand in the streets, and give the city an air of magnificence. It is thought that there is not such another group of buildings, nor such another university, at this day, in the world. The colleges are provided with sufficient revenues for the maintenance of a master, fellows, and students. In the halls the students live, either wholly or in part, at their own expence. The colleges are University, Baliol, Merton, Exeter, Oriel, Queen's, New, Lincoln, All Souls, Magdalen, Brazen Nose, Corpus Christi, Christ Church, Trinity, St. John Baptist's, Jesus, Wadham, Pembroke, Worcester, and Hertford. Of these, Baliol College is the first, according to Mr. Camden, that was endowed with a regular and permanent income, in 1260. The halls are, Alban, Edmund, St. Mary's, New Inn, and St. Mary Magdalen. These last were anciently hotels, or inns, and were the only academical houses originally possessed by the students of Oxford. Among the libraries in the university, the most distinguished is the Bodleian, founded by Sir Thomas Bodley; those of All Souls College, Christ Church, Queen's, New College, St. John's, Exeter, and Corpus Christi. Among other public buildings are the Theatre, the Ashmolean Museum, the Clarendon Printing-house, the Radcliffe, Infirmary, and a fine Observatory. Oxford has lately been embellished with a noble market-place, and a magnificent stone bridge, and is 20 m. SW of Buckingham, and 58 W by N of London. Markets on Wed. and Sat.

OXFORDSHIRE, a county of England, bounded on the W by Gloucesters. on the N by Warwicks. and Northamptons.; on the E by Bucks, and a part of Berks; and on the S by Berks. Its extreme length is 48 m.; its greatest breadth, 36. It is divided into 14 hundreds, which contain one city, 12 market towns, 280 parishes, 451 villages, 22,702 houses, and 119,199 inhab. The air is sweet, mild, pleasant, and healthy. The soil, though various, is fertile in corn and grass. The southern part of the county, especially on the borders of Bucks. is a hilly and woody country, having a continuation of the Chiltern Hills running through it. The north-western part is also elevated and stony. The middle is, in general, a rich country, watered by numerous streams, running from N to S, and terminating in the Thames. Of these, the most considerable are the Windrush, Evenlode, Cherwell, and Tame. The latter, although an inconsiderable rivulet, has obtained some celebrity from having been supposed to give name to the Thames, into which it flows above Wallingford. The products of Oxfordshire are chiefly those common to the midland farming counties. Its hills yield ochre, pipe clay, and other earths, useful for various purposes. Corn and malt are transmitted from it, by the Thames, to the metropolis. Good cheese is made in the grazing parts. The greatest want in this county is that of fuel; for the woods, with which it once abounded, being greatly diminished, it is necessary to supply the deficiency of fire-wood with sea-coal, brought by a long and troublesome navigation, from London. The junction of the Thames with the Trent and Mersey, by the canal cut from Braunston to Hampton Gay, and by another canal (for which an Act of Parliament was obtained in 1793) from Braunston to Brentford, will greatly remedy this inconvenience. The most considerable forest now remaining in Oxfords. is that of Wichwood, between Burford and Charlbury.

Oxgate, Midd. a prebend of St. Paul's, in Wilsdon parish. Oxhill, Warwicks. N of Brailes. Oxinton, Glouc. 4 m. E of Tewkesbury. Oxley, Staffords. Oyster-Haven, in Cork, Munster, is seldom frequented by vessels. It is sufficiently deep, but the entrance is narrow.

Ozleworth, Glouc. 3 m. SE of Dursley.

PABBAY, one of the W. Islands of Scotland. It is about 9 m. in circuit, and has corn, marl, and pasture. Lat. 57 55 N lon. 6 7 W.

PABLO SAN, a lake of Otabalo, in Quito, abounding with fish and wild fowl. On its banks is a village of the same name. Also a town of Caxamarca, in Truxillo.

PACAJES, a jurisdiction of La Paz, in Buenos Ayres, containing some rich silver mines. The air is temperate, and the pastures are good.

PACEM, a town and kingdom on the N. coast of Sumatra, dependent on Achen. It is 120 m. SE of Achen.

PACHACAMAC, a town of Lima, in S. America, celebrated for a magnificent temple, built by the Incas of Peru, and dedicated to the Supreme Being. When Pizarro took this temple, he found an immense quantity of gold in it, besides what the soldiers pillaged. It is situated in a valley of the same name, about 12 m. S of Lima.

PACHSU, and ANTIPACHSU, two small islands on the coast of Greece, S of Corfu; lately subject to Venice.

PACHUCA, a town of Mexico, famous for silver mines, as rich as any in the province. It is 35 m. NNE of Mexico.

PACIFIC OCEAN, otherwise called the SOUTH SEA, lies between Asia and America, and is upwards of 10,000 m. in breadth. This immense body of water may be said also to stretch from pole to pole. When Magellan entered this ocean, through the dangerous strait that bears his name, he sailed 3 months and 20 days, in a uniform direction toward the NW, without discovering land. In the extreme distress which he suffered in this voyage, before he discovered the Ladrone Islands, he had the consolation, however, of enjoying such an uninterrupted course of fair weather, with favourable winds, that he bestowed on this ocean the name of Pacific, which it still retains. The Spaniards, having passed the Isthmus of Darien from N to S, at the first discovery of this ocean, named it the South Sea, although, with respect to America, it is more properly the Western Ocean. On one side of the equator it is called the N Pacific Ocean; and, on the other, the S. Pacific Ocean.

Packington, Leicesters. in a retired delightful situation, within a mile of Ashby-de-la-Zouch.

Packington, Staffords. NW of Tamworth. Packington, Magna and Parva, Warwicks. S of Coleshill. Pack's-Hill, Sussex, near Horsted-Keyns. Pack-Wood, Warwicks. 4 m. from Warwick.

PACY, a town in the depart. of Eure, seated on the river Eure, 10 m. E of Evreux.

PADANG, a sea-port town on the W coast of Sumatra, with a fort and settlement belonging to the Dutch. Lat. 1 0 S.

Padbury, 2½ m. SE of Buckingham, on a river that runs into the Ouse.

Paddington, a village of Midd. which lies by the N of London, or rather by the late increase of buildings, may be said to form a part of it, and yet the parish contains many sequestered rural spots. A canal is making from this place, which is to join the Grand Junction Canal at or near Hayes. Paddingwick, Midd. near Hammersmith. Paddlesworth, Kent, 3 m. SE of Elham. Paddlesworth, Kent, 3 m. N of W. Malling. Padibam, Lancas. SE of Clithero.

PADERBORN, a considerable city of West, phalia, capital of a bishopric of the same name and formerly one of the Hanse Towns. The rivulet Pader rises here under the high altar of the cathedral. It is a celebrated university, and is 37 m. SW of Minden, and 43 ESE of Munster. Lat. 51 46 N lon. 8 55 E.

PADERBORN, THE BISHOPRIC OF, is a small district, of Germany, in Westphalia, about 44 m. in its greatest length and 36 in its greatest breadth. It is bounded by the county of Lippe on the N and by the duchy of Westphalia and the principality of Waldeck on the S. In the middle of it are high mountains, containing iron-mines; but the rest of the country is fertile in corn and pastures. It is most remarkable for its bacon, or hams, and venison. The bishop is a prince of the empire.

Padfield, Derbys. in the High Peak. Padley, Derbys. in the High Peak, near Scarsdale. Padmore-Chase, Staffords. E of Bloreheath. Padongre, Warwicks. near Studley.

PADRON, EL, a town of Spanish Galicia, seated on the Ulla.

Padside, Yorks. S of Pately-Bridge. Padston, or Paxton, Northumb. on the Tweed, W of Berwick. Padstow, Devons. between Hatherly and the Merlands.

PADSTOW, a sea-port town in Cornw. is a place of some trade to Ireland, Bristol, and London. The harbour is capable of containing vessels of 500 tons at high-water, but is of dangerous access, without a skilful pilot, being rocky on the E side, and barred with sea-sand on the W. The chief business here, and along this coast, next to the trade in slate tiles, is fishing for herrings, which come up the channel in October. It is 26 SSW of Launceston, and 243 W by S of London. Market on Sat.

PADUA, an ancient, large, and celebrated city of Italy, with a university. It is the capital of the Paduano, but is much less considerable than it was formerly; for great part of the circuit within the walls is unbuilt, and the town in general so thinly inhabited, that grass is seen in many places in the interstices of the stones with which the streets are paved. The houses are built on piazzas, which, when the town was well inhabited, and in a flourishing state, may have had a magnificent appearance; but they now rather give it a gloomy air. The streets, also, in general, (although there is a great number of beautiful buildings) are narrow, dark, dirty, and ill-paved. Padua contains 26 parish churches, 41 convents, 4 hospitals, 9 squares, 7 stone bridges, and 7 gates. The Franciscan church is dedicated to St. Anthony, accounted the great patron of the city. "The body of this holy person," says Dr. Moore, "is inclosed in a sarcophagus, under an altar in the middle of the chapel, and is said to emit a very agreeable and refreshing flavour. Pious Catholics believe this to be the natural effluvia of the saint's body; while heretics assert, that the perfume (for a perfume there certainly is) proceeds from certain balsams rubbed on the marble every morning, before the votaries come to pay their devotions. I never presume to give an opinion on contested points of this kind; but I may be allowed to say, that if this sweet odour really proceeds from the holy Franciscan, he emits a very different smell from any of the brethren of that order, whom I ever had an opportunity of approaching." The walls of this church are covered with votive offerings of ears, eyes, arms, legs, noses, and every part almost of the human body, in token of cures performed by this saint; for whatever part has been the seat of the disease, a representation of it is hung up in silver or gold, according to the gratitude or wealth of the patient. Near this building is a place called the School of St. Anthony, where many of his actions are painted in fresco; some of them by Titian. The university, formerly so celebrated, is now, like every thing else in this city, on the decline. Here is a cloth manufactory; and it is said, that the inhabitants of Venice (the nobles not excepted) lately wore no other cloth than what was made here. The city, however, swarms with beggars, who ask charity in the name of St. Anthony. Padau is seated on the rivers Brenta and Bachiglione, in a fine plain; and is about 7 m. in circumf. 22 m. W of Venice. Lat. 45 22 N lon. 12 1 E.

PADUANO, a ci-devant province of Italy, in the territory of Venice, bounded on the N by the Trevisano. Its soil is well watered, one of the most fertile in Italy, and is about 35 m. in length, and 28 in breadth. Padua is the capital.

Padworth, Berks, near Aldermarston. Padyngen, Surry, in Abinger parish.

PAEFENHOFFEN, a town in the depart. of Lower Rhine, seated near the river Motter, 8 m. W of Haguenau.

Pagen, Isle of Wight, in E. Medina. Page-street, Midd. E of Edgeworth. Pagham, Sussex, SW of Arundel. Paglesham, Essex, E of Stambridge. Pagmore, Yorks. a mile from Barnesley.

PAGO, an island of Dalmatia, in the Adriatic, 20 m. long and 6 wide. It was till of late, subject to the Venetians. The air is cold and the soil barren; but it is well-peopled, and contains salt-works. Lat. 44 42 N.

Pagrave, Magna and Parva, Norfolk, near Swaffham. Pailington, Warwicks. N of Harborough.

PAINBOEUF, a town in the depart. of Lower Loire, situated at the mouth of the river Loire. It is a very considerable seaport, whence all the ships belonging to Nantes take their departure, and where they anchor on their arrival; but at the beginning of this century, was only a village. It is 20 m. W of Nantes.

Paington, Devons. on the sea coast, 4 m. from Brixham, Torbay; here are many genteel houses, occupied by the families of the officers of the navy.

Painpill, Dorsets. Pains, Sussex, between Cuckfield and Ditchling. Pain's Castle, Radnorsh. Painsford, Devons. in Ashprington parish. Pain's-Hill, Surry, near Cobham. Painsley, Staffords. NW of Leigh.

PAINSWICK, a town of Gloucesters. has a considerable manufacture of broad cloths for the army, and for the India and Turkey trade; and hence is brought a stone, remarkable for its beauty and neatness, for the pavement of floors. It is situated in a fine healthy air, on a brook which runs into the Stroud, 7 m. SE of Gloucester, and 101 W by N of London. Market on Tues.

PAISLEY, a large manufacturing town of Renfrews. in Scotland. It contains several broad and regular streets, which have names descriptive of the various employments of the inhabitants; such as Silk Street, Cotton Street, Lawn Street, Gauze Street, Inkle Street, &c. in which are many good houses. The principal manufactures are in silk and thread-gauze, which are so neat and beautiful, that they have been displayed at court in the birth-day dresses. The extensive cotton works here employ, not only numbers of women, but even of very young girls. Some of the principal manufacturers, who have become opulent, have built elegant houses for their residence; and an idea of their great success may be formed from this circumstance, that they have been known to pay, to the people they employ, 500*l.* a week. "A fertile country," observes a late writer, "cheap labour, a sober and steady people, abundance of coal, and watercarriage, were circumstances that first invited English manufacturers to settle in this country; and the justness of their views have been fully evinced by the most prosperous success." At present the silk branch, which for some years past out-did that of Spitalfields, is on the decline; but the muslin has come in its room, and the thread manufacture has considerably increased. Here are also considerable tanworks, some soap and candle works, a manufacture of ribbons, and another of inkle or tape. According to a calculation made in 1804, the manufactures of Paisley, in silk-gauze, lawn, linen-gauze, and white sewing thread amounted to the value of 48,000*l.* and persons were employed in carrying them on. The magnificent abbey, for which Paisley was once noted, is now partly in ruins; but there is a chapel here entire, which is famous for a surprising echo. The flap of a door produces the effect of thunder; and a melodious tune delights the ear with the idea of celestial harmony. Paisley is supposed to contain about one-third of the number of the inhabitants of Glasgow; but it stands on nearly as much ground. It is situated on the river Cart, 6 m. W of that city.

PAITA, ST. MICHAEL DE, a town of Quito, in S. America, founded by Francis Pizarro, in 1531, and containing about 200 families. The bay or harbour is a very secure anchoring-place, the best, indeed, on the coast, and is frequented by all vessels coming from the north, which are bound to Callao. Passengers also, from Acapulco or Panama, disembark here, and travel by land to Lima, here being a tolerably good road, parallel to the coast, with a number of towns and villages for the accommodation of travellers. Here is a small fort, surrounded with a brick wall, and mounted with 8 pieces of cannon, but neither ditch nor out-work. Paita has been often taken by the English, and particularly by Commodore Anson, in 1741, who plundered and burnt the town, because the governor refused to ransom it. Lat. 6 12 S lon. 81 19 W.

PALACIOS, a town of Leon.

Pakefield, Suffolk, near the sea, S of Lowestoff. Pakenham, Suffolk, 3 m. from Bury. Pakenhill, Gloucesters. in the parish of Stroud. Pakington, Worcesters. near Bromsgrove.

PALAIS, LE, a town of France, capital of Belleisle, situated on the coast. It contains about 500 houses. Lat. 47 18 N lon. 3 2 W.

PALAIS, ST. a town in the depart. of the Lower Pyrenees, giving name to a mountainous country, which produces scarcely any thing but millet, oats, and fruits. This town and district, with those of St. Pied de Port, forms nearly the whole of the late province of Lower Navarre, annexed to France by Henry IV. who held it in right of his mother Jeanne d'Albret. The town of St. Palais is situated on the river Bidouse, 15 m. SSE of Bayonne.

PALAMBAM, a town and kingdom on the E part of Java, situated on a river of the same name, about 50 m. from the sea. The Dutch, who have a fort here, purchase large quantities of pepper at a low price. Lat. 2 35 S.

PALAMCOTTA, or TINEVELLEY, a town and province in the Carnatic, 74 m. SSW of Madura.

PALAMOS, a sea-port of Catalonia.

PALANKA, a town of Bulgaria; a town of Bessarabia, situated on the Dneister, and a castle of Hungary, 22 m. NE of Gran.

PALATINATE OF THE RHINE, or LOWER PALATINATE, an electorate of Germany, in the circle of the Lower Rhine, adjoining France, the electorate of Mentz, the bishopric of Worms, the duchy of Wurtemburg, &c. Its greatest extent is about 80 m. and the principal rivers are the Rhine and the Neckar. It is a very fertile country, though rather mountainous, abounding with fine vineyards, fields, forests, meadows, gardens, rivers, and lakes. Heidelberg is the principal town, but Manheim is the electoral residence.

PALATINATE, UPPER, a part of Bavaria, bounded on the W and NW by Franconia, on the E and NE by Bohemia, and on the S by the duchy of Neuburg and Lower Bavaria. In 1714, it was ceded by the peace of Baden, to the Elector of Bavaria. Amberg is the capital.

Palatine Town, in Carlow, Leinster, so called from a colony of industrious people, who were driven from their native country, by the persecuting arms of Lewis XIV of France.

PALAZZUOLO, a town in the Bressan, Italy; and a town in the Val di Noto, Sicily.

PALENCIA, a town of Leon.

PALERMO, anciently PANORMUS, a rich and beautiful city of Sicily, in the Val di Mazara; the seat of the viceroy, and capital of the island. It is situated near the extremity of a kind of natural amphitheatre, formed by high and rocky mountains; but the country that lies between the city and these mountains, is one of the richest and most pleasant spots in the world; the whole appearing a magnificent garden, filled with fruit trees of every species, particularly oranges, lemons, and Indian figs, and watered by clear fountains and rivulets, that form a variety of windings through this charming plain. The inhabitants are estimated by Mr. Brydone, at 150,000. Two great streets intersect each other in the centre of the city, where they form a handsome square, called the Ottangolo, adorned with elegant uniform buildings. From the centre of this square is seen the whole of these noble streets, and the four great gates of the city, which terminate them. These gates are each at the distance of about half a mile, the diameter of the city being no more than a mile. They are elegant pieces of architecture, richly adorned; particularly the Porta Nuova, and the Porta Felice, terminating the great street called the Corso, that runs from SW and NE. The Porta Felice opens to the Marino, a beautiful walk, that constitutes one of the great pleasures of the noblesse of Palermo. It has on one side the wall of the city, and on the other the sea, whence there is always an agreeable breeze. In the centre of the Marino is an elegant kind of temple, which, in the summer, is made use of as an orchestra. The concert does not begin till the clock strikes midnight; the flambeaux are extinguished at the Porta Felice, where the servants wait for the return of the carriages; the company therefore generally continue an hour or two in darkness, except when it is moonlight. The concert finishes about two in the morning. Many of the churches of Palermo are very rich and magnificent. The cathedral is a large, ancient, Gothic structure, supported within by 80 columns of oriental granite, and divided into a great number of chapels, some of which are extremely rich, particularly that of St. Rosolia, the patroness of Palermo, who is held in great veneration. The monuments of their Norman kings, several of whom are buried here, as also of the emperors Henry V. and Frederic II. are of the most beautiful porphyry, some of them near 700 years old. The church of the late Jesuits is equal in magnificence to most of the structures in Italy. The Chiesa-del-Palazzo is entirely encrusted over with ancient Mosaic, and the vaulted roof is all of the same. "But it is endless," says Mr. Brydone, "to talk of churches, here are upwards of 300." Palermo is crowded with statues of sovereigns and tutelar saints, placed in small courts and squares upon pedestals of colossal proportion, and tasteless form. In the streets the women hide their heads in black veils; a very ancient mode of dress in this island. The city is well lighted with reverberating lamps, and, in wet weather, moveable wooden bridges are provided for crossing the kennels, which then become rapid torrents. The harbour is very dangerously open to the swell and sea from the NE quarter, and, even at the anchoring-place, ships lie in peril whenever a westerly wind blows, as it rushes with great impetuosity through the valley of Colli between the mountains. Properly speaking, Palermo has two harbours; one made in the year 1405, which serves for barks, and the other, finished in 1590, capable of receiving vessels of war, at the entrance of which a light is fixed. Indeed this city has suffered greatly at different periods, by earthquakes or inundations. About a mile from Palermo is a celebrated convent of Capuchins, in which is a vault made use of as a receptacle for the dead. It consists of four wide passages, each about 40 feet in length, into which the light is admitted by windows at the ends. Along the sides of these are niches, in which the bodies are set upright, clothed in coarse garments, with their heads, arms, and feet bare. They are prepared for this situation by broiling them 6 or 7 months upon a gridiron, over a slow fire, till all the fat and moisture are consumed. The skin, which looks like pale coloured leather, remains entire, and the character of the countenance is in some degree preserved. Except the bodies of two reputed saints, one of which had been there 150 years, and the other 100, they are all of modern date, as appears by an inscription on a small piece of pasteboard hung to the arms of every corpse, signifying the name of the person, and the time of his decease. In some of the higher niches they are laid out at full length, and at the top are children of 6 or 7 years of age. On the floors are handsome trunks, containing the bodies of persons of distinction, the keys of which are kept by the relations. Here are some manufactures of silk and stuffs, and they export in good years about 40,000 bales of raw silk. Palermo is the see of an archbishop, and contains an university. It is seated on the NW side of the island, at the bottom of the bay of the same name, 162 m. S by W of Naples, and 235 S by E of Rome. Lat. 38 15 N lon. 13 23 E.

PALESTINE, a country of Turkey in Asia, so called from the Philistines, who inhabited its sea-coast. It is also called Judea, from the Patriarch Judah; the Land of Canaan, and the Promised Land. From its having been the scene of the birth, ministry, and death of Jesus, it has been superstitiously denominated the Holy Land. It is divided from Syria on the N by Mount Libanus, or Lebanon; from Arabia Deserta on the E by the mountains of Seir; and it has the deserts of Arabia Petrea on the S, and the Mediterranean on the W. In length it is about 170 m. but its breadth varies from 58 to 22. It is, in general, a fertile country, abounding, where cultivated, with corn, wine, oil, pulse, fruits, silk, cotton, tobacco, drugs, and aromatic herbs; and it might supply the neighbouring country with all these, as it anciently did, were the present inhabitants equally industrious. The fields and woods abound with flowers of every species. The parts about Jerusalem, its capital, are the most mountainous and rocky; but they feed numerous herds and flocks, and yield plenty of honey, with excellent wine and oil; and the valleys produce large crops of corn. The climate is exceedingly good.

PALESTRINA, anciently PRÆNESTE, a town of Italy, in the Campagna di Roma, near which formerly stood a temple dedicated to Fortune, and another to Hercules.

PALESTRINA, one of the largest and most populous of the islands called the Lagunes, near Venice.

Palgrave, Suffolk, near Diss in Norfolk.

PALICATA, a sea-port on the coast of Coromandel, where the Dutch have a factory. It is 25 m. N of Madras.

PALINGE, a town of France, in the depart. of Saone and Loire, 7 m. NW of Charolles.

Pallas-Inn, in King's County, Leinster.

Palling, Norfolk, on the coast, NE of Hickling. Pallington, Dorsets. a hamlet of Affpiddle.

Pallis, in Limerick, Munster.

PALLISER ISLANDS, a group of islands in the S. Pacific Ocean, the largest of which is about 15 m. long, and 9 broad. Lat. 15 to 16 S lon. 146 to 147 W.

PALMA, formerly called CAPRARIA, from the great number of goats bred here, one of the Canary islands, about 60 m. in circumf. The soil is fertile in corn, wine, sugar-canes, and fruits, and here are quadrupeds and birds of all kinds: It has a handsome town of the same name, with a safe harbour, much frequented by shipping of different nations for wines, these being reckoned equal to Malmsey: 12,000 pipes, at least, are exported annually to the W. Indies, and elsewhere. Lat. 28 36 N lon. 18 W.

PALMA, a town of Portuguese Estremadura, seated on the river Cadaon, 18 m. E of Setuval.

PALMA, a town of Cordova, in Spain.

PALMA, a town of Lavora; and a town of Calabria Ultra; both in Naples.

PALMA, a sea-port of Mazara, Sicily.

PALMA DI SOLO, a sea-port town of Sardinia, on the S coast.

PALMA NUOVA, a town of Friuli, seated on a canal which communicates with the Lizonzo, 55 m. NE of Venice.

PALMAS, one of the Philippine Islands, SE of Mindanao.

PALMAS, CAPE, a promontory of Guinea, on the Grain Coast. Lat. 4 26 N lon. 5 34 W.

PALMAS, or CIVIDAD DE LAS PALMAS, a large sea-port town in the Island of Canary, capital of that and of all the islands, with a good harbour, defended by a citadel. The inhab. who are, in general, rich, are about 120,000 in number.

PALMELA, a town of Portuguese Estremadura, 6 m. N of Setuval.

Palmer's Bay, Kent, near the N. Foreland. Palmer's Green, Middlesex, near Southgate.

PALMERSTON'S ISLAND, an island in the S. Pacific Ocean, discovered by Captain Cook, in 1774, and visited by him in his last voyage. It consists of a group of small islands, about 10, in number, connected by a reef of coral rocks, and lying in a circular direction. This place admits of no anchorage, nor are there any inhab. on it, though it abounds with cocoanuts, scurvy-grass, and the wharra-tree. It does not exceed a mile in circumf. and is not elevated more than 3 feet above the level of the sea. It consists entirely of a coral sand, with a small mixture of blackish mould, which appeared to be produced from decayed vegetables. "Notwithstanding this poor soil," says Captain Cook, "it is covered with a variety of trees and bushes. At one part of the reef, which looks into, or bounds the lake that is within, there was a large bed of coral, almost even with the surface, which afforded, perhaps, one of the most enchanting prospects that nature has any where produced. Its base was fixed to the shore, but reached so far in, that it could not be seen; so that it seemed to be suspended in the water, which deepened so suddenly, that at the distance of a few yards, there might be 7 or 8 fathoms. The sea was at this time quite unruffled; and the sun, shining bright, exposed the various sorts of coral in the most beautiful order; some parts branching into the water with great luxuriance, others lying collected in round balls, and in various other figures; all of which were greatly heightened by spangles of the richest colours, that glowed from a number of large clams, which were everywhere interspersed. But the appearance of these was still inferior to that of the multitude of fishes, that glided gently along, seemingly with the most perfect security. The colours of the different sorts were the most beautiful that can be imagined; the yellow, blue, red, black, &c. far exceeded any thing that art can produce. Their various forms, also, contributed to increase the richness of this submarine grotto, which could not be surveyed without a pleasing transport, mixed, however, with regret, that a work so stupendously elegant, should be concealed in a place where mankind could seldom have an opportunity of rendering the praises justly due to so enchanting a scene." With respect to the animal creation, the most singular that Captain Cook observed were some large eels, beautifully spotted, which, when followed, would raise themselves out of the water, and endeavour, with an open mouth, to bite their pursuers. There was also a brown spotted rock fish, about the size of a haddock, so tame, that, instead of swimming away, it would remain fixed, and gaze at them. Had they been in want, a sufficient supply might have been had, for thousands of the clams already mentioned stuck upon the reef, some of which weighed 2 or 3 pounds. Lat. 18 8 S lon. 162 57 W.

Palmerstown, in Dublin, Leinster, 3 m. from the metropolis.

PALMYRA, formerly a magnificent city of Syria, capital of a kingdom, of which Zenobia was queen, who held it out a long time against the Romans, but was at length taken captive by the Emperor Aurelian, and led in triumph through the streets of Rome. The stupendous ruins of this city were visited by Messrs. Wood and Dawkins, in 1751; and a splendid account of them, illustrated by plates, was published by Mr. Wood, in 1753. This place, called by the Arabs, Tadmor in the Desert, appears to have been built originally by Solomon, but the architecture of its admired remains is probably Grecian, coeval with the time of the Seleucidæ. The present inhab. consisting of 30 or 40 families, have erected their mud cottages within the spacious court of a magnificent temple of the sun. Palmyra is situated in the midst of a large sandy plain, surrounded on 3 sides by a long chain of mountains, 90 m. E of Damascus. Lat. 33 20 N. lon. 38 50 E.

PALNAUD, a district of Hindostan, included in the Carnatic, though situated between Golconda and the Guntoor Circar, S of the river Kistna. It is about 70 m. in length, and 15 in breadth. Zimerycotta is the capital.

PALOS, a town of Andalusia, with a tolerable tide harbour, at the mouth of Rio Tinto. Columbus set sail from here on his first adventurous voyage, in 1492.

PALOS CAPE, a promontory of Murcia S of the town of Palos, and 18 m. E of Carthagena.

PALOTTA, a town of Lower Hungary.

PALTA, or JAMDRO, a famous lake of Thibet, lying about 24 m. to the S. of Lassua. According to the Lama's map, it is 105 m. in circumf.; and in the middle of it is one large island. On the W shore of this island, or rather congeries of islands, is a monastery, and the seat of the Lamissa Tarcepamo, or the Great Regenerate, in whom the Thibetians think that a divine spirit is regenerated, as in the Great Lama. The word Lama signifies a priest, or minister of religion, and Lamissa is the feminine of Lama. This lake is 12 m. S of the river Burrampooter, or Sanpoo.

Palterton, Derbys. S of Bolsover. Paltons, Hants, NE of the New Forest.

PALUDA, a town of Erzerum, seated near the Euphrates, and inhabited by Mahometans and Christians. The prince is, in some respects, independent of the Grand Seignior.

Pamber, Hants, N of Basingstoke. Pamel Bridge, Sussex, near Winchelsea.

PAMIERS, a town in the depart. of Arriege, seated on the river Arriege, 8 m. NNW of Foix.

Pamington, Gloucesters. near Tewkesbury.

PAMPANGAN, a town and extensive province of Lucon, one of the Manilla islands, situated on the E coast, in lat. 15 5 N.

PAMPELLONNE, a town in the depart. of Tarn, 12 m. N of Alby.

PAMPELUNA, Spain, the capital city of Spanish Navarre. Its squares are handsome and adorned with shops full of rich merchandise. It is seated on the river Arga, 42 m. S of Bayonne, and 172 NNE of Madrid, in a pleasant valley, surrounded by lofty hills. In this town was first invented the order of the Jesuits. Lat. 42 47 N lon. 1 35 W.

PAMPELUNA, a town of S. America, in New Granada, famous for its mines of gold, and numerous flocks of sheep. It is 200 m. S of Maricaibo, and 300 NE of Popayan. Lat. 6 30 N lon. 70 30 W.

Pamphil, Dorsets. near Winborne. Pampisford, Cambridges. near Whittlesford. Pampocalia, Yorks. SW. of Wetherby. Pan, Isle of Wight, in E. Medina.

PAN, or PAHAN, a sea-port on the E coast of Malacca, capital of a kingdom of the same name. It is remarkable for a great number of elephants, and for the plenty of pepper it produces. Lat. 3 15 N.

PANAMA, a city of S. America, capital of a jurisdiction of the same name, with straight and broad streets, and elegant public buildings. The merchandise of Chili and Peru is brought to this place, particularly the gold and silver, and all the commodities brought up the river Chagre. The ships unload at a small island, 3 m. from this place, because the water is so shallow as not to admit them to come nearer. Old Panama was burnt by Captain Morgan, a buccaneer, in 1670, and the present town has been built 4 m. distant from it, in a more advantageous situation. The province contains 3 cities, 12 villages, and a great number of ranccherias, or assemblages of Indian huts. Here are also several gold mines, but they are neglected for the sake of the pearl fishery on the coast. It stands on a bay of the same name. Lat. 8 48 N lon. 80 15 W.

PANARIA, one of the Lipari Islands, barren, and very inconsiderable, being only 5 m.

in circumf. It is 3 m. NNE of Lipari, and 30 N of Sicily.

PANAY, an island of the Philippines, of a triangular form, lying E of Paragua. It is 180 m. in circumf. and is the most populous and fertile of them all. It is watered by a great number of rivers and brooks, and produces vast quantities of rice. The number of Indians tributary to the Spaniards is about 17,000.

Panborough, Somersets. W of Wells. Pancras, a village of Middlesex, a little to the NW of London. The burying-ground here is remarkable for being the principal place of interment for the Romanists. At a public-house near it, there is a medicinal spring. Here is an hospital for inoculation, to which is now added the Small-Pox Hospital formerly at Clerkenwell. Here also is the Veterinary College, established in 1791, for the improvement of farriery, and the treatment of cattle in general. The noble stables and Anatomical Theatre are finished, but the present college is only a temporary building.

Pancras-Wick, Devons. near Bradworthy. Panfield, Essex, near Bocking and Braintree.

Pangborn, Berks, by the Thames, NW of Reading. Pangden, Sussex, SW of Ditchling.

PANGO, a town and district of Congo, in Africa, on the river Barbela.

PANJAB, a country of Hindostan, being that which is watered by the five eastern branches of the Indus. It was the scene of Alexander's last campaign, and the ne plus ultra of his conquests. It forms a square of about 250 m. and includes the whole soubah of Lahore, and a great part of Moultan Proper. To the lower part of Moultan it is flat and marshy, and inundated, like Bengal, by the periodical rains which fall during our summer.

Pannal, Yorks. near Knaresborough. Pannanach-Wells, a village of Aberdeens. situated a little below the waterfall, called the Lin of Dee, in the valley of Glenmuick. It is noted for its mineral waters, which are of a diuretic quality.

PANNIPUT, a town of Delhi, in Hindostan. In a plain near this town, a battle was fought in 1761, between an army of 200,000 Mahrattas, and Abdallah, king of Candahar, at the head of 150,000 Mahometans, when the former were totally defeated. They lost the flower of their army, with their best generals, and the number of prisoners taken was almost incredible. From that period, the power of the Mahrattas has been sensibly on the decline. Panniput is 50 m. NW of Delhi.

Pansanger, 2 m. NW of Hertford. Panston, Northumb. S of Learmouth. Pant, a river in Essex, which falls into Blackwater Bay.

PANTALARIA, an island in the Mediterranean, between Sicily and the coast of Tunis, about 25 m. in circumf. and containing 3000 inhab. It abounds in cotton, fruits, wine, capers, olives, and figs; but the inhab. import their corn from Sicily. It belongs to the king of Naples. Lat. 36 55 N lon. 12 31 E.

Panteage, Monmouths. N of Pontipool. Panley, Gloucesters. NE of Newent. Panton, Lincolns. near Ancaster.

PANUCO, a town, province, and river of Mexico, with a bishop's see. Here are veins of gold and salt-works, which are the principal riches of the inhab. It is seated near the Gulf of Mexico, in lat. 23 0 N lon. 98 9 W.

Panxford, Norfolk, between Norwich and S. Walsham. Panxworth, in the parish of Ranworth, near Acle, Norfolk.

PAOOM, a small island of the New Hebrides, S of Mallicollo.

PAPA, a town of Hungary, 45 m. W of Buda.

Papa Stour, a small island of the Shetlands. Papa Stronsay, a small island of the Orkneys, NE of Stronsay. Papa Westra, a small island of the Orkneys, 3 m. N of Westra.

Papcastle, Cumberl. a hamlet of Bridekirk. It is pleasantly situated on an eminence, within a m. of Cockermouth; and the Derwent meanders beautifully through the intervening vale.

PAPENBURG, a town on the S frontier of E. Friesland, E of the Ems, and 24 m. S of Embden; of late it has been much noticed. About 124 years since, it was a marshy waste, but now contains 2 churches, 400 houses, and about 3500 inhab. and has a number of vessels of small burthen, chiefly employed in carrying turf to Bremen, Hamburg, &c.

PAPOUL, ST. a town in the depart. of Aude, seated on the river Lembe, 15 m. WNW of Carcassone.

PAPPENHEIM, a town and county of Aichstadt, Franconia.

Papplewick, Nottinghams. near Newstead. Here are some large cotton-mills. Papworth, Agnes and Evered, 11 m. W of Cambridge. Papworth, Nether, Huntingdons. between Great Paxton and Hilton.

PARA, or BELEM, a town, river, and jurisdiction in Brasil, on the N side of the river Orellana. This government comprehends that part of Guiana, which belongs to the Portuguese, and extends 600 m. from E to W, and 200 from N to S. Lat. 1 30 S.

PARACLETE, THE. See QUINCEY.

Paracomb, Devons. near Comb-Martin.

PARAGUA, the most westerly of the Philippine Islands, 180 m. in length, and 40 in breadth. The Spaniards have a fort here, but the king is said to be tributary to Borneo.

PARAGUAY, a large country of S. America, in the government of Buenos Ayres. It contains 6 provinces: namely, Paraguay Proper, Parana, Guaria, Uraguay, Tucuman, and La Plata, from which the whole country is also called La Plata, and has numerous lakes and rivers. Of the latter, the 3 principal are the Paraguay, Uraguay, and Parana, the united streams of which form the celebrated Rio-de-la-Plata. These rivers annually overflow their banks; and, on their recess, leave them enriched by a slime, that renders the soil extremely fertile. This vast country is far from being wholly subdued, or planted by the Spaniards; many parts being still unknown to them, as well as to every other European nation. The principal province of which we have any knowledge, is that which is called La Plata, toward the mouth of the river of that name. This province, with all the adjacent parts, is one continued plain for several hundred miles; extremely fertile, and producing cotton in great abundance, tobacco, and the valuable herb called Paraguay, which is peculiar to this country, and the infusion of which is drunk in all the Spanish provinces of S. America, instead of tea. They have also a variety of fruits, and very rich pastures, or plains, full of horses, mules, black cattle, and herds of sheep; but the country has but few woods or forests. The air is remarkably sweet and serene. The Spaniards discovered this country, by sailing up the Rio-de-la-Plata, in 1515, and founded the town of Buenos Ayres, on the S side of the river. In 1580, the Jesuits were admitted into these fertile regions, where they afterwards founded, at the commencement of the 17th century, and with the permission of Philip III. the famous missions of Paraguay; which were a number of colonies, each governed by two Jesuits, one of whom was rector, and the other his curate. They undertook not only to make proselytes to the church, but to open a new source of wealth to the mother country. To this end they represented, that they ought to be independent of the Spanish governors; and that as the vices of the Europeans might contaminate their new converts, and destroy the great objects of their missions, no other Spaniards should be permitted to enter the country. To these terms the court agreed; they consenting to a certain capitation tax on the natives, and to some other stipulations in favour of the crown. In process of time, the Jesuits, by the most wonderful address and persevering patience, and without the least degree of force, acquired the most absolute dominion, both ecclesiastical and civil, over the natives, whom they even instructed in military discipline. In 1757, the king of Spain exchanged the colonies on the E shore of the river Uraguay for the Portuguese colony of St. Sacrament, which caused that river to become the boundary of the respective possessions of the two crowns. This produced an insurrection of the Indians, who were defeated by the Spanish governor, with the loss of 2000 of them killed. In 1767, the court expelled the Jesuits from S. America, and the natives, in course, were put upon the same footing with the other Indians of the Spanish part of that vast continent.

PARAIBA, a commercial town and jurisdiction of Brasil, on the S bank of the river of the same name, navigable for vessels loaded with 6 or 700 hogsheads of sugar, and which runs into the Atlantic, about 20 m. below the town. The soil is pretty fertile, producing sugar-canes, cattle, tobacco, cotton, and Brasil wood, &c. The town of Paraiba is about 60 m. N of Permambuco.

PARAMARIBO, the principal town, and seat of government, in the province of Surinam, in S. America. It is a very flourishing and lively place, every thing that can indicate wealth and affluence being observable here. The carriages and dress of the richer inhab. are truly magnificent; silk embroidery, Genoa velvets, and gold and silver lace, being daily worn, and even the masters of trading shops appear in buttons and buckles of solid gold. The streets are generally crowded with planters, sailors, soldiers, Jews, Indians and negroes; while the river, which has a very noble appearance, is covered with barges, canoes, &c. constantly passing and repassing, often accompanied with bands of music; the shipping also, in the road, adorned with their different flags, guns firing, &c. not to mention the many groups of boys and girls playing in the water, altogether form a truly pleasing appearance, and add not a little to the gaiety and variety of objects which so agreeably arrest the attention of a curious stranger. The ladies are uncommonly elegant in their dress, and keep their houses and furniture extremely clean. They use the finest linen, exquisitely well washed with Castilian soap, which can only be resembled to mountain snow, and which, in comparison, would make the best bleached linen in Europe appear like canvas. The town is very extensive, and remarkably clean, and the houses (which are about 1400 in number) are extremely well built. All the streets are perfectly straight, and some of them, at least, a m. long; they are all paved, or laid with sand and shells mixed, which bind together, and grow hard, partly resembling the walks in a garden or pleasure-ground. Rows of orange trees, lemons, shaddocks, and tamarinds, are planted on each side, at the distance of 10 or 12 feet from the houses, and which, in the months of May and June, diffuse a most delicious fragrance. The warehouses, for the storing of goods, and the gardens that adjoin the houses, include more space than is usually allowed in towns, which impresses the spectator with an idea that he is in a fine, extensive village. Lat. 5 48 N lon. 55 11 W.

PARANA, a province of Paraguay, so named from a large river, which rises in about lat. 18 S, and uniting with the Paraguay, in lat. 28 S, and afterwards with the Uraguay, forms the Rio-de-la-Plata.

Parbold, Lancas. NW of Wigan. Parcassick, Monmouths. N of Chepstow.

PARCHIM, a town of Mecklenburgh.

PARDO, a royal palace near Madrid.

Pardshaw, or Pardsey, Cumberl. a hamlet of Dean, near the Lake of Lowswater, 4 m. from Cockermouth.

PARENZO, a sea-port of the late Venetian Istria.

PARGA, a sea-port of the late Venetian Albania, opposite the island of Corfu, and 26 m. W of Arta. It is inhabited by Greeks and Albanese, and is seated on a rock.

Parham, Suffolk, on the river Ore, near Framlingham. Parham, Sussex, near Amberley.

PARIA, or NEW ANDALUSIA, a country of Terra Firma, E of Cumana, and NE of the river Oroonoko. Between the continent and the island of Trinidad, is a large bay, called the Gulf of Paria.

PARIA, a district of La Plata, in S. America, abounding in all kinds of cattle.

PARILLA, or SANTA PARILLA, a town of Peru, in the audience of Lima, 50 m. S of Truxillo.

PARIS, the capital of France, one of the most populous cities of Europe for its size, containing 875 streets, and 24,000 houses, among which are many five, six, and even seven stories. The river Seine, which crosses it, forms 3 small islands, called the Island of Louviers, the Notre Dame, and the Palace, which last is the ancient city of Paris. The Island of the Palace takes its name from a building, which was formerly the residence of the kings, and afterwards was resigned to the parliament. Clovis I. after the defeat of Alaric, made Paris the capital of his kingdom. Its circuit was much extended by Philip Augustus. It was greatly embellished by Francis I. and his successors. The inhab. are computed to be 800,000. It is 2 leagues in diameter, and 6 in circumf. including the suburbs. The rivers Yonne, Marne, and Oise, by their junction with the Seine, convey to Paris the commodities of Burgundy, Champagne, and Picardy; and this last river furnishes it with the riches of Normandy and the sea, which is at the distance of 42 leagues. By means of the Loire, the Allier, and the canals of Orleans and Briare, and by the Vienne, it has communications with the other parts of the country. There are nine principal bridges in Paris, two of which occupy the whole breadth of the Seine; namely, the Pont Neuf and ci-devant Pont Royal; to which may be added, the unfinished ci-devant Pont de Louis XVI. begun in 1787. The Pont Neuf, the finest and most frequented of all the bridges, is 1020 feet long, by 72 broad, and has 12 arches; 7 of which are on the side of the Louvre, and 5 on the side of the street Dauphine. In the second arch of this bridge, on the side of the Louvre, is the Chateau de la Samaritaine (the woman of Samaria), a small timber building of 3 stories, constructed in 1712, on piles. In the inside is a pump, which raises the water of the river, to distribute it by pipes to the Louvre, the Tuilleries, &c. The other bridges are Pont St. Michel, Pont-au-Change, le Petit Pont, Pont Notre Dame, Pont de-la-Tournelle, Pont-Marie, and the Pont-Rouge. This last, which is a timber bridge, painted red, is the point of communication between the Isle-du-Palais and Isle St. Lewis. The Pont d'Austerlitz is a new bridge, from the Rue du Jardin des Plantes to the Boulevard Bourdon, erected in 1807; and Pont Jena, a new stone bridge of 5 arches, from the Champ de Mars to the Quai de Bailly. The public fountains are very numerous, and on some of them is displayed very elegant sculpture. The public places, squares, &c. are also numerous and elegant. The finest are the Place Dauphin, of a triangular form, built and so named by Henry IV. in memory of the birth of Louis XIII.; the Place Royale, in which was the equestrian statue of Louis XIII. in bronze; the Place Vendome, a square, with the angles truncated, in which was the equestrian statue, in bronze, of Louis XIV. in a Roman habit; the Place-des-Victoires, of a circular form, in which was a statue of the same king, crowned by the heathen goddess Victory, with this inscription, "Viro Immortali;" and the Place de Louis XV. of an octagon form, in which was an equestrian statue, in bronze, of that monarch. This square, which is now called the Place de la Revolution, was the fatal scene of the execution of the unfortunate Louis XVI. and afterward of his unhappy consort, Marie Antoinette, the former on the 21st of January, and the latter on the 16th of October, 1793. There are 3 triumphal arches erected to Louis XIV. and known by the names of Porte St. Bernard, Porte St. Denis, and Porte St. Martin. The most interesting of the manufactures of Paris, is that of the Gobelins (so called from a family of celebrated dyers, settled in this city in 1540), in which tapestries are made after the pictures of the greatest masters, to such perfection, that one representing Louis XV. a whole length, framed and placed among the masterpieces of painting, was taken, for many days, by multitudes of visitors, for a finished piece. The manufacture of plate-glass likewise merits attention. The cathedral of Notre-Dame, a Gothic structure, is one of the largest in Europe, and contains 45 chapels. Next to the cathedral, the most distinguished churches were St. Sulpice, St. Eustache, St. Gervais, St. Etienne-du-Mont, the old one of St. Genevieve, the new one of St. Genevieve (now called the Pantheon), those of St. Severin, St. Roch, and Val-de-Grace. The finest college in Paris was that of the Four Nations, called also Mazarin, from the name of the cardinal, its founder. There were lately 6 academies in Paris; namely, the French academy, founded by the cardinal Richelieu; that of Inscriptions and Belles Lettres, by Louis XIV.; that of the Sciences; and those of Painting and Sculpture, Architecture, and Chirurgery. Among the public libraries, that lately called the King's holds the first rank, in respect both to the extent of the buildings, and the number of the volumes. The other libraries are those of St. Genevieve, the College of Mazarin, St. Victor, of the Doctrinaires, of the Advocates, and of the Faculty of Medicine. That of St. Germain-des-Prés, one of the richest in France, containing between 15 and 20,000 manuscripts, and near 100,000 volumes, is open every day to men of letters. The Royal (now National) Observatory is built of free-stone, as neither iron nor wood form any part of the erection. The Botanical Garden is extensive. The four principal palaces are the Louvre, the Tuilleries, the Palais-Royal, and the Luxemburg. The Louvre is distinguished into the Old and New. The Old Louvre was begun by Francis I. in 1528, and the grand gallery, 1362 feet long and 30 broad, which joins it to the Tuilleries, was begun under Charles IX. and finished by Louis XIV. who likewise built, in 1665, the New Louvre. But it is still an unfinished structure. In some of the apartments, the ancient academies, viz. the French Academy, for the improvement of the French language; the Royal Academy of Inscriptions and Belles Lettres; the Royal Academy of Sciences; and the Royal Academy of Paintings and Sculpture; have held their sittings: and in others are the workshops and lodging-rooms of artists. The Tuilleries, begun in 1564, by Catharine of Medicis, continued by Henry IV. and completed by Louis XIV. takes its name from its situation in a place in which were formerly many tile-kilns (tuilleries) which, for three or four centuries, furnished the greatest part of the tiles used in Paris. The garden of the Tuilleries, in front of the palace and on the banks of the Seine, is unquestionably the finest public walk in Paris. The Palais Royal, in the interior, has been recently embellished with many beautiful buildings, with shops, coffee-houses, and a garden, which render it like a perpetual fair, and one of the most pleasing walks in the city. The gardens of the palace of Luxemburg also form a fine promenade. The Hotel des Invalides, for the wounded and superannuated soldiery, is a magnificent structure, built by Louis XIV. as is the Military School, in the Champ-de-Mars, which was founded by Louis XV. Here are also grand theatres. The Monnoie, or Mint, is an elegant building, situated on that side of the Seine which is opposite the Louvre. The Hotel de Ville, or Guildhall of the city, is an ancient structure, in the Place de Greve, which was heretofore the common place of execution. The Hospital de la Salpatrerie, or General Hospital, in the suburbs of St. Victor, is an extensive building. Here is a foundation for 7000 poor females: to this also belongs the Castle of Bicestre, seated on an eminence at a small distance. The little Chatelet is a kind of antique fortress, and serves for a prison. During different periods of the revolution, most of the public buildings and principal streets received new appellations; and these, during the rule of Buonaparte, were again named according to his vanity and caprice; but since the ascension of Louis XVIII. to the throne of the Bourbons, the ancient names are being daily replaced. Before the revolution, Paris was the see of an archbishop, and contained 51 parish churches, 21 parochial, 17 collegiate churches; among which were 13 chapters, 40 chapels, 3 abbeys, 32 priories, and 50 convents for men, ecclesiastical and secular; 9 abbeys, 6 priories, and 53 convents for women; 12 seminaries and 16 hospitals, 6 of which were appropriated to deserted children. Paris forms, with a small district round it, one of the departs. of France, and is 245 m. SE of London, 625 NW of Vienna, and 630 NE of Madrid. Lat. 48 50 N lon. 2 25 E.

PARISOT, a town of France, in the depart. of Aveiron, 10 m. SW of Ville Franche.

Park, Dorsets. in the parish of Broad Windsor. Park, Isle of Wight, in W. Medina. Park, Staffords. near Oswestry. Park, Westmorel. S of Crosby Ravensworth. Parkbury, Herts, near Colney-street. Park-End, Glouc. in Hare-field parish. Park-Farm Place, Kent, in Eltham parish. Park-Gate, Midd. W of Muswell-Hill.

PARKGATE, a sea-port of Chesh. from whence packet-boats regularly sail to Ireland. It is seated on the NE coast of the river Dee, 10 m. NW of Chester, and 194 NW of London.

Park, Great, Leic. between Ashby-de-la-Zouch and Stanton-Harold. Park-Hall, Essex, SE of Epping. Park Hall, Northumb near Castle Bromwich. Park-Hall, Shrops. N of Oswestry. Park-Hall, Staffords. SE of Bucknell. Parkham, Devons. W of Monkleigh. Parkhead, Northumb. near Harbottle Castle. Parkhill, Staffords. NW of Uttoxeter. Parkhouse, Yorks. near Gisborough. Parkhouse, Hants, E of Lemington. Parklathes, Nottinghams. in Kellam lordship. Park, New, Lancash. near Ormskirk. Parkpill, Monmouths. near Caerleon. Parkston, Dorsets. 2 m. from Pool. Park-street, Herts, S of St. Albans. Parlieu, Hants, NW of Christchurch. Parlington, Yorks. between Leeds and Tadcaster.

PARMA, an ancient, populous, and handsome town of Italy, capital of the duchy of the same name, with a citadel and a university. It has a magnificent cathedral, and the largest and most beautiful opera-house in Italy, which will contain 12,000 spectators. The streets are straight and broad, and the houses well built, and, for the most part, painted. The principal streets meet in the centre, where they form a handsome square. The dome, and the church of St. John, are painted by the famous Correggio, who was a native of this place. Don Carlos, king of the two Sicilies, carried away a library from this place to Naples, which contained 18,000 volumes, and a very valuable cabinet of curiosities, as also the rich collection of medals. In 1741, by the treaty of Aix-la-Chapelle, the duchies of Parma, Placentia, and Guastalla, were given to Don Philip, brother to Don Carlos above-mentioned. The number of inhab. is estimated at 40,000. The principal trade of the place consists in stockings, and some other articles in silk, and it has lately been celebrated for its beautiful printing, from the presses of Bodoni. It is seated on the river Parma, 64 m. SSE of Milan. Lat. 44 50 N lon. 10 30 E.

PARMA, the duchy of, a province of Italy, bounded on the N by the Po, on the NE by the Mantuan, on the E by the duchy of Modena, on the S by Tuscany and Genoa, and on the W by Genoa and the territory of Pavia. Under this name are commonly included the duchy of Parma Proper, the duchy of Placenza, and the duchy of Guastalla. The air is very wholesome, and the inhab. often live to a great age. The soil is fertile in corn, wine, oil, hemp, chesnuts, and fruits; the pastures feed a great number of cattle and sheep, whose wool is excellent, and the cheese is in high estimation. Here are some considerable mines of copper and silver, and plenty of truffles. In 1345, the pope granted this duchy to his natural son, Peter Aloysius, or, Farnese, the founder of the family of Farnese. Elizabeth Farnese, the only heiress of the last duke, becoming queen of Spain, obtained Parma and Placenza for her sons, and so it was settled at the peace of Aix-la-Chapelle.

Parmsted, Kent, near Kingston.

PARNASSO, anciently PARNASSUS, a celebrated mountain in Livadia, in Greece. It has two heads, one of which was formerly famous for being consecrated to Apollo and the Muses, and the other to Bacchus. It is the highest in Greece, and from the top of it is a prospect as far as Corinth. Here also is a fine fountain, supposed to be the ancient Castalia. It is 8 m. N of Livadia.

Parndon, Great and Little, Essex, between Nettleswell and Roydon. Parnham, Dorsets. 5 m. N of Bridport.

PARNOT, a village of France, 5 m. NW of Bourbonne.

PAROS, an island of the Archipelago, one of the Cyclades, about 36 m. in circumf. and containing about 1500 families. The soil is well cultivated, and the pastures feed a great number of flocks. Their trade consists in wheat, barley, wine, pulse, and calicoes; and in fine white marble also, which has long been in estimation for sculpture. Before the war of Candy, it produced a great deal of oil, but the Venetian army burnt all the olive trees. They have a great number of partridges and pigeons, which they sell very cheap. This island was anciently dedicated to Bacchus, on account of its excellent wines. The famous Chronicle of Paros, at Oxford, was brought from hence, in 1627, by Thomas Howard, earl of Arundel, who, in 1667, made a present of it to the university of Oxford. The inscription on it purports to have been made 264 years before the Christian æra, and contains a space of above 300 years. It lies W of Naxia.

PAROS, a town of the Archipelago, capital of the Isle of Paros; anciently it was the largest town of the Cyclades, but it is at present much reduced. The walls of the castle are built of ancient pieces of marble, most of the columns of which are placed lengthways. Some of them that stand upright, support cornices of amazing size. The natives build their houses with marble, which they find ready cut to their hands. Their fields, likewise, are inclosed with friezes, altars, and basso-relievos; however, the English, French, and Venetians have carried away the finest pieces they could meet with. The inhabitants are so ignorant now, that, instead of great sculptors, and skilful architects, they have nothing but carvers of mortars and salt-cellars. Paros is seated on the southern coast of the island, in lat. 37 8 N lon. 25 44 E.

Parr, Lancash. 8 m. from Prescot.

PARRAMATTA, a town or settlement of English convicts, in New S. Wales. It is seated at the head of the harbour of Port Jackson, 11 m. W of Sidney Cove, between Rose Hill and the landing-place in the creek which forms the head. In November 1791, near 1000 acres of land were either in cultivation, or cleared for that purpose. The soil, in most places, was found to be remarkably good, and to want cultivation only to be fit for any use, for the ground that has been the longest in cultivation bears the best crops. Lat. 33 50 S lon. 151 39 E.

PARRET, a river of Somersets. which rises in the south part of the county, receives the Ordred, Ivel, and Thone, and enters the Bristol Channel at Bridgewater Bay.

PARTHENAY, a town in the depart. of Two Sevres, seated on the river Thoue, 17 m. SSW of Thouars.

Partington, Chesh. NW of Altringham.

Partney, Lincolns. N of Spilsby.

PARTON, a sea-port of Cumberl. with a harbour lately improved by Act of Parliament, so as to be capable of receiving small vessels carrying coals, &c. to Ireland. It stands near Moresby, 3 m. N of Whitehaven.

Parton, Cumberl. a hamlet in Thursby parish. Partridge-Green, Sussex, in the parish of East Grinstead. Patsweck, Derbys. in Ashborn parish.

PARYS, a mountain, part of the mountain of Trysclwyn, in the Isle of Anglesey, famous for a copper mine, probably the largest bed of ore of that metal hitherto discovered in the world. It is not wrought in the common manner of subterraneous mines, but, like a stone-quarry, open to day; and the quantities of ore raised are prodigious. The ore is poor in quality, and very abundant in sulphur. The purest part is exported raw to the smelting works at Swansea, and other places: the most impure is first calcined and deprived of most of its sulphur on the spot. Quantities of nearly pure copper are obtained from the waters lodged beneath the bed of ore, by the intervention of iron. A lead ore, rich in silver, is also found in this mountain. The wealth and population of Anglesey have received a great increase from the discovery of this copper mine, on March 2, 1768; a day which has been ever since observed as a festival by the miners. An idea of the prodigious wealth of these mines may be formed, by considering that the Macclesfield company have had at once 14,000 tons of ore upon bank, and the Rev. Edward Hughes, 30,000. The whole of the treasure is the property of Sir Nicholas Bayley and Mr. Hughes.

PAS, a town in the depart. of the Straits of Calais, 12 m. SW of Arras.

PAS DE CALAIS, or STRAITS OF CALAIS, one of the departs. of France, containing the late districts of Pays Reconquis, and the Boulonnois, in Picardy, and part of Artois. Arras is the capital.

Pasbey, Sussex, near Tisehurst.

PASSAGES, a sea-port of Spain, in the territory of Guipuscoa. The harbour is very spacious within, though narrow at the entrance, and remarkably secure from all winds. It is 3 m. E of St. Sebastian, over a well paved stone causeway.

Passage, Cornw. by Helford Haven. Passage, Gloucesters. by Tewkesbury.

PASSAGE, in Cork, Munster, opposite Great Island, on which the town of Cove is situated. Large vessels are lightened here before they can go up to the city of Cork, the channel higher up admitting only those of 150 tons, when laden, though it stretches from shore to shore, above a mile.

PASSAGE, in Waterford, Munster, situated on the E side of a steep hill. Here is an excellent road, where 500 sail of ships may ride safely, and which is the station of the packet-boats from Waterford to Milford-Haven.

PASSARO, a town of Noto, in Sicily.

PASSARO, CAPE, anciently called PACHINUS, the SE point of the island of Sicily. It is not a peninsula, as is commonly represented in the maps, but a wretched, barren island, about a mile round; with a fort, to protect the neighbouring country from the incursions of the Barbary corsairs, who are often very troublesome on this part of the coast. This island and fort are separated from the rest of Sicily by a strait of about half a mile broad. Lat. 36 35 N lon. 15 22 E.

PASSARO, a cape of Janna, in Greece, between the Gulfs of Armiro and Zeton.

PASSARUAN, a town and kingdom of Java, on the NE coast, trading in cotton. It is 30 m. W. of Panarucan.

PASSAVANT, a town of France, 13 m. ENE of Besançon.

PASSAU, an ancient, handsome, and celebrated city in the circle of Bavaria. The houses are well built, and the cathedral is thought to be the finest in Germany. It is divided into four parts, namely, the town of Passau, Instadt, Iltzstadt, and the quarter wherein the bishop's palace is seated. It is seated on the Danube, at the confluence of the rivers Inn and Iltz, 62 m. E by S of Ratisbon, and 135 W of Vienna.

PASSAU, THE BISHOPRIC OF, a territory of Germany, in the circle of Bavaria, and lying between Lower Bavaria, Austria, and Bohemia. Its largest extent is no where above 20 m.; and it has no considerable place except Passau, the capital. The bishop is a prince of the empire, only dependent on the see of Rome.

Passelows, Essex, in Dagenham parish. Passelows, Essex, near High Ongar. Passemers, Essex, near Parndon. Passenham, or Pasham, Northamptons. on the Ouse, opposite to Stony Stratford.

Paston, Norfolk, NE of North Walsham, near the sea. Paston, Northamptons. N of Peterborough. Paston, Northumberl. on the borders of Scotland, near Harelaw Hill.

PASTRANA, a town of New Castile.

PATAGONIA, or LAND OF MAGELLAN, the most southern part of S. America, extending from the Atlantic to Chili, and the S. Pacific Ocean, and from the 36th to the 54th deg. of S lat. A race of people have been discovered here, who, leading an unrestrained and savage life, are reported to be of a gigantic stature. "They are supposed," says Dr. Robertson, "to be one of the wandering tribes, which occupy that vast, but least known region of America, which extends from the river De-la-Plata to the Straits of Magellan". Their proper station is in that part of the interior country which lies on the banks of the river Negro; but in the hunting season they often roam as far as the straits which separate Terra del Fuego from the main land. The first accounts of this people were brought to Europe by the companions of Magellan, who described them as going naked, notwithstanding the inclemency of the climate, above eight feet high, and of strength in proportion to their uncommon size. Some of the inhabitants seen by Captain Byron, in the year 1764, were certainly about seven feet in height. Captains Wallis and Carteret, in 1766, found some of them to be from six feet to six feet five and seven inches in height; but that of the greatest part was from five feet ten inches to six feet. M. de Bougainville saw none below five feet ten inches, and none above six feet two inches; but the people of the Etoile had seen, in a preceding voyage, several that were six feet four inches and a half high. The least of those whom Giraudais saw, in 1766, were above five feet eleven inches high. M. Duclos Guyot, in the same year, saw none that wanted more than half an inch of measuring six feet. In the interior parts of the country, according to Mr. Falkner, there are tribes of a still greater size. The great Cacique Cangapol, measured abofit seven feet in height; and the same gentleman had seen Indians of the tribe of the Puelches, more than an inch or two taller than Cangapol. Their colour is a kind of bronze. They are all painted, and clothed nearly in the same manner: the circles round the two eyes are some white and red, and some red and black. Their teeth are as white as ivory, remarkably even and well set, but their hair is straight, and nearly as harsh as hog's bristles. They have no other clothing than skins of the guanaco, which they wear with the hair inward, together with a piece of leather used as an apron. This seemingly barren country produces, however, good pastures; and numerous droves of wild horned cattle and horses, first brought hither by the Spaniards, now cover the face of it. To the N of La Plata it is covered with wood; but not a single tree or shrub, fit for any mechanical purpose, is to be seen in all the country southward of that river. Nothing is related concerning the productions of the earth.

PATANE, a kingdom of Malacca, on the eastern coast, subject to Siam. The inhab. are partly Siamese, Chinese, Malays, and Europeans; but they are all accounted very voluptuous. The air is wholesome, though very hot, and they have no seasons but the winter and summer; the former of which is more properly the rainy season, and holds about three months, during the shortest of our days. The woods abound with elephants, and many wild animals. The Siamese cultivate the land, and the Chinese are artisans. The principal town of the same name has a harbour, and contains between 7 and 8000 inhab. Lat. 6 15 N.

PATAY, a town in the depart. of Loiret, near which the English were defeated by the French, under the celebrated Maid of Orleans, in the year 1429. It is 24 m. NNW of Orleans.

Patcham, Sussex, E of Arundel Forest. Patcham, Sussex, W of Lewes. Patching, Sussex, E of Steyning. Patelty-Bridge, Yorks. W. Riding, over the Nid by Netherdale.

Patenham, Bedfords. near Odehill. Pathhead, a manufacturing village of Fifes. adjoining Kirkcaldy. Pathlow, Warwicks. a hundred in th. Conqueror's time, but now only a liberty containing several towns, between Warwick and Alcester. Patmer-Hall, Herts, N of Bishop's-Stortford.

PATMOS, an island of the Archipelago, now called Patino, situated on the coast of Natolia, between the Isles of Samos and Nicaria. It is about 20 m. in circumf. and one of the most barren heaps of rocks in the Archipelago. A few valleys only are capable of some cultivation. It abounds, however, with partridges, rabbits, quails, turtles, pigeons, and snipes. In the midst of the island rises a mountain, terminated by the convent of St. John, which, with its irregular towers and massy appearance, one might well imagine to be a citadel. The inhabitants of this convent are, in reality, the proprietors of the country; but their domains would be insufficient for their maintenance, were it not for the possession of some lands in the neighbouring isles, and the certain tribute they derive from the superstition of the Greeks. The abbot pays annually 1000 crowns to the grand seignior, besides presents to the captain pacha. These monks, called Caloyers, are spread over all Greece. Scarce any of them can read, and yet they all understand how far the empire of superstition can extend over ignorant minds. They keep their credulous countrymen in the most absolute subjection. They are even accomplices in their crimes, the profits of which they share, and sometimes engross. Not one of the piratical vessels is without a caloyer, in order to give them absolution in the very instant of committing the most dreadful crimes. Cowardly and cruel, these wretches never fail to massacre the crews of the vessels that fall into their power; and, after plundering them, they sink the captured ship, that not a trace of their outrages may be left; then, instantly prostrating themselves before the priest, a few words presently reconcile them to the Deity, quiet their conscience, and encourage them to the perpetration of future crimes, in thus affording what they deem a certain remedy against future remorse. The inhab. of Patmos are mostly Greek Christian sailors, or ship-builders; they sail as far as Venice, whither they carry cotton, &c. stockings of their own manufacture. The hermitage of the Apocalypse is situated on the declivity of a mountain, between the convent and the port of Scala. It leads to their church, which is supported against a grotto in the rock; and if we may believe the inhabitants, was the asylum of John, during his exile at Patmos. Here they say, he wrote the Book of the Revelation, and they pretend to shew the very chinks in the rocks through which the Holy Spirit breathed his inspiration. The fragments of this rock they affirm to be a certain specific against a thousand disorders, and particularly against evil spirits. The Greek monks do not fail to vend this remedy as well as the absolutions, nor do they blush at this scandalous traffic. It is 16 m. SW of Samos. Lat. 37 24 N lon. 26 24 E.

PATNA, a city of Hindostan Proper, capital of Bahar, and the residence of a governor. It is an extensive and populous place, built on an eminence, on the S bank of the Ganges; and is fortified in the Indian manner, with a wall and small citadel. In this citadel were confined the prisoners taken by Meer Cossim, nabob of Bengal, in 1764, by whose order they were massacred. Near Patna, in the same year, a battle was fought between the troops of Sujah Dowlah, nabob of Oude, and a division of the British army, under Major Monroe, when the former were defeated. The English lost 2 officers killed, 6 or 7 wounded, about 60 Europeans, and 600 seapoys. The enemy left full 7000 behind them, 130 pieces of cannon, all their tents, baggage &c. together with some camels and elephants. Sujah Dowlah fled to one of his most distant cities. The buildings of Patna are high, but the streets are narrow, and far from clean. It is a place of considerable trade, and is supposed to be the ancient Palabothra. It is 250 m. NW of Calcutta. Lat. 25 35 N lon. 85 21 E.

Patney, Wilts, E of the Devizes.

Patow Beacons, Hants, W of the Candovers.

PATRAS, a sea-port in the Morea, with a Greek archbishop's see. It is pretty large and populous, and the Jews, who are one-third of the inhab. have four synagogues. There are several handsome mosques and Greek churches. The Jews carry on a great trade in silk, leather, coarse oil, honey, wax, cheese, tobacco, wheat, and manna. There are lofty cypress trees, and excellent pomegranates, citrons, and oranges. It is seated on the declivity of a hill, near the sea, 20 m. SW of Lepanto.

PATRICIA, a town of Italy, in the Campagna of Rome, 8 m. E of Ostia.

PEGU, a considerable kingdom of India, lying to the SE of Bengal. It is bounded on the N by Aracan and Ava, on the W by part of Aracan and the Bay of Bengal, on the E by the kingdoms of Laos and Siam, and on the S by the Bay of Bengal. It has a town of the same name, 70 m. within land, above 20 m. in circumf. but at present not one-twentieth part is inhabited; as it was ruined by the king of Bermah, who, in 1751, reduced this, till then, independent kingdom, to the state of a dependent province. The products of this country are timber for building, elephants, elephants' teeth, bees-wax, stick-lac, iron, tin, petroleum, rubies, diamonds, and sapphires. The rubies are the best in the world, but the diamonds are small. They have also saltpetre and plenty of lead of which they make their money. The country abounds with elephants, buffaloes, goats, hogs, and other animals; and deer and game are in great plenty. It is very fruitful in corn, roots, pulse, and fruits. They wear no European commodities but hats and ribbands; but they have cottons, silks, and silver, from Bengal, and the neighbouring countries. The inhab. are but thinly clad, and they wear neither shoes nor stockings. The women are much fairer than the men, small, and shapely. There are a vast number of temples in this country, but mostly of wood, which are varnished and gilt. The inhab. are partly Peguers, and partly Bramas, or Burmahs, who are at present masters of the country; they are distinguished from each other by their dress and features. The priests, who are called Talepoy, or Talapoins, observe celibacy, and eat but once a day. They wear a long frock, girt with a leather thong, four inches broad, at which hangs a bag for receiving alms. They have no stipends, and in case the few acres, which every one who builds a temple bestows for their maintenance, be not sufficient, they send novices abroad to beg alms. They have idols in their temples, with very large ears, in a sitting posture, like taylors. In the low, flat part of the country, which is liable to be overflowed, they build their houses upon stakes, and in time of inundations, communicate with each other by boats. The city of Pegu, in 1600, was one of the largest and most populous in Asia, but being besieged, in 1692, by the kings of Aracan and Tangue, the king was obliged to submit for want of provisions. Since that time Pegu ceased to be the royal city. It is still, however, the seat of the viceroy, governing for the king, who resides at Ava. Lat. 18 5 N lon. 96 42 E.

Pegwell Bay, 1 m. to W of Ramsgate, a neat village on a spacious bay. Belle Vue is a very handsome inn much resorted to by parties of pleasure in the season. In the neighbourhood is Belmont, the seat of Lord Darnley.

PEINA, a town of Hildesheim, Lower Saxony.

PEIPUS, or TCHUDSKOI, a large lake of Russia, between the government of Petersburgh and Riga, 64 m. in length, and from 8 to 24 in breadth. It has a communication with the Lake of Wertzerwe; and the river Narova issues from this lake, by which it has a communication also at Narva, with the Gulf of Finland.

PEISHORE, or PITSHOUR, a considerable city of India, in the country of Cabul, 50 m. NNW of Attock.

PEKIN, the capital city of the empire of China, situated in a fertile plain. It obtained this name, which signifies the Northern Court, to distinguish it from Nanking, or the Southern Court, where the emperors formerly resided. It is an exact square, and divided into two parts; namely, that which contains the emperor's palace, which is in the New City, or Tartar City, so called, because it is inhabited by Tartars, ever since they conquered the empire. The other, called the Old City, is inhabited by the Chinese. The circuit of both together, is 52 Chinese lays, each of which contains 240 geometrical paces. The gates of this city are lofty and well arched, supporting buildings of 9 stories high; the lowest of which is for the soldiers, when they come off guard. The gates are nine in number, and before each is an open space, which serves for a parade. The streets are perfectly straight, most of them 3 m. in length, and about 120 feet wide, with shops on both sides; but the houses are poorly built, and have only a ground-floor. The concourse of people in the streets is prodigious; here are also vast numbers of horses, camels, mules, asses, and carriages. It is singular, however, that no women are ever seen; although the number of women in China, as well as in every other country, is superior to that of the other sex. All the riches and merchandise of the empire are continually pouring into this city. There are always hackney horses and chairs, in various parts, which stand ready to be hired for a trifle. All the great streets are guarded by soldiers, who patrole night and day, with sabres hanging from their girdles, and whips in their hands, to correct, without distinction, all such as excite quarrels, or make disturbances. The little streets have lattice gates at their entrance into the great streets, which are shut up at night, and guarded by soldiers, who suffer no assemblies in the streets at that time. The emperor's palace is of vast extent, and surrounded by a brick wall, with pavilions at each corner, encompassed by galleries supported by columns. Those who have computed the compass of this city a different way, observe that the two cities, without the suburbs, are 18 m. in circumf. and that the number of inhab. is, at least, 2,000,000: that the walls of the Tartar city are so high, that they cover the town, and are broad enough for 12 horsemen to ride easily abreast; and there are strong towers a bow-shot distance from each other. The walls of the immense palace of the emperor, including that and the gardens, are upwards of 4 m. in circumf.; the architecture is entirely different from that of the Europeans, and the structures are covered with tiles of shining beautiful yellow. The palace never fails to strike beholders, by its extent, grandeur, and the regular disposition of its apartments. It presents a prodigious assemblage of vast buildings, extensive courts, and magnificent gardens. The temples and the towers of this city are so numerous, that it is difficult to count them. Provisions of all kinds are exceedingly plentiful, they being, as well as the merchandise, chiefly brought from other parts, by means of canals, which are always crowded with vessels of different sizes. No police can be more active. It is rare, in a number of years, to hear of houses being robbed, or people assassinated. An earthquake, which happened here in 1731, buried above 100,000 persons in the ruins of the houses. In this city a Russian church is established, with a seminary, in which the students are permitted to reside, for the purpose of learning the Chinese language. Since this establishment, many interesting publications have made their appearance at Petersburgh, relative to the laws, history, and geography of China, translated from the originals published at Pekin. Pele, Lancash. N of Wigan. Pele, Lancash. W of Warrington.

PELEGRINO, MOUNT, a promontory on the N coast of Sicily, about 2 m. W of Palermo. The prospect from it is beautiful and extensive.

PELEW ISLANDS, a cluster of islands in the N. Pacific Ocean, lying between 130 and 136 deg. E lon. and 5 and 9 N lat. They were probably first discovered by the Spaniards of the Philippines, and by them called the Paloo Islands, from the tall palm-trees that grow there in great numbers, and which, at a distance, have the appearance of masts of ships; the word palos, in the Spanish language, sometimes signifying a mast. There is, however, some reason to suppose that no European had ever landed upon them, before the Antelope, a packet belonging to the East India Company, and commanded by Capt. Wilson, was wrecked there in 1783. The captain found the natives simple in their manners, delicate in their sentiments, friendly in their disposition, and, in short, a people that do honour to the human race. The astonishment which those who first discovered the English manifested on seeing their colour, plainly showed that they had never before seen a white man. The clothes of the strangers also puzzled them exceedingly; for it was a matter of doubt with them, whether these and their bodies did not form one substance. When the captain's brother was deputed to wait upon the king, who resided on an island at some distance from that on which they had saved their lives, he accidentally pulled off his hat, at which the gazing spectators were all struck with astonishment, as if they thought it had formed a part of his head. They had no idea of the nature of powder and shot, and were exceedingly amazed on seeing its effects. The weapons used in their battles were bamboo spears, about 12 feet long, with the pointed end exceedingly hard, and barbed transversely. They had also bamboo darts, pointed with the wood of the betel-nut tree, which is very hard and heavy; with shorter ones for distant marks, which are thrown by means of a stick, with a notch in it, wherein the head of the dart is fixed. With respect to property in these islands, a man's house, or canoe, is considered as his own, as is also the land allotted him, as long as he occupies and cultivates it; but, whenever he removes with his family to another place, the ground reverts to the king, who gives it to whom he pleases, or to those who solicit to cultivate it. The country is well covered with timber-trees, the trunks of which furnish the natives with canoes, some large enough to carry 30 men. Yams and cocoa-nuts, being their chief articles of subsistence, are attended to with the utmost care. The other trees were the ebony; a species of manchineel; a tree that, being pierced with a gimlet, there ran from it a thick liquid, of the consistence of cream; and a singular tree, like a cherry-tree, but with leaves resembling a myrtle, so extremely hard, that few of the tools which the English had could work it, the wood breaking their edges: the colour of the interior was like mahogany. They had also the cabbage-tree, a tree whose fruit nearly resembled an almond; the wild bread-fruit tree; plantains, bananas, Seville oranges, and lemons. Their common drink was the milk of the cocoa-nut; on particular occasions, adding certain sweetmeats and a sweet beverage obtained by the aid of a syrup, extracted either from the palm-tree or the sugar-cane. No quadrupeds were seen, except some brownish grey rats in the woods, and a few meagre cats in some of the houses. They had plenty of common cocks and hens, which though not domesticated, yet loved to get near their houses and plantations. The houses are raised about three feet from the ground, the foundation beams being laid on large stones, whence spring the upright supports of their sides, which are crossed by other timbers grooved together, and fastened, by wooden pins, the intermediate space being closely filled up with bamboos and palm-tree leaves; and the inside is without any division, forming one great room. The natives, in general, are a stout people, rather above the middling stature, and of a very deep copper-colour. Their hair is long, and generally formed into one large loose curl round their heads. The men are without clothes; the women wear two little aprons, one before, the other behind. Both men and women are tattooed, and their teeth are made black by art. The men had their left ear bored, and the women both; with beads or leaves wore in the perforated ear. The cartilage between the nostrils was also bored, in both sexes, through which they often put some sprig, blossom, or shrub. Both sexes are very expert at swimming, and the men are such admirable divers, that they will readily fetch up any thing from the bottom of the sea which attracts their notice. The conduct of these people toward the English was uniformly courteous and attentive, accompanied with a politeness which surprised those who were the objects of it. Such an opinion had the king of the island entertained of the English, that on their departure, he suffered his second son, Lee Boo, to accompany them to England, where this amiable youth died of the small-pox, in 1784, at about 26 years of age. These islands are encircled on the W side by a reef of coral.

Pelham-Aursa, or Brent, Pelham Furneux, and Pelham Stockin, Herts, on the borders of Essex, towards Clavering. Pelin, Cornw. S of Lestwithiel.

PELISSA, a town and country in Hungary, 15 m. N of Buda.

Pell, Sussex, on the coast, by Bexhill. Pell-lomentain, Cornw. W of Trerise. Pelles, Cornw. near Padstow Haven. Pelue, Durham, near Chester-le-Street. Pellshall, Staff. N of Walsal. Pelston, Shrops. N of Newport. Pelton, Durham, near Chester-le-Street.

PEMBA, a province of Congo, in Africa. Banza, or St. Salvador, is the capital.

Pemberton, Lancash. near Wigan.

PEMBRIDGE, a small town of Herefords. with a manufactory of woollen cloth. It is seated on the river Arrow, 15 m. NNW of Hereford, and 145 WNW of London. Market on Tues.

PEMBROKE, the county town of Pembrokes. is well built and well inhabited, with two churches and a custom house, and 481 houses; next to Carmarthen and Brecon, the richest town in S. Wales. Here are merchants who employ near 200 sail on their own account. It is situated in one of the most pleasant parts of Wales, on two small rivers that run into Penermouth (the innermost creek of Milford Haven, and which forms the W side of a promontory), 10 m. SE of Haverford-W. and 256 W by N of London. Market on Sat.

PEMBROKE, a town of New Hampshire.

PEMBROKESHIRE, the most western county of S. Wales, 35 m. in length, 18 in its mean breadth, and surrounded on all sides by the sea, except on the NE and E where it is bounded by Cardigans. and Carmarthens. It is divided into 7 hundreds, which contain 7 market-towns, 145 parishes, 12,468 houses, and 60,615 inhab. The principal rivers are the E and W Cledhue. A great part of the county is plain, and tolerably fertile, consisting of rich meadow and arable land. One part alone is mountainous, extending from the coast, near Fishguard, to the borders of Carmarthens. This, however, yields good pasture for sheep, horned cattle, and goats, with which the county in general abounds; as also with wild fowls of various kinds, some of which are seldom seen in any other part of Britain. There is probably more rain here than in any other part of the kingdom, brought by westerly winds from the Atlantic Ocean. The only manufactures of the county consist of a cotton mill, near Haverford-W. which employs about 150 persons; a forge at Blackpool, and some iron and tin works on the Tivy. The county-town is Pembroke.

Pembury, Kent. Pen, Somersets. NE of Wincaunton. Penalth, S of Monmouth, on the Wye.

PENALVA, a town of Beira.

PENAUTIER, a town in the depart. of Aude, 4 m. NW of Carcassonne.

W of Ross. Pencoyd, Monmouths. E of Caerleon. Pencreek, Cornwall, near Leskeard. Penden, Cornwall, near Leskeard. Penden, and Penden-Vow, Cornwall, on the N coast, near Morvath. Here is an unfathomable cave under the earth, into which the sea flows at high water. Pendennis, Cornw. at the mouth of Falmouth Haven, is a peninsula of one m. and a half in circumference, on which Henry VIII. erected a castle, opposite to that of St. Maw's, on the other side of the bay, which he also built. Some additional works were also made by Queen Elizabeth. It is one of the largest castles in the kingdom, and is built on a high rock. It is stronger by land than St. Maw's, being regularly fortified, and having good outworks. Pendenhock-Point, Cornw. N of the Lizard. Pender, Cornw. near St. Burien. Pend-Hill, Surry, in Blechingley parish. Pendle Forest and Hill, Lancaster, near Clitheroe. Pendleton, Lancaster, W of Pendle-Hill. Pendock, Worcester, NW of Tewkesbury. Pendomer, Somersets. between Crewkern and Melbury. Pendragon-Castle, Westmorel. PENKRIDGE, a town of Staffords. formerly large and handsome, but now greatly reduced, containing only 200 houses, 6 m. S of Stafford, and 129 NW of London. Market on Tuesd. A fair on September 2, and a horse-fair on October 10th.

Penland, Herefords. S of Kington. Penlene, Cornw. NE of Botteux Castle. Penlet Point, Cornw. W of Plymouth-Harbour. Penley, or Pentley, Herefords. NW of Berkhampstead, near Tring. Penley, Wilts, by Westbury. Penmachno, Caernarvons.

PENMAEN MAWR, a mountain of Caernarvons, 1545 feet high, and overhanging the sea at so vast a height, that few are able to look down the dreadful steep. On the side next the sea, a road is cut out of the rock, which winds up a steep ascent, and is secured by a substantial wall, breast high, along the brink of the frightful precipice. To this great and useful work the city of Dublin largely contributed, it being in the high road to Holyhead. Here the sea is seen dashing its waves 40 fathoms below, while the mountain rises as high above the traveller's head. This road was long, narrow, bad, and stony, but since 1792, it has been made better and wider, and defended from the precipice by the wall abovementioned. The wall before was very slight, in some parts about a yard high, and in other parts there was only a bank, that scarcely rose a foot above the road.

Penmun Foss, a mountain in Denbighs. Penmorfa, Caernarvons. Penmynydd, Anglesey, about 2 m. S of Plas Gwyn. It was once the residence of the ancestors of Owen Tudor, second husband to Catharine of France, queen dowager of Henry V.; a marriage which restored the British race of princes in this kingdom, on the accession of Henry VII. grandson to Owen Tudor, who was the lineal descendant of Cadwallader, the last king of the Britons. The door of the gateway, part of the house, and the great chimney-piece of the hall, the remains of this residence, with some coats of arms, dates of buildings or repairs, and the initial letters of the names of the owners, are yet to be seen in the farm-house. Penn, Bucks, 2 m. from High Wycomb. Penn, Nether and Over, Staffords. near Wolverhampton. Pennant, Cornw. in St. Clere parish.

PENNAR, a river of Hindostan, which rises in the kingdom of Mysore, and watering Gooty, Gandicotta, Cuddapah (the circar of which it crosses, as well as the Carnatic), and Nellore, falls into the Bay of Bengal, at Gangapatnam, about 12 m. E of Nellore.

Pennard, E. and W. Somersets. near Glastonbury. Pennerwaen, a mountain, very steep in its ascent, with a sharp summit, a little S of Brecknock. Pennigent Hill, Yorks. NE of Settle.

PENNINGTON, a town of New Jersey.

Pennington, Hants, near Ringwood. Pennington, Lancas. near Ulverston. Penniston, Yorks. W. Riding, N of Middop.

PENNON DE VELEZ, or VELEZ DE GOMERA, a sea-port of Fez, with a good harbour, in possession of the Spaniards. It is situated on a rock near the coast of the Mediterranean, 75 m. E of Ceuta.

PENNSYLVANIA, one of the United States of N. America, bounded on the E by New York and Jersey; on the W by states not settled; on the N by several Indian nations; and on the S by Delaware and Maryland. It extends 250 m. from E to W, and 140 from N to S, and contains 810,163 inhab. By means of the Delaware, and other navigable rivers, large ships come up into the heart of the country. The soil is, in some places, a yellow or black sand; in some, loamy gravel; and in others a fat and fruitful mould, easy to be cleared. It is well watered with rivers, and produces every thing which can render life agreeable, in the utmost plenty. The climate is very agreeable, and the air sweet and clear. The produce of this country is corn, cattle, timber, pot-ashes, wax, skins, and furs; and they export to the W. India Islands, salted beef, pork, horses, pipe-staves, and fish; taking in return sugar, rum, and molasses. This country was granted to the celebrated William Penn, the quaker, son of Sir William Penn, by King Charles II. in consideration of sundry debts due to him from the crown. When he went to America, he purchased the soil, at a very low rate, of the Indians (who had conceived a very favourable opinion both of him and his designs), expending also large sums in transporting his followers, and supplying them with all necessaries. His lands also were sold at a very easy purchase, and he gave the setfers a noble charter of privileges. By this means the country was soon changed from a wilderness to a garden, and it is now one of the most flourishing provinces in the new world. The Germans compose a quarter, if not a third part of the inhab. of Pennsylvania; in 1787, the whole number of inhab. were reckoned at 360,000: they are now much more numerous, and are all distinguished for their temperance, industry, and economy. Philadelphia is the capital.

Pennywell, Herts, near Watford.

PENOBSCOT, a bay of N. America, on the S coast of Main, at the mouth of the river Penobscot, in lat. 43 55 to 44 30 N and lon. 68 40 to 69 W. It is long and capacious, and lined with a cluster of small islands. On its W coast are mountains of the same name. The river Penobscot is navigable for vessels of 100 tons, to the falls, which are 50 m. from the sea.

Pen-Park-Hole, Glouces. 3 m. from Bristol and the Severn, in Westbury parish. Penpoll, Cornw. E of Bodmin. Penpont, Cornw. SE of Padstow-Haven. Penpont, Scotland, 14 m. from Dumfries. Penpurgh, Northumb. by Whitfield.

PENRISE, a sea-port of Glamorgans. with a good harbour for ships. It is 20 m. SE of Carmarthen, and 219 W of London. Market on Thurs.

PENRITH, a large well-built trading town of Cumberland, with noted tan-works, and some manufactures of check and cotton. It has a spacious market-place, and is a great thoroughfare on the post-road between London and Glasgow. It is seated under a hill, near the river Peterel, and the conflux of the Eismot and Lowther, 18 m. S of Carlisle, and 220 NNW of London. Markets on Tues. and Satur. Fair on Whit-Tues.

Penrith, Old, Cumberl. in Lazenby parish, 5 m. from Penrith, and 13 from Carlisle. It was formerly a Roman station, and here are still to be seen great ruins of a town. Penrose, Cornw. near Helston. Penrose, Cornw. at the Land's End. Penrose, Herefords. N of Pembridge. Penrose, Monmouths. N of Ragland Castle. Penruddock, Cumberl. in Greystock parish.

PENRYN, a neat town of Cornw. with a considerable trade in drying and vending pilchards, and in the Newfoundland fishery. It has a good custom-house and quay, and is situated on an eminence, surrounded with gardens and orchards, at the mouth of a navigable river, near Pendennis Castle, 2 m. NNW of Falmouth, and 260 WSW of London. Markets on Wed. Frid. and Sat.

PENSACOLA, the principal town of W. Florida, seated on a bay of the Gulf of Mexico, which forms an excellent harbour, safe from all winds, with 4 fathoms water at the entrance, gradually deepening into 7 or 8. Lat. 30 32 N lon. 87 12 W.

PENSANCE, or PENZANCE, a well-built populous town of Cornw. with many ships belonging to it and a considerable trade. The harbour, however, is not fit for large vessels, being almost dry at low water. In 1595, it was burnt by the Spaniards, who, in four galleys, surprised this part of the coast, and set several villages and farms on fire; but it was afterwards rebuilt, and made one of the coinage towns. It is situated on a creek at the bottom of Mount's Bay, 10 m. E of Senan, at the Land's End, and 286 WSW of London. Market on Thurs.

Pensand, Cornw. S of Stratton. Pensax, Worces. in Lindridge parish.

PENSBURY, a town of Pennsylvania, where the celebrated Mr. Penn resided. It is situated on a small creek of the Delaware.

Pensel-Chase, Staff. SW of Wolverhampton.

PENSFORD, a town in Somersets. noted for its hats and bread; it has also a manufactory of cloth. It is seated on the river Chew, 7 m. SSW of Bath, and 117 W by S of London. Market on Tues.

Pen's Green, Surry, between Peckham and Beckenham. Pen's Place, Herts, on Aldelham-Common. Penslam, Worcesters. near Pershore. Pensherst, Cornw. NE of Bodmin. Pensherst, or Penchester, Kent, 3 m. SW of Tunbridge. Pensherst-Halymote, alias Otford Wild, Kent, near Pensherst. Pensignance, Cornw. near Redruth. Pensthorp, Norfolk, near Fakenham. Penterry-Chapel, Monmouths. NW of Chepstow.

PENTHIEVE FORT, in the depart. of Morbihan, situated on the peninsula of Quiberon; it is washed by the sea on the E and W sides.

Penthrant-Mon, Anglesey, 5 m. W of Beaumaris. Pentire, Hill, Fort, and Point, Cornw. near the entrance of Padstow Haven. Pentire, E. and W. Cornw. on the Bristol Channel, near Crantock, SE of Penhale.

PENTLAND FRITH. See ORCADES.

PENTLAND, SKERRIES, three small rocky islands, on the N coast of Scotland, 4 m. NE of Duncansby Head. On the largest of these two light-houses were erected in 1791.

PENTLAND HILLS, a ridge of mountains, in Edinburghshire, extending about 10 m. from SW to NE.

Pentlow, Essex, on the Stour, between Long Melford and Clare. Pentney, Norf. on the river Lyn, between Seche and Castleacre. Penton-Grafton, Hants, near Weyhill. Pensey Mewsey, Hants, near Andover. Pentegayer, Shrops. W. of Oswestry. Pentrepant, Shrops. N of Oswestry. Pentridge, Derbys. SW of Alfreton. Pentridge, Dorsets. by Cranborn Chace. Pentry, Carmarthens. Pentvan, Cornw. E of Ragland-Castle.

PENZENSKOE, one of the 41 governments of the Russian empire, formerly a province of Kasan; and bounded by the government of Simbirskoe on the E. Its capital, Penza, is seated on the river Sura, where it receives the rivulet Penza. Lat. 32 35 N lon. 45 45 E.

Peover, Upper, and Nether, Chesh. E and NE of Northwich.

Pephull, Chesh. W of Macclesfield. Pepenbury, or Pembury, Kent, 3 m. SE of Tunbridge. Pepingstraw, Kent, in Offham parish. Peplew, Shrops. S of Hodnet. Pepperbarrow, Surry, W of Godalmin. Pepperhill, Shrops. near Patshall in Staffords. Peppering, Sussex, SE of Arundel. Pepperness, Kent, the S point of Sandwich-Haven. Pepperstock, Bedfords. near Luton-Hoo. Pepplesham, Sussex, near Hastings.

PEQUIGNY, a town in the depart. of the Somme, memorable for an interview and treaty between Edward IV. of England, and Louis XI. of France in the year 1474. It is seated on the river Somme, 15 m. SE of Abbeville.

PERA, a suburb of Constantinople, where the foreign ambassadors usually reside. It is inhabited by Greek and other Christians, and they sell wine there as publicly as in any other part of Europe, which is not allowed in the city.

Peramuthno, Cornw. E of Mount's Bay. Peran in the Sands, Cornw. NE of St. Agnes. It has from time to time been almost overwhelmed with the sea-sand driven into it by the NW winds, so that the inhab. were obliged once to remove their church.

PERAY, ST. a village in the depart. of Ardeche, seated on the Rhone, opposite Valence.

PERCASLAW, a town of Russia, in Kiof.

PERCHE, a ci-devant province of France; it now forms, with part of Normandy, the depart. of Orne.

Percy Lodge, Bucks, near Colnbrook. Pere, St. Monmouths. S of Chepstow.

PERECZAS, a town of Upper Hungary, capital of a county of the same name.

PEREKOP. See PRECOP.

PERGA, a town of Turkish Albania, on the coast of the Mediterranean.

PERGAMO, an ancient decayed town of Natolia, inhabited by about 3000 Turks, and a few families of poor Christians. This city was anciently the capital of a kingdom, which began in the year 470, from the building of Rome, and continued 152 years; when the last king, Attalus III. dying without children, left the Roman people his heirs. Here the manufacture of parchment was first invented.

PERIGORD, a ci-devant province of France, now forming the depart. of Dordogne.

PERIGUEUX, an ancient town, the capital of the depart. of Dordogne. Here are the ruins of a temple of Venus, and an amphitheatre. It is famous for its partridge pies, which are sent all over Europe and is seated on the river Ille, 50 m. SW of Limoges.

PERIM, an island in the Red Sea, situated between the two points which include the Straits of Babelmandel; it is about 5 m. in length and 2 in breadth. The channel which divides it from the African coast, though 14 or 15 m. across, is but little frequented, on account of the numerous rocks and shoals which obstruct it; so much so, as to render it necessary for vessels that attempt it, to steer close under the western point of the island. The breadth of the other channel is less than two leagues, and this space cannot be navigable, nor is the deep water any where at so great a distance from the island as to be out of the reach of its batteries, whether erected on the shore, or on artificial projections within the sea, if such should be found necessary to secure the entire command of the passage. It is a low, rocky substance, destitute of water, but plenty of it, of a very good quality, may be procured from the opposite main. The harbour, which is in the shape of a horse-shoe, is excellent.

Perivale, Middl. the modern name given to a small village, formerly called Little Greenford, or Ganford, N. of Great Ealing, and Castlebar Hill; but more properly is a rich vale of corn land, extending from Heston to Harrow-on-the-Hill and Pinner. Perlethorp, Nottinghams. in Edenstow parish.

Permondley, Northumberl. NE of Kirkhaugh.

PERMSKOE, one of the 41 governments of Russia, formerly a province of Kasan. It is divided into two provinces; namely, Perm, the capital of which is of the same name, seated on the river Kama, where it receives the Zegocheckha, in lat. 57 40 N lon. 54 6 E, and Catherineburgh, the capital of which, of the same name, is seated not far from the source of the river Issel, in lat. 56 36 N lon. 60 30 E.

PERNAMBUC. See OLINDA.

PERNE, a town in the depart. of the Mouths of the Rhone; and a town in the depart. of the Straits of Calais.

PERNO, a town of Nyland, Sweden.

PERNOV, a town in the government of Riga, situated on a river near the Baltic.

Perose, Cornw. SW of Camelford.

PEROLSA, a town of Piedmont, in the district of the Four Vallies, to one of which it gives name.

PERPIGNAN, a considerable town in the depart. of the Eastern Pyrenees, and late a province of Roussillon, with a university. It is seated on the river Tet (over which it has a handsome bridge), 3 m. from the sea, and 26 m. S of Narbonne.

Perrot, South, Dorsets. 2 m. NW of Cheddington. Perry, Huntingdons. in the parish of Great Stoughton. Perry Bar, Staffords. N of Birmingham. Perry Bridge, Somersets. S of Wrington. Perry Court, Kent, near Cliff, another near Preston, and a third near Wye. Perry Hall, Staffords. near Perry Bar. Perry Hill, Surry, NW of Guildford. Perry Street, Kent, near Sydenham. Perry Wood, Staffords. near Birmingham. Perse Bridge, Durham, on the Tees, W of Darlington.

PERSEES, a people of Persia, now scattered into different parts, but chiefly in the E. Indies. They were worshippers of fire, or, at least, they look upon that as an emblem of the Supreme Being. They are otherwise called Guebres. On the conquest of Persia, by the Mahometans, they removed to India. Zoroaster was the original founder of their sect. They regard it as a great crime to extinguish fire of any kind; and have lamps in their temples which, they assert, have burnt for many ages.

Persendrove, Cambridges. W of Wisbeach.

PERSEPOLIS, supposed to be anciently the capital city of Persia, properly so called. It was taken by Alexander the Great, who was persuaded, when in liquor, by the courtezan Thais, to set it on fire. It is thought to be the same as what is now called Kilminar, of which there are magnificent ruins now remaining. There are inscriptions, in characters, and in a language that now cannot be read, and which show that this place must be extremely ancient; almost all parts of the ruins are full of sculptures, representing men and beasts. It is 50 m. NE of Schiras, and 200 SE of Ispahan.

Pershal, Staffords. near Eccleshal.

PERSHORE, a neat old town of Worcesters. containing 2 churches and 410 houses. It is a considerable thoroughfare in the lower road from Worcester to London, and has a manufacture of stockings. It is seated on the N side of the Avon, near its junction with the river Bow, 9 m. ESE of Worcester, and 102 WNW of London. Market on Tues.

PERSIA, a large kingdom of Asia, consisting of several provinces, which, at different times, have had their particular kings. Its power and extent have greatly varied both in ancient and modern times, and its present boundaries are not exactly known, especially towards Russia, Tartary, and India. In the general outline, it is bounded on the N by Russia, the Caspian Sea, and Independent Tartary; on the E by India; on the S by the Arabian Sea, and the Persian Gulf; and on the W by Georgia, Armenia, Curdistan, and Arabia. Persia is divided into the following provinces: Schirvan; Adirbeitzan Ghilan; Mezanderan; with Taberistan; Persian Irak, or ancient Parthia; Chusistan; Farsistan; Kerman, or Kerlstan; Mecran; Segestan; Sablestan; and Chorasan; including Asterbat and Dagestan. Candahar is generally considered as a province of Persia, although it is now an independent kingdom. The chief rivers are the Tigris and Amuc. In the N and E parts, it is mountainous and cold, in the middle and SE parts sandy and desart; and in the S and W level and extremely fertile, though for several months very hot. The soil produces corn, and all sorts of culinary herbs, plants, roots, and pulse, and the country abounds with poultry and game, generally very thin, white, and good. They have cotton in great abundance, and among other domestic animals, camels, buffaloes, oxen, sheep, goats, and horses, wonderfully gentle, sprightly, slender, and finely proportioned, the best travellers in the East; mules in great request, and asses of the Arabian breed, reckoned the best in the world. In several places naptha, a sort of bitumen, rises out of the ground, and they have mines of gold, silver, iron, Turkey stones, and salt, but the first two of these are not worked, on account of the scarcity of wood. They have a great deal of cotton cloth, some pearls, and a large quantity of silk, beside manufactures of silk, and very fine carpets. They have also the various sorts of fruits, fairer and better than the choicest Europeans; excellent wine, and a great number of mulberry-trees, with the leaves of which they feed the silkworms; likewise dates, pistachio-nuts, and trees which produce manna. They are generally Mahometans, of the sect of Ali. Ispahan is the capital.

PERSIAN GULF, a large gulf of Asia, between Persia and Arabia Felix. The entrance near Ormus is not above 30 m. over, but within it is 180 in breadth, and the length, near Ormus to the mouth of the Euphrates, 420 m.

Persint, Hants, near Rumsey. Pertenhall, Bedfords. near Swineshead.

PERTH, a very handsome town of Scotland, capital of a county of the same name, containing 4510 houses, and 16,948 inhab. It consists, chiefly, of one wide street, well paved, but ill-built; from which two others branch off, at right angles, on each side. The kings of Scotland, before James II. in 1437, were crowned at Scone, and generally resided at Perth, as the metropolis of the kingdom. The town is supposed to have increased one third in buildings since the year 1745. The manufacture of linen and cotton here is very considerable; 150,000l. being annually exported, with about 50,000l. worth of salmon, and 10,000l. worth of wheat and barley. Perth is agreeably seated (with a beautiful approach to it) on the western bank of the Tay, which is here crossed by an elegant stone bridge of 9 arches (to which the tide comes up, the river being navigable for small vessels), 38 m. NNW of Edinburgh.

Perthneer Chapel, near Monmouth.

PERTHSHIRE, a county of Scotland, bounded on the N by the shires of Inverness and Aberdeen; on the E by Angussh. and the Frith of Tay; on the SE and S by the counties of Fife, Kinross, Clackmannan, and Stirling; and on the W by Dunbartons. and Argyles. It extends about 60 m. from N to S, and upwards of 50 from E to W, and contains 26,404 houses, and 135,093 inhab. The northern district, called Athol, is uncommonly wild and mountainous; the 5 others, viz. Braedelbane, Gourle, Monteith, Stormont, and Strathern, are more champaign, and fertile in corn and pasture.

PERTH AMBOY, a sea-port in the county of Middlesex, and state of New Jersey, situated on a neck of land, included between the river Raritan and Arthur Kull Sound. It lies open to Sandy Hook, has one of the best harbours on the continent, and is 25 m. SW of New York.

Perton, Staffords. near Wolverhampton.

PERTUIS, a town in the depart. of the Mouths of the Rhone, 10 m. N of Aix.

Pertwood, Wilts, NW of Hindon.

PERU, a large country of S. America, bounded on the N by the river of Guayaquil, which divides it from New Granada; on the S by the depopulated territory of Atacama, which parts it from Chili; on the E by a horrible desert of more than 500 leagues in extent, which separates it from the provinces of Paraguay and Buenos Ayres; and on the W by the Pacific Ocean. Its extent from N to S is from 420 to 450 leagues, and from E to W from 100 to 120 leagues. It was stripped of the kingdom of Quito, which has generally been considered as a part of it, in 1718, and of those provinces, a the distance of 40 leagues E of Lima, which, towards the E, now constitute the vice-royalty of Buenos Ayres, in 1778. It scarcely ever rains in this country, and they hardly know what lightning and thunder are, unless toward the tops of the mountains, the tops of which are covered with snow to a very great height; among them are several volcanoes, which burn continually, and sometimes such torrents of water fall down from thence, as overflow the country for a considerable space. Earthquakes are so very common here in the valleys, that the inhab. reckon from them as a series of dates. The best houses are made of a sort of reeds, like bamboo-canes, and covered with thatch, or palm leaves. They have a kind of galleries or balconies, but there is no walking along the floors without making the whole structure shrink or shake. Here are large forests on the sides of the mountains, which advance near the sea; but the trees are different from those in Europe. The birds are much superior to the European for the beauty of their plumage; but their notes are disagreeable. There are few birds near the sea, and the monkeys also keep at a distance from it. The bird called the toucan, which is remarkable for having a bill as large as its body, is called the preacher by the Spaniards, though it is as mute as a fish. It has been generally said there are lions here, but that which they call so, is more like a wolf than a lion, and never attacks man The tigers are said to be as large and as fierce as those of Africa, though not of the same colour; however, there are but very few of them. Serpents are very common, and several sorts of them dangerous; particularly the rattle-snake, which does not get away from men like the rest. There are several insects like those in Europe, but they are vastly larger. The earth-worms are as long as a man's arm, and as thick as his thumb; here are also spiders covered with hair, and as large as a pigeon's egg. The bats are of a monstrous size and will suck the blood of horses, mules, and even of men who sleep in the fields; and they have entirely destroyed the great cattle, which the missionaries had introduced into a country N of Peru. The famous bird called a contor, or condor, is, perhaps, the largest in the world; for it is said to make nothing of carrying off sheep and heifers. The animal called the guanaco, or camel-sheep, is peculiar to S. America, and has something of the shape of a camel, but without any bunch on its back. There are also two other animals pretty nearly like the guanaco, in shape, viz. the vicuna and the lama, which last the Indians use as a beast of carriage, for any load under a hundred weight. The two former are also of great service in mines, carrying metals in such rugged roads as would be impracticable to any other beast. Peru is partly inhabited by the Spaniards, who conquered it, and partly by the native Americans. The latter, who live among the forests, form, as it were, so many small republics, which are directed by a Spanish priest, and by their governor, assisted by the original natives, who serve as officers under them. They go naked, and paint their bodies with a red drug, called rocu. Their skins are of a red copper colour; and they have no beards, nor hair on any part of their bodies except their heads, where it is black, long, and coarse. From a mixture of the native Americans and Spaniards, arises a third kind, called Mestics, who are accounted illegitimate; however, they have all the privileges of Spaniards, and are the persons who carry on trades; as the former think it beneath them to meddle with any thing of this sort. These Mestics behave in a more tyrannical manner over the real Americans, than even the Spaniards themselves. They have a great number of fruits, plants, and trees, not known in Europe; the Spaniards also have introduced here many herbs, plants, and trees, from Europe, which thrive very well, and produce delicious fruits. A great part of the territory of Peru is occupied either by barren and rugged mountains; by sandy plains, which reach from one extremity of the coast to another; or by lakes of many leagues in extent, some of which are situated on the very summits of the mountains. The breaks, however, and the valleys, which enjoy the benefit of irrigation, present an extensive range of delightful plains, filled with cities and towns, the climate whereof is highly salubrious and agreeable. Its commerce has been considerably augmented, since the arrival of merchant vessels from Spain, by Cape Horn, has been permitted, and since the removal of those restrictions, by which the province was oppressed in the time of the galleons, and the fairs of Porto-Bello and Panama. The manufactures consist almost entirely of a few friezes, worn by Indians and negroes; and there are some manufactures of hats, cotton cloths, drinking glasses, &c. but inconsiderable in number. The mines are, in fact, the only source of the riches of Peru. In 1790, 534,000 marks of silver, and 6038 of gold, were smelted and refined in the royal mint of Lima; and, in the same year, 5,162,239 piastres, in both materials, were coined there. About half of the silver, which is annually smelted and coined in this province, is extracted from the mines of Gualgayoc and Pasco; the former in the district of Truxillo, and the latter situated at the northern extremity of the Pampas de Bombon. The mine of Guantajaya, in Arequipa, and that of Guarochiri, in Lima, do not, however, flourish in proportion to the richness and abundance of their metals; this arises from the difficulty of procuring necessaries for working, subsistence, &c. The fishery is exclusively in the hands of the Indians, but these being unskilful mariners, and unprovided with proper boats and fit instruments, venture but a small distance out to sea. Hence a scarcity and dearness of fish is experienced in Lima, and in all the places along the coast. The bad and uneven roads, together with the delay and expense of carriage, almost entirely obstruct the internal commerce of this province, and render the subsistence of the inhab. precarious, and dependent on foreign aid. Peru is governed by a viceroy, and is divided into the archbishopric of Lima, and the bishoprics of Arequipa, Cusco, Guamanga, and Truxillo; each of which is subdivided into jurisdictions. Lima is the capital.

PERUGIA, a town of Italy, capital of Perugiano, 75 m. N of Rome. It is a handsome and populous city, with a university, and three academies. The churches, and many other buildings, public and private, are very handsome.

PERUGIA, a lake of Italy, 8 m. from the city of that name, in the province of Perugiana. It is about 10 m. in diameter, and contains three islands. It was formerly called Lacus Thrasimenus, near which the consul Flaminius was defeated by Hannibal.

PERUGIANO, a province of Italy, E of Tuscany, about 25 m. in length, and nearly as much in breadth. The air is very pure, and the soil fertile in corn and good wine. The capital is Perugia.

PERUNNE, a considerable town in the depart. of Somme, seated on the river Somme, 27 m. SW of Cambray, and 80 E by N of Paris.

Peryton, Somersets. near Wellington. Peryton, Kent, near Westwell.

PESCARA, a town and river of Abruzzo Citra.

PESCHIERA, a town in the Veronese.

Pescotter, a river in Cardigans. which runs into the Tavy, opposite Istrodefyne.

PESENAS, a town in the depart. of Herault, seated on the river Herault, 12 m. NE of Beziers.

PESHOUR, a city in Persia, the capital of Cabul.

Pesnall, Suff. W of Yoxford.

Pesselbury, Hertfordshire, near Sawbridgeworth.

PEST, a free town of Hungary, capital of a county of the same name, seated on the E side of the Danube, opposite Buda.

PESTI, a town of Naples, in Principato Citra, 20 m. SE of Salerno.

Peston, Shrops. near Chirbury.

PETCHE-LI, a province of China, the chief in the whole empire; bounded on the E by the Yellow Sea; on the N by the great wall; on the W by Chan-si; and on the S by Chang-tong and Honan. It contains Pekin, the principal city in the empire, on which 140 towns depend, besides a vast number of villages. The air is temperate, unless when the wind blows from the N and there is a rainy season in summer; but it seldom rains very long, or at any other time. The soil is fertile, and produces the various sorts of corn; and there is plenty of cattle, pulse, and fruits. They have also mines of coal, which is their only fuel. There is a great variety of animals, of which a sort of cat is most remarkable, it having long hair about its neck and head, like the lion, and hanging ears. All the riches of China are brought into this province, particularly to Pekin.

PETELANGE, a town of France, in the depart. of Moselle, 13 m. NE of Morhange.

PETER AND PAUL, ST. or PETROPAULOWSKOI, a town and port of Kamtschatka, in the Russian government of Irkutzk. The town consists of some miserable log-houses and a few covered huts. Captain King places it in lat. 53 38 N and lon. 158 43 E.

PETERBOROUGH, an ancient city of Northamptons. with some woollen manufactures of cloth and stockings. It is so named from a monastery dedicated to St. Peter, founded here in the year 655, by Peada, son of Penda, king of Mercia. It is not a large place, having but one parish church, besides the cathedral, but the market-place is spacious, the streets are regular, and there is a handsome market-house, over which are held the assizes and quarterly sessions. It has a separate jurisdiction extending over 32 towns and hamlets, wherein the magistrates appointed by royal commission, are vested with the same power as judges of assize. The cathedral, formerly a monastery, is a most noble structure, full of curious work. The W front, which is 156 feet in breadth, is reckoned the most stately of any in England, and of late years has been thoroughly repaired. It is seated on the river Nen (over which it has a wooden bridge, and which is navigable to Northampton, by barges laden with coals, corn, malt, timber, &c.). 30 m. SSW of Boston, 6½ from Stilton, and 81 N of London. Market on Satur.

Peterborough, in Monaghan, Ulster.

Peter-Church, Herefords. on the river Doier, in the Golden Vale, 10 m. from Hereford.

Peterculter, Aberdeen, Scotland, 8 m. from Aberdeen, contains 220 houses, on the banks of the Dee.

PETERHEAD, a handsome sea-port town of Aberdeens. situated near the mouth of the river Ugie, with an excellent harbour, defended by a new pier. A considerable trade is carried on, both in the fishery, and to the Baltic for the productions of the North. Here is also a manufacture of sewing thread. The town is built in the form of a cross, and divided into 4 districts, called Kirktown, Rontreads, Keithinch, and Peterhead. The houses are built of granite, and the town is much frequented in summer for sea-bathing and drinking the mineral waters. It lies a little to the N of Buchanness, 24 m. NE of Aberdeen; contains 886 houses and 4600 inhab. of whom 1000 are employed in different manufactures.

PETER-LE-PORT, St. a town in the SE part of Guernsey, consisting of one long, narrow street. It is defended by two castles, the Old Castle and Cornet Castle; the latter is situated on a rock, separated from the land by an arm of the sea, 600 yards wide, and not fordable but at low water in great spring-tides. Here is a good road for shipping; and the pier, a noble work, formed of vast stones joined together with great art and regularity, affords not only security to vessels, but a pleasant and extensive walk to the inhab. with a fine prospect of the sea and the neighbouring islands.

Peterley, Bucks, in Missenden parish.

PETERKINGEN, a town of Switzerland, 9 m. N of Berne.

Peter's St. Kent, in Thanet Isle. Peter's, St. Suf. S of Bungay. Peter's, St. Worcesters. near Droitwich. Peter's Chapel-in-the-Wall, St. Essex, at the mouth of Blackwater river.

PETERSBURG, a town of Osnaburg, in Westphalia; also a town in the respective states of Virginia, Pennsylvania, Georgia, and Kentucky, in N. America.

PETERSBURGH, a town of Virginia, seated on an unhealthy spot, on the S side of the river Appamatox, 18 m. S of Richmond.

PETERSBURGH, the metropolis of the empire of Russia, in the government of the same name, is seated on the river Neva, near the Gulf of Finland, and is built partly upon some islands in the mouth of that river, and partly upon the continent. So late as the beginning of this century, the ground on which Petersburgh now stands was only a vast morass, occupied by two small fishermen's huts. The Czar Peter the Great, first began to build here in the year 1703, erecting a small tent or hut for himself, and some wretched wooden hovels. At first, being designed only for a place of arms in the Swedish war, the public edifices and private houses were built only with timber, the town had no other fortifications than a mean rampart of earth, nor were the streets paved. But after the victory of Pultowa, and the conquest of Livonia, Peter determined to render this infant city the capital of his vast empire. Upon this, he ordered the citadel to be built with stone, the admiralty to be walled in with the same materials, and all the buildings to be erected in a handsome and more durable manner, and gardens to be laid out. In 1714, he removed the council to Petersburgh, and elegant houses were erected, in a straight line, for the public offices, which, in 1719, were also translated hither. In Peter's time this city became gradually large and splendid, having received additional improvements from his successors, it is now justly ranked among the largest and most elegant cities of Europe. It is about 6 English miles in length, and as many in breadth, but it has neither gates nor walls. The streets, in general, are broad and spacious; and three of the principal ones, which meet in a point at the admiralty, are at least 2 m. in length. Most of them are paved, but a few are still suffered to remain floored with planks; and, in several parts of this metropolis, wooden houses, scarcely superior to cottages, are disgustingly blended with the public buildings. The brick houses are ornamented with a white stucco, which has mistakenly led several travellers to say, that they are built of stone. The mansions of the nobility are vast piles of building, furnished with great cost, in the same elegant style as at Paris or London; they are situated chiefly on the S side of the Neva, either in the admiralty quarter, or in the suburbs of Livonia and Moscow, which are, indeed, the finest parts of the city. The views upon the banks of the Neva exhibit the grandest and most lively scenes imaginable. That river is, in many places, as broad as the Thames at London: it is also deep, rapid, and as transparent as crystal; and its banks are lined on each side with a continued range of handsome buildings. On the N the fortress, an academy of sciences, and the academy of arts, are the most striking objects. On the opposite side are the imperial palace, the admiralty, the mansions of many of the Russian nobles, and the English line, so called because (a few houses excepted) the whole row is occupied by English merchants. In the front of these buildings, on the S side, is the quay, which stretches for 3 m. except where it is interrupted by the admiralty; and the Neva, during the whole of that space, has been embanked, by order of the late empress, by a wall, parapet, and pavement of hewn granite. The finest monument in the city is the equestrian figure of Peter I. placed upon a large rock of granite, which Catharine II. brought from the coast of Finland. Petersburgh, although it is more compact than the other Russian cities, and has the houses, in many streets, contiguous to each other, yet still bears a resemblance to the towns of this country, and is built in a very straggling manner. It has been lately inclosed within a rampart, the circumf. of which is 14 m. Notwithstanding all the improvements it has received by succeeding sovereigns, and particularly the late empress, who may without exaggeration be called its second founder, it is still, as Mr. Wraxall observes, "only an immense outline, which will require future empresses, and almost future ages to complete." From its low and marshy situation, it is subject to inundations; which have occasionally risen so high, as to threaten the town with a total submersion. The cold is sometimes at 33 degrees, and the climate subject to very rapid transitions. The opposite divisions of Petersburgh, situated on each side of the Neva, are connected by a bridge on pontoons, which, on account of the large masses of ice driven down the stream from the Lake Ladoga, is usually removed when they first make their appearance; and, for a few days, till the river is frozen hard enough to bear carriages, there is no communication between the opposite parts of the town. The number of inhab. in 1804 was 241,000, amongst whom, were 1800 Germans, 1500 Swedes, 2300 French, and 900 English. It contained 4,000 houses. The value of the exports in British ships, in 1777, amounted to 1,508,782l. sterling; and the goods imported in the same year were estimated at 423,942l. Petersburgh is 540 m. NNE of Warsaw. Lat. 59 56 N lon. 30 25 E.

PETERSDORF, a town of Prussia in province of Samland, 24 m. E of Koningsburg.

PETERSFIELD, a populous borough of Hants, being a great thoroughfare on the road from London to Portsmouth, seated on the river Loddon, 18 m. NE of Portsmouth, and 53 SW of London. Market on Sat.

PHAROS, a small island in the Mediterranean Sea, opposite Alexandria, in Egypt, the space between which and the continent, forms a spacious harbour. It has a communication with the continent by a stone causeway and bridge. It formerly had an exceedingly high tower upon it, called the Pharos, whence the island took its name. On the top of it were lights for the direction of ships.

PHARSA, anciently PHARSALIA, a town of Turkey in Europe, in Janna, the ancient Thessaly; famous for the decisive battle fought in its plains, between Julius Cæsar and Pompey. It is an archiepiscopal see, and is seated on the river Enipeus, 10 m. S of Larissa.

PHASIS, or PHASE, a large river of Asia, which crosses the country of Mingrelia, and runs into the Black Sea.

PHEASANTS-ISLE. See FAISANTS.

PHENICIA, a country of Turkey, in Asia, extending from Arabia Deserta to the Mediterranean; bounded on the N by Syria Proper, and on the S by Palestine. The principal towns are Tripoly, Damascus, and Balbec. It is but a small territory, but has been greatly celebrated for being the inventor of navigation, and according to some, of letters. Its inhabitants were the first, which we have any account of, that traded with Britain for tin. They frequently sent colonies to different parts of Europe and Africa, where they founded considerable towns.

Philack, Cornw. on St. Ives Bay.

PHILADELPHIA, called by the Turks ALLAHIJAH, an ancient city of Natolia, seated at the foot of the mountain Tmolus, 40 m. ESE of Smyrna. It contains about 11,000 inhab. among whom are 2000 Christians, who form four churches or congregations.

PHILADELPHIA, the capital of Pennsylvania, and latterly of all the United States of N. America, is situated on a neck of land at the confluence of the rivers Delaware and Schuylkill. The length of the city from E to W, that is, from the Delaware to the Schuylkill, upon the original plan, is 10,300 feet, and the breadth N and S, is 4837 feet. Not two-fifths of the plot covered by the city charter, are yet built upon. The inhab. however, have not confined themselves within the original limits of the city, but have built N and S along the Delaware, 2 m. in length. The circumf. of that part of the city which is built, if we include Kensington on the N, and Southwark on the S, is about 5 m. Market Street is 100 feet wide, and runs the whole length of the city, from river to river. Near the middle of it, it is intersected at right angles by Broad Street, 100 feet wide, running nearly N and S, quite across the city. Between the Delaware and Broad Street, are 10 streets, nearly equidistant, running parallel with Broad Street; and between Broad Street and the Schuylkill are 9 streets, equidistant from each other. Parallel to Market Street are 8 other streets, running E and W from river to river, and intersecting the cross streets at right angles. All these streets are 50 feet wide, except Arch Street, which is 65 feet wide, and all the streets which run N and S, except Broad Street, are also 50 feet wide. There were 4 squares, of 8 acres each, one at each corner of the city, originally reserved for public uses: and in the centre of the city, at the intersection of Market Street and Broad Street, is a square of 10 acres, reserved in like manner, to be planted with rows of trees for public walks. Most of the houses have a small garden and orchard; and from the river are cut small canals, equally agreeable and beneficial. The wharfs are fine and spacious; the principal one is 200 feet wide, the water of which is so deep, that a vessel of 500 tons burden may lay her broadside to it. The warehouses are large, numerous, and commodious; and the docks for ship-building are so well adapted to their purposes, that 20 ships have been sometimes seen on the stocks at a time. This city was founded in 1682, by the celebrated William Penn, a Quaker, who, in 1701, granted a charter, incorporating the town under the government of a mayor, recorder, 8 aldermen, 12 common council-men, a sheriff, and clerk. The Quakers, from this period, acquired a political consequence in the western hemisphere; while their brethren in Europe were, and still continue, excluded from sharing in the full right of citizenship, by partial and impolitic laws. Philadelphia, in 1749, numbered 2070 houses, and about 11,600 inhab. In 1792, it contained 5000 houses, in general handsomely built of brick, and about 40,000 inhab. The state-house is a magnificent building, erected in 1735. In 1787, an elegant court-house was built on the left of the state-house; and on the right a philosophical hall. South of the state-house is the public gaol, built of stone, one of the most elegant and secure structures of the kind in America. Here, likewise, is a public observatory, and several other public buildings.

A university was founded here during the war: its funds were partly given by the state, and partly taken from the old college. The places set apart for public worship, are 26 for Christians of different denominations, and a synagogue for the Jews. In 1786, 910 vessels were entered at the custom-house in Philadelphia; and in 1787, the number was 780. The principal exports are wheat, flour, Indian corn, flaxseed, beef, and rice. Philadelphia is 97 m. SW of New-York, 356 SW of Boston, and the 118 of the entrance of the Delaware into Atlantic Ocean. Lat. 39 57 N lon. 75,8 W.

PHILINSKOI, a town of Russia, in government of Tobolsk, 120 m. N of Tobolsk.

PHILIP ISLANDS, two islands in the S. Pacific Ocean, discovered by Captain Hunter in 1791, and named after Arthur Philip, Esq. governor of New S. Wales. They are about 5 m. asunder; but almost joined together by a long sandy spit, above water, which reaches, for about two thirds of the distance from the easternmost, or largest island, to the most westerly, which is the smallest. They are covered with shrubs, have few tall trees on them, and the land is low. The eastern island is in lat. 8 6 N lon. 140 3 E.

PHILIPPI, an ancient town of Macedonia, seated on the confines of Romania, 10 m. from the Gulf of Contessa, and 67 E of Salonichi. It was enlarged by Philip, father of Alexander the Great, who gave it his own name. It was near this place, commonly called the plains of Philippi, where Cassius and Brutus, two of the assassinators of Cæsar, were defeated by Mark Anthony and Augustus. It is an archbishop's see, but greatly decayed and badly peopled. An amphitheatre, and several other monuments of its ancient grandeur, remain. Lat. 41 13 N lon. 24 25 E.

PHILIPPINE, or MANILLA ISLANDS, a very large cluster, or group of islands, in the East Indian Sea, first discovered by Magellan in 1521. They are said to be 1200 in number, of which 5 or 600 are of importance. The air is very hot and moist, and the soil fertile in rice, and many other useful vegetables and fruits. The trees are always green, and there are ripe fruits all the year. There are a great many wild beasts and birds, quite unknown in Europe. The inhab. are not all of one original. The principal of these islands are Manilla, or Luconia; Mindanao; Samar, or Tanday, sometimes called Philippina; Masbate; Mindoro; Luban; Paragoia, or Paragua; Panay; Leyta; Bohol; Sebu, Cibau, or Zebu; Negro's Island; St. John's; and Xolo, or Sooloo. In the year 1564, Don Louis de Valasco, viceroy of Mexico, sent Michael Lopez Delagaspes thither with a fleet from Mexico, and a force sufficient to make a conquest of these islands, which he named the Philippines, in honour of Philip II. then on the throne of Spain. They have ever since remained subject to that crown. Lat. from 6 30 to 18 15 N lon. from 113 13 to 127 13 E.

PHILIPPINES, NEW, otherwise called PALAOS, islands in the E. Indian Sea, between the Moluccas, the old Philippines, and the Ladrones. They are said to be 87 in number, but they are little known to Europeans.

PICO, an island the most populous of the Azores, about 45 m. in circumf. The mountain, which gives name to the island, and which terminates, like Teneriffe, in a peak, reputed by some writers equal to it in height, is filled with caverns, which vomit out flames, smoke, and ashes. The cattle here are various, numerous, and excellent in their several kinds; and the vine and its juice are in equal perfection. Besides cedar and other timber, there is a kind of wood, solid, hard, and veined, which, when finely polished, resembles a rich scarlet tabby. This tree is felled only for the king's use, and grows the more beautiful the longer it is kept. The inhabitants live wholly on the produce of the island, in great plenty and comfort. Lat. 38 29 N lon. 28 21 W.

Picotes, Herts, near Bishop-Stortford. Picton, Chesh. on the Gowy, near Delamere Forest.

PICTS' WALL, a famous barrier, built by the Romans, against the Picts, of which some small remains are yet visible. It began at the entrance of Solway Frith, in Cumberl. and running by Carlisle, was continued from W to E across the N end of the kingdom, as far as Newcastle, and ended at Teignmouth. It was first built of earth by the emperor Adrian, in 123; Severus afterwards built it of stone, with turrets at every mile; and Ætius, the Roman general, rebuilt it of brick, in 430. It was 8 feet thick, 12 feet high, and about 100 m. in length. There are many Roman coins, and other antiquities found near it.

Piddingboe, Sussex, near Newhaven. Piddington, E of Durham. Piddington, Oxfords. PIEDMONT, a principality of Italy; so named from its being at the foot of the Alps; it is bounded on the N by Savoy; on the E by the duchies of Milan and Montferrat; on the S by the county of Nice and the territory of Genoa; and on the W by France. It was formerly a part of Lombardy, and next subject to the king of Sardinia; but in 1802 it was annexed to France, and formed into the departs. of the Po, and the Marengo. It is about 120 m. in length, and 50 in breadth. It contains many high mountains, among which are rich and fruitful valleys, as fertile and pleasant as any part of Italy. In the mountains are mines of several kinds, the forests afford a great deal of game, and the rivers abound with excellent fish. The inhabitants carry on a great trade in raw silk; and the country produces also plenty of corn, rice, wine, fruits, hemp, flax, and cattle. It contains a great number of cities and towns, almost united to each other by villages.

PILKOPEO, a town of Samland, in Prussia, situated on a mountain, 30 m. N of Koningsberg. Here was formerly an idol, called Pilkob, which the ancient Prussians worshipped.

PILL, a small town of Somersets. with a road for shipping, at the mouth of the Avon, about 4 m. below Bristol. The most beautiful and romantic prospects are presented in continual and striking changes, in navigating the intervening channel. Here rich plantations and beautiful lawns rise upon the view; fertile fields and woods, in some parts, clothe the hills to their very summits; while, in others, the lofty rocks rising at once from the opposite sides of the river, present the awful appearance of the most tremendous precipices, and seem to mock every attempt of art to reduce their savage aspect. Yet, at the bases of these precipitous rocks, along the banks of this extraordinary channel, where the river and tide find their sinuous way through chasms and fissures of the mountains, and where the largest vessels appear diminutive from the grandeur and sublimity of the surrounding scenery, the seamen find the necessary accommodations for mooring, hauling, &c. in the massive bolts and rings, which have been fixed in the rocks.

Pill, Somersets. S of Shepton-Mallet. Pilamountain, Cornw. NW of Crantock St. Michael. Pilland, Devons. in Pilton parish. Pillaton, Cornw. by Liver. river, SE of St. Ive's. Pillaton-Hall, Staffords. between Penkridge and Cannock.

PILLAU, a considerable sea-port of Samland, in Prussia, with broad straight streets, and houses built and furnished in the Dutch taste. It is defended by strong, handsome, and regular fortifications, and has a good harbour. Vessels of great burden take in their loading here, as there is not sufficient depth of water to carry them up to Koningsberg. It is situated on a tongue of land, which projects into the Baltic, at the entrance of the Frisch Haff, 22 m. SW of Koningsburg.

Pill-Bridge, Somersets. over the Ivel, near Ilchester. Pillarton, Nether and Over, Warwicks. SW of Kington. Pillesdon, Dorsets. SW of Beminster. Pillesgate, Northamptons. near Burghley House. Pilley, Hants, in the New Forest. Pilling-Hall, and Moss, Lancas. between Garstang and the sea. In 1745, a part of Pilling Moss was observed to rise to a surprising height; after a short time it sunk as much below the level, and moved slowly towards the S side, and in half an hour's time it covered 20 acres of land. A man going over the Moss, eastward, when it began to move, perceiving, to his great astonishment, that the ground under his feet moved southward, he turned back speedily, and escaped being swallowed up. A family was driven out of their dwelling-house, which was quite surrounded, and tumbled down. The improved land adjoining that part of the Moss which moved, was a concave circular tract, of nearly 100 acres; and this was well nigh filled up with moss and water, to the depth, it was thought, in some parts, of five yards.

PISA, an ancient, large, and handsome city of Etruria, and capital of the Pisano, with a university. The town is seated on the river Arno, 10 m. distant from the sea, in a very fertile plain. The river runs through Pisa, and over it are three bridges, of which that in the middle is constructed with marble. The city does not contain at present above 16,000 inhab. although they were computed formerly at 100,000; and grass is said to grow in the principal streets. The cathedral is a magnificent structure, and on the right side of the choir is the leaning tower, so much talked of. The doors are of bronze, said to be brought from the temple of Jerusalem. The grand duke's palace, and the exchange are magnificent buildings, worth notice. The Pisans were formerly a free, commercial people, and maintained long and bloody war against the Florentines, who at last subdued them. The neighbourhood of Leghorn, formerly of little or no trade, but now the chief port in the Mediterranean, has contributed greatly to the decay of Pisa. Between Pisa and Leghorn is a canal 16 Italian m. in length. It is 10 m. N of Leghorn. Lat. 43 43 N lon. 10 17 E.

PISANO, a territory of Italy, and one of the finest countries in Tuscany. It lies along the Mediterranean sea, and is about 47 m. in length, and 25 in breadth.

PIZZO DI GOTTO, a town of Demona, in Sicily, 6 m. S of Melazzo.

PLACENTIA, a sea-port of N. America, in Newfoundland, with a harbour, much frequented by ships employed in the cod fishery. The entrance of it, however, is so narrow, that only one ship can pass at a time, but the water is deep enough for the largest, and it is capacious enough to hold 150 sail, which can fish there, secure against all winds, and as quietly as in a river. Near it is the Great Strand, a drying place for fish, lying between two very steep hills, and large enough to dry fish sufficient to load threescore vessels. There is also another called the Little Strand. It is seated on a bay, on the S part of the island, in lat. 47 15 N lon. 55 10 W and 40 m. W of St. John's.

PLACENZA, or PIACENZA, a populous town of Italy, capital of a duchy of the same name, with a bishop's see, and a citadel. The public buildings, squares, and fountains, are beautiful, the streets are broad and straight, and one in particular called the Stradone, is reckoned the largest and handsomest in Italy, being 3000 feet in length. It contains besides the cathedral, one collegiate, 12 parochial, and 38 other churches, 8 abbeys, 16 convents, and a university, with about 20,000 inhabitants, of whom 2000 are ecclesiastics. It is pleasantly situated in a well cultivated country, on the river Po, 32 m. NW of Parma.

PLACENZA, THE DUCHY OF, extends about 30 m. long from N to S and from 8 to 15 broad from E to W, and is politically annexed to the duchy of Parma. It is very fertile and populous, and contains mines of iron, copper, and vitriol, with salt springs, from which they make very white salt. Its principal rivers are the Trebia and Nurra.

PLATA, an island on the coast of Quito, in Peru, surrounded by inaccessible rocks. It is about 5 m. long, and 4 broad.

PLATA, a rich and populous town of Peru, capital of the province of Los Charcas, with an audience. It has mines of silver, which they have left off working, since those of Potosi have been discovered. It is seated on the river Chimoa, 500 m. SE of Cusco. Lat. 19 16 S lon. 63 40 W.

PLATA, or RIO-DE-LA-PLATA, a large river of S. America, which is formed by the union of the three great rivers, the Paraguay, Uraguay, and Parana. It was discovered in 1515, by Juan Diaz de Solis, a Spanish navigator, who imprudently going ashore with 10 men, they were all murdered by the savages. It crosses Paraguay, and enters the Southern Ocean, in lat. 35 S. It is 150 m. broad at its mouth; at Monte Video, above 100 m. higher up the river, the land is not to be discerned on either shore, when a vessel is in the middle of the channel, and at Buenos Ayres, 200 m. higher still, the opposite shore is not to be discerned from that town. This river, for near 200 leagues (from the conflux of the Paraguay, and Parana, to its mouth) is interspersed with delightful islands; it abounds with surprising plenty and variety of fish, the water is clear, sweet, and wholesome, and the banks are frequented by a great number of very beautiful birds. It sometimes overflows its banks, and fertilizes the adjoining lands, like those of Egypt.

PLATA, LA, a province and archbishopric of S. America, in the government of Buenos Ayres. It is divided into 14 jurisdictions, and is situated on both sides the river Plata, extending 200 leag. from N to S, and 100 from E to W. The climate is very moderate and healthy, but the country is generally infested by serpents.

PLYMOUTH, a large and populous sea-port of Devons. from a mere fishing town, is become one of the largest in the county, and one of the chief naval magazines in the kingdom, owing to its excellent port or harbour, which is capable of safely containing 1000 sail. There are, properly speaking, however, 3 harbours, viz. Catwater, Sutton Pool, and Hamoaze. The first is the mouth of the Plym, and affords a safe and commodious harbour for merchant-ships, but is seldom entered by ships of war. The second is frequented by merchant-ships only, and is almost surrounded by the houses of the town. It is in itself well calculated to give complete protection to such ships as are moored in it, and has lately been farther secured by an extensive pier. The third inlet, which is the mouth of the Tamar, is the harbour for the reception of the British navy, being fitted out with moorings for near a hundred sail, and having good anchorage for a much greater number. It is defended by a fort on St. Nicholas Island, and other forts, mounted with near 300 guns, and particularly by a citadel, erected in the reign of Charles II. between the sea and the town, which contains a large store-house, and five regular bastions. This last is situated on the hill, called the Haw, which overlooks the town, and is a good land-mark for mariners. The town and suburbs of Stonehouse and Stoke Damerell, contains 5436 houses, and 30,500 inhab. What is called THE DOCK, is a separate town, situated about 2 m. up the Hamoaze, and is now nearly as large as Plymouth itself. Here are two docks, the one wet, the other dry, built in the reign of William III. and two others, which have been built since, hewn out of a mine of slate, and lined with Portland stone. Plymouth Dock is furnished with large magazines, storehouses, &c. containing arms, stores, and all things necessary to equip a fleet. Here are also spacious and commodious barrack, for the marines, with houses for the officers, clerks, &c. The town is well supplied with fresh water, first brought hither, from a place 7 m. off, at the cost of Sir Francis Drake. It has a good pilchard fishery, drives a considerable trade to the Straits, and to Newfoundland, and is seated between the mouths of the rivers Plynn and Tamar, 43 m. SW of Exeter, and 216 W by S of London. Lat. 50 22 N lon. 4 10 W. Markets on Mond. Thursd. and Sat.

PO, a large and celebrated river of Italy, which has its source at Mount Viso, in Piedmont. It runs through Montferrat, the Milanese and Mantua; thence it passes to the borders of the Parmesan, and a part of the Modenese; and having entered the Ferrarese, it divides itself at Ficheruolo, and enters the Adriatic by a number of mouths. It passes by Montcalier, Turin, Casal, Cremona, Ferrara, &c. In its course it receives several rivers, and often overflows its banks, doing a great deal of damage; the reason of which is, that most of those rivers descend from the Alps, and are increased by the melting of the snow.

PO, a depart. of France, being formerly a part of Piedmont; Turin, the former capital of Sardinia, is the chief town.

Pockley, Yorks. NE of Helmsley.

POISSY, a town in the depart. of Seine and Oise, seated near the edge of the forest of St. Germain, 3 m. NNW of St. Germain.

POITIERS, an ancient town, capital of the depart. of Vienne. It would be one of the most considerable places in France, were its population in proportion to its extent; but it includes a number of gardens and fields within its circuit; and the inhab. are estimated at 21,000. It has several Roman antiquities, particularly an amphitheatre, which is partly demolished. There is also a triumphal arch, which serves as a gate to the great street. The principal manufactures are stockings, woollen caps, gloves, and combs. Vipers are found in the environs in such numbers, that they are exported even to Venice, to make treacle. In 1356, a memorable battle was fought near this town, between the English and French, in which the latter were defeated. The English army, which amounted to only 16,000 men, was commanded by Edward the Black Prince; that of the enemy commanded by King John, was estimated at 60,000. King John and his son Philip were both taken prisoners and brought to England. This town is seated on a hill, on the river Clain, 54 m. SSW of Tours, and 110 NE of Bourdeaux.

POITOU, a ci-devant province of France, lying S of the Loire, E of the sea, and W of Marche and Berry; it is fertile in corn and wine, and feeds a great number of cattle, particularly mules. It now forms the three departs. of Vendee, Vienne, and the Two Sevres.

POLANA, a town of Val di Demona, Italy.

POLAND, a large country of Europe, bounded on the W by Pomerania, Silesia, and Moravia; on the S by Hungary and Moldavia; on the N by Prussia, Courland, and Russia; and on the E by Russia. Poland, in its utmost latitude, included formerly 13 provinces: viz. Great Poland, containing the palatinates of Posnania, Kalish, Siradia, Leuczicz, and Rawa; Cujavia, containing the palatinates of Brzeskic and Wladislaw; Massovia, containing the palatinates of Cracow, Sandomir, and Lublin; Podlachia, or the palatinate of Bielsk; Little or Red Russia, containing the palatinates of Chelm, Belez and Lemburg; Podolia and Kiof, containing the palatinates of Podolia and Bracklaw; the palatinate of Kiob and Volhinia. Besides these, Lithuania has been considered as a part of Poland; as likewise Samogitia and even Courland. The late government was monarchical and aristocratical; all the acts of state being in the name of "the king and republic of Poland." The king was the only elective sovereign in Europe: he was chosen by a general diet, called together by the archbishop of Gnesna, who is the chief minister of the republic during the interregnum. After his coronation, the king might dispose of the vacant benefices, and the offices both civil and military. He had a settled revenue of 140,000l. a year, but could not, by his own authority, raise any new taxes, or change any law. The aristocracy consisted in the senate and general diet. The senate was composed of the bishops, great officers, palatines, and governors of towns, who, with the king, regulated the affairs of the kingdom, so as to prevent him from doing any thing against the liberty of the country. The general diets, which are assemblies of all the nobility, met every two years, or oftener, when there was any important affair on the carpet. The Poles, or Polanders, are large and robust. The peasants are poor, miserable, clownish; and mere slaves to the noblesse. The Polish towns are mostly built of wood, and the villages consist of mean huts. The nobles have from time immemorial resided in their seats or castles, in their own villages, maintaining themselves by agriculture, breeding of bees, grazing, and hunting. Such was the state and constitution of Poland, before the memorable year 1772, when a partition of the country, projected by the king of Prussia, was effected by that monarch, in conjunction with the empress of Russia and Maria Theresa, empress of Germany. By this partition, Great Poland, Polish Prussia (the cities of Dantzic and Thorn excepted) and part of Lithuania were annexed to Prussia; Little Poland and Red Russia, to Austria; and the remaining, and greater part of Lithuania, Courland, Polesia, Podolia, Volhinia, and the palatinate of Kiof, were seized by Russia, so that only Samogitia, Massovia, and Podlachia, were left to constitute the kingdom of Poland. Of these dismembered countries the Russian part is the largest, the Austrian the most populous, and the Prussian the most commercial. The population of the whole amounts to near 5,000,000; the first containing 1,500,000, the second 2,500,000, and the third 860,000. The three partitioning powers, moreover, forcibly effected a great change in the constitution. By this the house of Saxony, and all foreign princes, who might be likely to give weight to Poland by their hereditary dominions, were rendered incapable of filling the throne; the faintest prospect of an hereditary sovereignty was removed; the exorbitant privileges of the equestrian order were confirmed in their utmost latitude; and the prerogatives of the crown still further diminished. In 1791, the king and the nation, in concurrence, almost unanimously, and without any foreign intervention, established another constitution. By this the broils of an elective monarchy, by which Poland, on almost every vacancy of the throne, had been involved in the calamities of war, were avoided, the throne being declared hereditary, in the house of Saxony. The rights and privileges of all orders in the republic (the king, the nobles, the citizens, and the peasants) were alike equitably consulted. In a word, it was not, on the one hand, the haughty despot dictating a constitution to his people, nor on the other, a proud aristocracy, or a mad democracy, that wrested from their sovereign his just prerogatives; but it was the universal wish of the nation, the sentiment that inspired which, was universal happiness. A few of the nobility, however, discontented at the sacrifices of some of their privileges, repaired to the court of Russia; and their representations concurring with the ambitious views of the empress, she sent an army into Poland, under pretence of being guarantee of the constitution of 1772. Her interference was too powerful to be resisted, and this new constitution was overthrown. But the principal object for which the Russian army entered Poland was not yet attained. The empress had planned, in conjunction with the king of Prussia, a second partition of this unhappy country, which actually took place in 1793. By this the empress obtained nearly the remaining part of Lithuania, with the palatinates of Podolia, Kiof, and Bratzlaw. Beside the voivodships, or provinces of Posen, Gnesen, Kalish, Siradia, Wielun, Lenschitz, Cujavia, Doorzyn, Rawa, part of Plotsk, &c. with the city and monastery of Czenstokow (the Loretto of Poland) and its rich treasures, the king of Prussia obtained the great object of his wishes, the cities of Dantzic and Thorn. Some attempts were made, by a few patriotic noblemen, to deliver their country from its oppressors, and they were at first successful; but the brave Kosciusko being taken prisoner, and his army defeated, no further efforts were made. Kosciusko was carried into Russia, and the king formally resigned his crown at Grodno, in 1795. Since then the country has undergone a farther partition, and is now entirely swallowed up by the rapacity of the dividers of the spoil. Poland, therefore, is at present a country, but no nation; and the indignant Pole, in reviewing its past history and present state, may exclaim with a sigh, "Such things were" By the constitution of 1772, the Romish religion is declared the established; but although the Dissidents continue excluded from the diet, the senate, and the permanent council, they are capable of sitting in the inferior courts of justice, and enjoy the free exercise of their religion. The universities of Poland are, Cracow, Wilna, and Posen. The air is generally cold, and they have but little wood; however, it yields such plenty of grain, that near 4000 vessels and floats, most of which are laden with corn, annually pass down the Vistula to Dantzic: 80 or 90,000 oxen are also driven every year out of Poland. They also export large quantities of leather, furs, hemp, flax, linseed, hops, salt-petre, honey, wax, tallow, hides, ship and house timber, pitch, pot-ash, horned cattle, horses, and other commodities; but these are greatly overbalanced by the imports, namely, wine, spices, cloths, silk, stuffs, fine linen, plate-copper, brass, steel, furs, &c. they have also mines of salt, of great depth, out of which they dig rock-salt. The principal rivers are the Dnieper, the Vistula, the Bug, the Dniemen, the Dneister, and the Bog. Warsaw is the capital.

POMERANIA, a province of Germany, in the circle of Upper Saxony, with the title of a duchy. On the N it has the Baltic, on the E Pomerelia, and on the W Mecklenburg. One part of it belongs to the king of Prussia, and the other to the Swedes. It is watered by several rivers, of which the Oder, the Pene, the Rega, the Persanet, the Wipper, the Stolp, and the Lebo, are the most considerable. The air is pretty cold, but compensated by the fertility of the soil, which abounds in pastures and corn, of which a great deal is transported into foreign countries. The geese are remarkably large; and, in general, the dried Pomeranian geese, hams, sausages, and salmon, pass for the best in Germany. It is a flat country, about 250 m. in length, and 75 in breadth. It contains many lakes, woods, and forests, and has several good harbours, particularly Stetin and Stralsund. It is divided by the Oder, into the Hither and Farther Pomerania; and the river Pene, for a considerable part of its course, separates the territories of Sweden and Prussia in this duchy. Stetin is the capital of the Prussian part, and Stralsund of the Swedish.

PONDICHERRY, a town of Hindostan, about 4 leag. in extent, the houses of which are as regularly laid out as if it had been all built at once. The Europeans build with bricks, but the Indians use only wood, in the manner which we call lath and plaster. In 1693, this town was taken by the Dutch, who erected 7 regular bastions here, and other fine fortifications, so as to render it one of the most complete fortresses in India. It was ceded, however, to the French by the treaty of Ryswick, in 1697 (for the trifling sum of 5000l.) who, thereupon, made it the chief seat of their East India Company. The English took it in 1761, and destroyed the fortifications; but restored it to the French by the treaty of Paris, in 1763. In 1793, it was again taken by the English. It is situated on the coast of Coromandel, 75 m. SSW of Madras. Lat. 11 56 N lon. 80 0 E.

PONT-DE-VAUX, a town in the depart. of Ain, seated on the river Reissousse, 16 m. NW of Bourg-en-Bresse.

PONT-DE-VESLE, a town in the depart. of Ain, with a manufactory of stuffs called Augustines, and also of tapestry for the coverings of arm-chairs and sofas, of the same kind as those of Aubusson. It is seated on the river Vesle, 12 m. NNW of Bourg.

PONT-DU-GARD. See GARD.

PONT-GIBAUT, a town in the depart. of Puy de Dome. Near this place is the village of Rore, with a silver mine, and a vinous fountain of mineral water. It is 10 m. WNW of Clermont.

PONTE-DE-LIMA, a town of Douro, Portugal, seated on the river Lima, 13 m. NW of Braga, and 196 N of Lisbon.

PONTEBA, or PONTE IMPERIAL, a town of Carinthia.

PONTEBA VENETA, a town of Friuli.

PONTEFRACT, or POMFRET, in the time of the Saxons called KIRKBY, a borough town in the W Riding of Yorks. situated in a rich soil noted for its nursery grounds, and large plantations of liquorice and skirworts; containing 820 houses. Its castle, now in ruins, has been the scene of various tragical events in the English history. Richard II. after being deposed, was starved or tormented to death here; and here Anthony, earl of Rivers, and Sir Richard Grey, were murdered, by order of king Richard III. It is situated at the conflux of the rivers Aire and Dun, 22 m. SSW of York, and 175 NNW of London. A great show of horses begins on Feb. 5. Market on Sat.

Pont-Eland, Northumb. 6 m. NW of Newcastle.

Pontesbury, and Pontesford, Shrops. on the Mele, SW of Shrewsbury.

PONTE-STURA, a town of Montferrat, seated at the confluence of the Stura and Po.

PONTE-VEDRA, a town of Spain, in Galicia, seated almost at the mouth of the river Leris; it is famous for its fishery of sardines (a kind of pilchards), which makes its principal riches.

PONTHIEU, before the revolution, a small country in Picardy, situated between the rivers Canche and Somme. Abbeville was the capital.

PONTIVY, a small town in the depart. of Morbihan, with a manufacture of linen. It is seated on the river Blavet, 26 m. N of Vannes.

PONT-L'EVEQUE, a town in the depart. of Calvados, seated on the river Tonque, 10 m. N of Lisieux.

PONTOISE, a town in the depart. of Seine and Oise, built in the form of an amphitheatre. It was taken by the English in the year 1345, by a singular stratagem. The ground being covered with snow, the assailants dressed themselves in white, with ladders painted white, and scaled the walls before the centinels could perceive their approach. Charles VII. however, retook it by storm in 1432. It is seated on an eminence, on the rivers Oise and Vienne, 17 m. NW of Paris.

PONT-ORSON, a town in the depart. of the Channel, seated on the river Coesnon, with a tide harbour, near the sea, 20 m. SSE of St. Malo.

PONT-PONTRÉMOLI, a town of Etruria, 20 m. SW of Parma.

PONT ST. ESPRIT, a small ill-built town, in the depart. of Gard, 17 m. S of Viviers. It is seated on the river Rhone, over which is a fine stone bridge, built in the middle of the 13th century; it consists of 19 great and 4 small arches. The extreme lightness of the structure, compared with the depth, rapidity, and width of the river, fills the mind with astonishment. To facilitate the passage of the water in time of floods, apertures have been made through each pier, about 6 feet above the common level of the river; and to lessen the extreme rapidity of the Rhone, the bridge is not built in a right line, but in the form of a curve.

PONT ST. MAXENCE, a town in the depart. of Oise, on the river Oise, 5 m. N of Senlis.

PONT-SUR-SEINE, a town in the depart. of Aube, seated on the river Seine, 4 m. NNE of Nogent-sur-Seine, and 55 SSE of Paris.

PONT-SUR-YONNE, a town in the depart. of Yonne, seated on the river Yonne, 8 m. NNW of Sens.

PONTYPOOL, a town in Monmouths. noted for a manufactory of japanned ware. It is seated on the river Avon, which turns several mills for the working of iron plates, 15 m. SW of Monmouth, and 146 W by N of London. Market on Sat.

PONT-Y-PRIDD. See TAAFE.

PONZA, or PONTIA, a small island on the coast of Naples, in the Gulf of Gaeta, belonging to the duchy of Parma.

POOL, a town of Dorsets. consisting of 1099 houses, mostly built of stone, but low, and 4816 inhab. The harbour here is one of the best in the channel for merchant ships, admitting vessels of 400 tons burden up to the quay, and the ground is everywhere soft. Pool rose first into consequence when the ancient town of Wareham fell to decay. It now ranks pretty high among the English sea-ports, and its trade and population are rapidly increasing. Two hundred and thirty sail of shipping, burden 21,301 tons, and employing about 1500 men, belong to this port. Of these, about 140 ships are employed in the foreign trade, and in the Newfoundland fishery, which is the principal branch of business here, as also to the Baltic, Norway, America, Portugal, Greenland, &c. and the remainder in its fine coasting trade (particularly in corn and coals), and in fishing. The customs, in 1770, amounted to 13,747l. Near the mouth of the harbour is a bank, from which vast quantities of oysters are carried, to be fattened in the creeks of Essex and the Thames. It is situated upon a peninsula, projecting into a capacious bay, called Luxford Lake, or Pool Harbour, which branches into many creeks, and forms several islands, 40 m. WSW of Winchester, 105 SW of London, and 28 from Salisbury. Markets on Mond. and Thurs.

Pool, Devons. in Tiverton parish. Pool, Cornw. in Minhenoit parish. Pool, Yorks. E of Otley. Pool, or Pole-Cains, Wilts, NE of Malmesbury.

Pooton-Lancelot, Chesh. near Eastham.

POOTYA, a town of Bengal, 10 m. SW of Nattore.

POPA MADRE. See MADRE DE POPA.

POPAYAN, a province of Terra Firma, washed on the W by the South Sea, and bounded on the E by New Granada, and, by Quito on the S. It is about 440 m. long, and from 70 to 240 broad. The temperature and soil vary according to the situation of the country, in the plains, or on the sides of the mountains. In some places it is rather cold than hot, and in others the reverse; while at Popayan, the capital, there is a perpetual spring throughout the year. It is more subject, however, to tempests of thunder and lightning than any other of the known parts of America, and frequent damages are done here by earthquakes. In general, the soil produces a great abundance of grain and fruits, and breeds vast numbers of cattle and sheep, some of which are sold in the towns, and others are driven to Quito. Popayan is one of the best trading countries in Terra Firma. It has a transitory commerce with Carthagena, when the galleons arrive there: as also a reciprocal one with Quito, sending thither horned cattle and mules, and receiving cloths and baize in return. Its active commerce consists in dried beef, salted pork, roll tobacco, hog's-lard, rum, cotton, ribbons, and other small wares.

POPAYAN, the capital of the province of the same name, 190 m. NNE of Quito, is the constant residence of the governor, who is always chief magistrate. The magistracy, or corporation, as in all other cities of this country, consists of regidores, who are persons of distinction, with the corregidor at their head; and from them are annually chosen two ordinary alcades, for maintaining order in the city. Popayan is the see of a bishop, and contains several convents and a university. The inhabitants are about 25,000.

POPE, DOMINIONS OF THE, or THE ECCLESIASTICAL STATE, a country of Italy, bounded on the N by the territories of Venice; on the E by the Adriatic; on the SE by the Kingdom of Naples; and on the S and SW by the Mediterranean, Tuscany, and Modena; extending from S W to NE 240 m. and about 60 in its mean breadth. It is divided into the following provinces: the Campagna of Rome; St. Peter's Patrimony; Umbria, or Spoleto; Ancona; Urbino; Romagna; the Bolognese; the Ferrarese; the Orvietan; Sabina; duchy of Castro; county of Castello; and territory of Perugia. Some authors have observed, that considering the pope's dominions generally consist of a fertile and excellent soil; that his harbours, both on the Gulf of Venice and the Mediterranean, are advantageously situated for trade; that he receives considerable sums from Spain, Germany, &c. which might be supposed to be no small ease to his subjects; that his country is visited by foreigners of distinction, who cause much wealth to circulate; the pontifical government seems well calculated for happiness, and the country might be supposed to be very flourishing. But the very reverse of this is the case. The country is ill cultivated, and thin of inhabitants, the Bolognese alone excepted. Trade and manufactures are but little encouraged; and were it not for the fertility of the soil, which furnishes the inhabitants with dates, figs, almonds, olives, and other fruits, which grow spontaneously, the indolence of the inhabitants is such, that they would be absolutely starved. This indolence is not wonderful, since they know, that the more they acquire, the more will be demanded of them. Their numerous holidays are great impediments to the exertions of industry; and the number of young sturdy beggars, who stroll about as pilgrims, instead of increasing the common stock by their industry, lie as a dead weight on their fellow-subjects. Various other causes might be mentioned, as the multitude of hospitals and convents; the inconceivable wealth which lies useless in these convents, and in the churches; the inquisition, and the rigour of the papal government. Hence it is, that in no part of Europe are to be found people more wretched than the pope's subjects. The pope, according to the ancient canon law, is the supreme, universal, and independent head of the church, and invested with sovereignty over all Christian sovereigns, communities, and individuals. His arrogant pretensions are so well known, that it is needless to expatiate upon them. The reformation begun by Luther dispelled the delusion in many parts of Europe; and the progress of learning, and the spirit of free inquiry, has enlightened many even of the Romish countries, where the papal political system is treated with contempt. The origin of this monstrous usurpation, which for ages held the Christian world in the most degrading subjection, belongs more properly to ecclesiastical history. The pope has the title of Holy Father, and Holiness, and he is elected at every vacancy, from among the cardinals, each of whom is styled his Eminence; and their number was fixed by Sixtus V. at 70, but this number is seldom complete. Every nation of the Roman Catholic religion, has a cardinal for its protector. Beside the ecclesiastical state, the pope is possessed of the duchy of Benevento, in the kingdom of Naples, worth about 6000 crowns a year. The annual revenue of the pope is computed to be 8,700,000 scudi, or upwards of 2,000,000l. sterling. This pontiff bears arms, and, as an emblem of his pastoral office, the crozier, or crook, forms a part of the insignia. His military force is inconsiderable. His bodyguard consists of 40 Swiss, 75 cuirassiers, and 75 light horse; and his naval force consists of a few gallies, stationed at Civita Vecchia. Rome is the capital.

POPERINGUE, a town of Flanders, situated on a river of the same name, 6 m. NNW of Ypres, and 17 SE of Dunkirk.

Pope's, Herts, in the parish of Hatfield-Bishop's. Pope's Hall, Kent, near Hartlip. Pope's-Hole, Surry, on the river Wey, in Frensham parish. Popball, Sussex, W of Haslemere. Popham, Hamps. between Basingstoke and Oldstoke. Poplar, Midd. so called from the trees of that name, with which it once abounded, is situated on the Thames, E of Limehouse, in the parish of Stepney. It contains, including Blackwall, upwards of 1400 houses.

POPO, or PAPA, a territory of Guinea, on the Slave Coast, about 8 leagues in extent. The soil is flat and sandy, without either hills or trees, and the inhab. have scarce any houses to dwell in, beside the king's village; which is situated in an island in the midst of a river. Their chief trade is in slaves.

Poppleton, Upper and Nether, Yorks. E of Hesley-Moor. Popsball, Kent, near Coldred.

PORCAH, a town of Travancore, in Hindostan, situated on the coast of Malabar, 75 m. NW of Travancore.

PORCO, a town and jurisdiction of La Plata, in S. America, situated on the W of Potosi, and extending about 20 leag. Here is the mountain of Porco, from whose mine the Yncas extracted all the silver for their expenses and ornaments; it was accordingly the first worked by the Spaniards after the conquest. It is about 25 leag. distant from the city of La Plata.

Poringland, Great and Little, 4 m. S of Norwich. Porkellys, Cornw. W of Penryn. Porkington, Shrops. NW of Oswestry. Pork, Old, Durh. N of Bishop-Aukland. Porkthorp, Yorks. W of Kilham. Porlait, or Porloyd, a river in Caernarvons.

PORLOCK, a town in Somersets. with a quay and small pier, and a few vessels usually employed in fetching coals and lime from Wales. In the centre of the bay is a decoy for catching wild-fowl. It is seated on the Bristol channel, at the bottom of a commodious bay, 14 m. N by W of Dulverton, and 167 W of London. At present there are only three markets in a year, viz. on Thurs. before May 12th, Thurs. before Oct. 9th, and Thurs. before Nov. 12th; but formerly a market was held here weekly.

PORRENTRUI, a neat and populous town of Germany, in the circle of the Upper Rhine, capital of the dominions of the bishop of Basle, and the principal place of his residence. The episcopal palace (which has been lately repaired and augmented) stands upon an eminence overlooking the town. It is 22 m. SW of Basle.

PORSELON, or PORSELOUC, a rich and commercial town of Siam, surrounded with bastions, constructed by some French engineers. It is situated on a large river, which runs into the Gulf of Siam. Lat. 17 48 N and lon. 100 49 E.

Porston, Dorsets. between Cerne Abbey and Dorchester.

Port, in Donegal, Ulster.

PORTADOWN, a town in Armagh, Ulster, where the linen manufacture is carried on pretty extensively. It is pleasantly situated on the river Bann, into which the canal of Newry falls within a mile of this place, 65 m. from Dublin.

Port Aethwy, Anglesea, the most general ferry into the island, where there is annually a passage of cattle of from 12 to about 15,000 heads, exclusive of multitudes of sheep and hogs. The remaining stock of cattle in the island is computed at 30,000. In 1770, upwards of 90,000 bushels of corn were exported from this ferry.

PORTAFERRY, a town of Down, in Ulster. Heretofore a pretty brisk trade was carried on in this place, and between 30 and 40 vessels belonged to its port. From the high lands about Portaferry there are very fine prospects over the whole lake of Strangford, the circumjacent country, the sea, and the Isle of Man. It is seated on the rapid ferry of Strangford, 80 m. from Dublin.

PORTALEGRE, a town of Alentejo, 30 m. NNW of Elvas, and 90 NNE of Lisbon.

PORTARLINGTON, a town partly in King's and partly in Queen's County, Leinster, pleasantly seated on the river Barrow, 36 m. SW of Dublin.

PORT-AU-PRINCE, a sea-port of St. Domingo, situated on the W coast, in a country producing cotton, indigo, sugar, and coffee. It was taken by the English in 1794. Lat. 18 40 N lon. 72 10 W.

NW of Modbury. Portgate, Northumb. NE of Hexham.

PORT GLASGOW. See GLASGOW PORT.

Port-Glenone, in Antrim, Ulster, 105 m. from Dublin. It is pleasantly seated on the river Bann, over which there is a bridge at the end of the town, which unites the counties of Antrim and Derry.

Porthilly, Cornwall, a fishing harbour on the E side of Padstow-Haven. Between this and Portkern there is a great cave under a mountainous rock, through which, it is said, the sea ebbs and flows near half a mile in length. Porthilly, Cornw. at the mouth of Trewardreth Bay.

PORT HUNTER BAY, a bay in the Duke of York's Island.

PORTICI, a town and royal palace of Lavora, in Naples, 2 m. E of the capital, in a charming situation on the sea-side. It is enriched with a vast number of fine statues, and other remains of antiquity, taken out of the ruins of Herculaneum and Pompeia.

Portington, Yorks. NE of Howden. Portinsbal, Cumberl. in the parish of Kirkbridge. Portisham, Dorsets. 1½ m. from Abbotsbury. Portisbead, Somersets. 9 m. from Bristol. Portissick Haven, Cornw. NE of Padstow Haven. Portkern, or Portquin, Cornw. a fishing-cove, E of Portissick.

PORTLAND, a peninsula in Dorsets. 3 m. S of Weymouth, nearly 7 m. round, and exceedingly strong both by nature and art. It is surrounded by inaccessible rocks, except at the landing-place, where there is a strong castle, called Portland Castle, built by King Henry VIII. There is but one church in the island, and that stands so near the sea, that it is often in danger from it. The whole peninsula is little more than one continued rock of white free-stone, about 9000 tons of which are exported annually. It was first brought into repute in the reign of James I. and is now used in London, Dublin, and other places, for building the finest structures. The inhab. are about 1300.

PORTLAND, a sea-port of N. America, capital of Cumberland county, in the province of Main. It is seated on a peninsula, on which formerly stood part of Falmouth, and has an excellent harbour.

PORTLAND ISLANDS, a cluster of islands in the South Pacific Ocean. They are low, and covered with wood; the centre one in lat. 2 38 S lon. 149 8 E.

PORT LOUIS, a town in the depart. of Morbihan, with a good harbour, which is a station for part of the navy, and the East-India Company's ships belonging to France. It is seated at the mouth of the river Blavet, 3 m. S of L'Orient.

PORT LOUIS, a French fortress on the SW coast of St. Domingo; and a sea-port on the W coast of Guadaloupe.

PORT LOUIS. See FRANCE, ISLE OF.

Portluny, Cornwall, E of Gwindreth Bay.

PORT-MAHON, a sea-port town on the SE coast of the island of Minorca, built originally by Mago, the Carthaginian. The town is not large, but commercial and rich, with narrow unpaved streets; and the harbour, &c. is one of the best in the Mediterranean. Lat. 39 52 N lon. 4 30 E.

Port-Ninian, one of the Copland Isles, in Down, Ulster.

PORTO. See OPORTO.

PORTO-BELLO, a sea-port town of Panama, with houses mostly built of wood, but, in some, the first story is of stone, and the remainder of wood. It is a very unhealthy place, and is inhabited chiefly by mulattoes. It consists of one principal street, with others crossing it; it has also two squares, a great church, and two convents. At the time of the great fair, however, it is one of the most populous places in the world, the merchants often paying a thousand crowns for lodging in a middling chamber, with a closet during the fair, and four, five, or six thousand, for a lodging in larger houses. Columbus discovered the harbour in 1502, and from its extent, depth, and security, named it Porto-Bello, or the Fair Harbour. Its mouth is well defended by Fort St. Philip, or Iron Castle; and nearer the town is another large castle and a small fort. All these were partly demolished, and the town was taken by Admiral Vernon, with only six ships of war, in 1739. It is situated on the northern coast of the isthmus of Darien, 60 m. N of Panama. Lat. 9 32 N lon. 79 43 W.

Portobello, a small village, 3 m. SE of Edinburgh.

PORTO-CAVALLO, a sea-port of Terra Firma, on the Caraccas coast. Lon. 64 30 W.

PORTO-FARINA, a sea-port of Tunis, 30 m. N of Tunis.

PORTO-FERRAIO, a very strong sea-port town of the Isle of Elba, with a good citadel. It is seated on a long, high, steep point of land, to the W of the bay of the same name, which is defended by two forts. Lat. 42 53 N lon. 10 38 E.

PORTO-GALLETO, a sea-port of Spain, in the Bay of Biscay, 8 m. N of Bilboa.

PORTO-GRUARO, a town of Friuli, 15 m. W of Marano.

Portskewet, Monmouths. SE of Chepstow.

PORTO-LONGONE, a small but strong sea-port town, on the SE coast of the Isle of Elba, with a good harbour, and a fortress built upon a rock, almost inaccessible. It is 2 m. SE of Porto-Ferrajo.

Porton, Wilts. between Newton-Tony and Salisbury. Porton, N. and S. Dorsets. near Poorstock.

PORTO-PEDRO, a sea-port of Majorca.

PORTO-PRAYA, a town on the E side of St. Jago, one of the Cape de Verd islands, situated on a sharp rock, in a bay of the same name. Here is a good harbour, seldom destitute of a considerable number of foreign shipping. The outward bound Guinea and India ships, whether English, French, or Dutch, generally touch here for water and refreshments, but few of them call on their return to Europe. While the mariners and passengers are on shore, the whole coast resembles a fair, every place being filled with hogs, bullocks, fowls, goats, figs, plantains, and cocoa-nuts, which the natives exchange for shirts, drawers, handkerchiefs, breeches, hats, waistcoats, and all manner of clothing. There is a fort on the summit of a hill, that entirely commands the harbour, which, were it properly mounted with cannon, and sufficiently garrisoned, would be a place of great strength. Lat. 14 54 N lon. 23 37 W.

PORTO RICO. See JUAN-DE-PUERTO-RICO.

PORTO-SANTO, an island of the Atlantic, on the coast of Africa, the least of the Madeiras, not much exceeding 5 leag. in compass. It produces wheat and corn in abundance; it also breeds oxen, wild hogs, and rabbits in incredible numbers. The most valuable articles of commerce, however, are the gum, called dragon's blood, honey, wax, and fish. It has one good harbour, and good mooring in a bay, where ships going or returning from India, stop to refit and refresh, which, indeed, is all the trade the inhabitants enjoy. Lat. 32 58 N lon. 16 20 W.

PORTO-SEGURO, a government on the coast of Brazil, in the jurisdiction of Bahia. It is a fertile country, and the capital of the same name is built on the top of a rock, at the mouth of a river, with a safe and convenient harbour. Lat. 16 45 S.

PORTO-VECCHIO, a sea-port in a bay on the E coast of Corsica, 40 m. N of Sardinia. Lat. 41 42 N.

PORTO-VENERO, a sea-port of Genoa.

PORT-PATRICK, a sea-port of Scotland, in Wigtonshire, confined by the sea on one side, and on the other by overhanging rocks and hills. Formerly the harbour was a mere inlet between two ridges of rocks, which ran into the sea, and was only fit for receiving flat-bottomed boats; but now there is one of the finest quays in Britain erected here, with a reflecting lighthouse, and above a dozen trading vessels, of from 40 to 60 tons burden, sail and return regularly. A number of vessels also come occasionally from other ports. It is much noted for its ferry to Donaghadee, in Ireland, from which it is about 20 m. distant. It is computed that 11,000 head of cattle, and 2000 horses, are annually imported from Ireland to this place. Here are four elegant packet-boats for the conveyance of the mail, and the accommodation of passengers; and the mail-coaches now go regularly from London and Edinburgh to Port-Patrick on the one side, and between Dublin and Donaghadee on the other, only 21 m. The imports and exports have greatly increased of late years. The population of the parish amounts to 1100. On the brink of a tremendous precipice stands the castle of Dunskey, seat of Sir David Hunter Blair. It is 107 m. SW of Edinburgh, and 487 NW of London.

Port-Raman, situated in one of the Copper Islands, in Down, Ulster.

PORTREE, a town on the Island of Skye, one of the Scotch Hebrides, contains 420 houses. The inhab. trade chiefly in black cattle, small horses, and kelp.

Port Renard, in Limerick, Munster.

PORT-ROYAL, a sea-port of Jamaica. It was once one of the finest and most flourishing sea-port towns in America, abounding in riches and trade, but on June 9, 1692, it was destroyed by a dreadful earthquake, which seemed to shake the very foundations of the island, and which buried nine-tenths of the town, 8 fathoms, under water; in 1702, it was laid in ashes by a terrible fire; in 1722, it was reduced to a heap of rubbish, by one of the most dreadful hurricanes and inundations of the sea ever known; and, in 1744, it again suffered greatly by a hurricane. Warned by these extraordinary calamities, which seemed to mark out this place as a spot devoted to destruction, the custom-house and public offices were removed by an act of assembly, and no market suffered to be held here for the future. It contains, at present, about 200 houses laid out in 3 handsome streets, with several cross lanes, a fine church, a navy-yard, an hospital, and barracks for a regiment of soldiers. It is built on a small neck of land, which juts out several miles into the sea, and is defended by a strong fort, kept in good repair, which has a line of near 100 pieces of cannon.

The harbour is one of the best in the world, and 1000 ships may ride therein, secure from every wind that can blow. It is 6 m. SE of Spanish Town, and as much by water, but 20 by land, SW of Kingston. Lat. 18 0 N lon. 76 49 W.

PORT-ROYAL, an island on the coast of South Carolina, the space between which and the neighbouring continent, forms one of the most commodious harbours in those parts. It is 12 m. in length, and 5 in breadth. The town on the N shore is called Beaufort. Lat. 32 24 N lon. 80, 10 W.

PORT-ROYAL, in Nova-Scotia. See ANNAPOLIS.

PORT-SANDWICH, a harbour in the island of Mallicollo, in the South Sea.

Port St. Ann, in Down, Ulster.

PORT ST. MARY'S, a sea-port of Spain, in Andalusia. The English made a descent here in 1702, with a design to besiege Cadiz, but without success. It is 10 m. NE of Cadiz.

Portsdown, Hants, 4 m. from Portsmouth, remarkable for an extensive hill and a large fair on the 15th of June.

PORTSEA, an island of Hants, about 14 m. in circuit, between Portsmouth Harbour and Langstone Harbour. It is a low tract, separated from the main land by a shallow creek, over which is a bridge. At the SW extremity of it is situated the town of Portsmouth; adjoining to which is the town of Portsea, built on Portsmouth Common, on condition, that if the enemy should land, the houses were to be thrown down without compensation to the owners. The town and parish of Portsea contains 5000 houses.

Portsham, Dorsets. 2 m. from Abbotsbury.

Portsholm, or Portmead, near Huntingdon, encompassed with the Ouse.

Portslade, Sussex, 1 m. E of New Shoreham.

Port-Slaty, situated in one of the Copland Islands, in Down, Ulster.

PORTSMOUTH, a sea-port and borough town of Hamps. situated on the Island of Portsea. It was anciently defended by a wall of timber, covered with earth; a bastion to the NE; and two forts of hewn stone at the mouth of the harbour, begun by Edward IV. and augmented by Henry VII. Queen Elizabeth fortified it with new works. King Charles II. directed great alterations, established new wet and dry docks, storehouses, rope-yards, &c. and raised several forts after the modern manner; which works were augmented in the reigh of James II. Succeeding princes have made great additions since to their strength, extent, and magnificence, so that it is now justly considered as the most regular fortress in Britain. Within these few years, government has bought more ground for additional works, and it may be made impregnable by land as well as sea, since a shallow water may be brought quite round it. The least number of men employed continually in the yard is 1000. The principal machinery of the yard, particularly that for making blocks, consists of steam engines on a more extensive scale. The docks and yards resemble distinct towns, &c. under a government separate from the garrison. Here is also a fine arsenal for laying up the cannon. The harbour is one of the finest in the world, as there is water sufficient for the largest ships; and it is so very capacious, that the whole English navy may ride here in safety. The principal branch runs up to Fareham; a second to Portchester; and a third to Portsea bridge. Besides these branches, there are several rithes, or channels, where the small men of war ride at their moorings. Opposite the town is the spacious road of Spithead, where the men of war anchor when prepared for actual service. It has one church and two chapels, one in the garrison, and one in a part of the town, called the Common, for the use of the dock. About a mile S, near the sea, is South Sea Castle. In Langston harbour are the Hulks, having about 2000 convicts on board. It is 20 m. SE of Winchester, and 72 SW of London. Lat. 50 47 N lon. 1 1 W. Markets on Tues. Thurs. and Satur.

PORTSMOUTH, a town of N. America, the largest in the state of New Hampshire, situated at the mouth of Piscataqua River. Its harbour, which is one of the finest on the continent, is well defended by nature, both against storms and an enemy, and it has a light-house at the entrance. Also a town in Virginia, a town in North Carolina, and a sea-port town on the W coast of the island of Dominica, near the northern extremity.

PORTSOY, a handsome sea-port of Banffsh. about 6 m. N of Cullen, and 7 from Banff. It has several fishing and trading vessels, with some manufactures of snuff and sewing thread.

PORTUGAL, the most western country of Europe, about 400 m. in length, and 130 in its mean breadth, bounded on the W and S by the Atlantic Ocean, and on the E and N by Spain. Though Spain and Portugal are in the same climate, yet the air of the latter is much more temperate than that of the former, on account of the neighbourhood of the sea. Corn is not very plentiful in this country, because the inhab. do not attend much to husbandry; for this reason, they import Indian corn from Africa, which is made use of by the peasants here instead of wheat. There is a great number of barren mountains; and yet they have plenty of olives, vineyards, oranges, lemons, nuts, almonds, figs, and raisins. They have some horned cattle, whose flesh is generally lean and dry. They also make a great deal of salt with the sea-water, especially in the Bay of St. Ubes, whence a great deal is exported. The Portuguese shipping little frequent the other countries of Europe or the Levant, their voyages lying rather to Brasil, and their different colonies on the coast of Africa, from which last they chiefly import negroes, gold, and ivory. They receive from their foreign settlements sugar, tobacco, rum, cotton, indigo, hides, Brasil and other woods for dying, and many excellent drugs. Beside these, they import gold and silver, with diamonds and other precious stones from America. The annual produce of gold in Brasil, may be estimated, without exaggeration, at near two millions sterling. The fleet which goes every year to Brasil, generally sails and returns in 7 or 8 months. They trade likewise to their East-India settlements of Goa, Diu, and Macao; but this traffic, once so important and considerable, is now greatly declined. The horses of Portugal were formerly in great esteem, but the inhab. are now so fond of mules, that horses are scarce. Towards the frontiers of Spain there are mountains in which they formerly got gold and silver; and the river Tajo was anciently noted for its golden sands; but now the Portuguese do not think them worth minding. There are also mines of iron, tin, lead, with some quarries of marble. The principal rivers are the Tajo, the Douro, the Guadiana, the Minho, the Mondego, and the Lima. Portugal is divided into six provinces, namely, Estramadura, Beira, Entre Minho e Douro, Tralos-Montes, Alentejo, and Algarva. The government is monarchical; but the royal authority is bounded by the fundamental laws of the kingdom; for the sovereign cannot raise any more taxes than were settled in 1674. Portugal was anciently called Lusitania; but by a writing now extant, dated 1069, it appears that the name of Portugal was then used for the whole kingdom. It is probably derived from a town on the river Douro, anciently called Cale, opposite to which the inhab. afterwards built another town, naming it Portucale, now the flourishing city of Oporto. In Portugal are about 900 convents, mostly very rich; it also contains one patriarch, three archbishops, and ten bishops, besides others in America, Africa, the East Indies, &c. The Portuguese are indolent, and so fond of luxury, that they mostly spend their wealth in the purchase of foreign merchandise. Lisbon is the capital.

Portumna, in Galway, Connaught, 74 m. from Dublin, seated on the river Shannon, where it falls into Lough Derg.

PORTWILLIAM, in the parish of Mockrum, Wigton, Scotland.

POTOSI, a town of S. America, in the jurisdiction of La Plata, and government of Buenos Ayres, containing about 60,000 Indians, and 10,000 Spaniards, many of whom are possessed of immense fortunes. There is the best silver mine in all America, in a mountain in form of a sugar loaf, the colour of whose soil is of a reddish brown. Silver has been as common in this place as iron is in Europe; however, it is almost exhausted; and the mountain itself is said to be little better than a shell. The country about this place is so naked and barren, that they are obliged to get their provisions from the neighbouring provinces. It appears from the public accounts, that silver to the value of 9,282,382l. sterling, has been annually taken from these mines. Here is always a great demand for European goods. It is seated at the bottom of the mountain of Potosi, 170 m. SSE of La Paz.

PRAGILAS, a town of Piedmont.

PRAGUE, a city of Germany, in the circle of Schlan, capital of the kingdom of Bohemia. It comprehends three towns, the Old, the New, and the Little Town, and is about 15 m. in circumf. being built upon seven mountains. Here are 92 churches and chapels, with about 40 cloisters. The inhab. are estimated at 83,000, of whom about 12,000 are Jews. The river Moldaw, or Muldaw, runs through the town, and separates the Old from the New. There is a handsome bridge of 18 arches over it, built with freestone, 1770 feet in length, and 35 in breadth, having a strong tower at each end. The Old Town is very populous, the houses are wholly built of stone, for the most part, three stories high, and the streets, in general, narrow. There are two large structures, one of which is the old palace, where the ancient kings resided. The finest ornament of this part is the university, frequented by a great number of students. The Jesuits had a magnificent college here; and it is here the Jews reside, where they have 9 synagogues. The New Town surrounds the Old, and contains fine structures, handsome gardens, and large streets. The little town was built on the spot where there was a forest; and there is a poplar-tree yet standing, which they affirm has grown there about 1000 years. The principal buildings are the Royal Castle, the Radshin, and the Straw-house. The first of which contains a hall, 100 paces long, and 40 broad, without any pillar to support the roof. The country around it is fertile and pleasant. Prague was taken by storm, by the French, under Marshals Belleisle and Broglio, in 1741, but they were soon cooped up by the Austrian forces, and after enduring great hardships from famine, and making a brave defence, they partly found means to escape, and partly obtained a free retreat. In 1744, the Prussians made themselves masters of this capital, but quitted it again the same year. They besieged it again in 1757, but without success. It is 75 m. SSE of Dresden, 158 SSE of Berlin, and 235 NNW of Vienna. Lat. 50 5 N lon. 14 50 E.

PRINCE OF WALES, CAPE, the most western extremity of all America. Lat. 65 46 N lon. 168 5 W.

PRINCE OF WALES'S ISLANDS, a congeries of islands, supposed to extend from New Holland to New Guinea. They were discovered by Captain Cook.

PRINCE'S ISLAND, an island on the W coast of Africa, 90 m. in circumf. discovered in 1471. The air is wholesome and the land fertile in the various tropical productions. On the N coast is a town, containing about 200 houses, and a good harbour. It is subject to Portugal. Lat. 1 49 N lon. 6 40 E.

PRINCE'S ISLAND, a small island in the Straits of Sunda, near the NW extremity of the Island of Java. It is very woody, and not much cleared. The inhabitants are Javanese, whose rajah is subject to the sultan of Bantam; and their customs are similar to those of the natives about Batavia. It is visited by European ships for wood, water, and turtle, which latter is got here in great abundance. The best anchoring place is in lat. 6 41 S lon. 105 17 E.

Princethorp, Warwicks. 2 m. S of Wolston, near Dunsmore Heath.

PRINCETON, a village in the state of New Jersey, noted for a large college, a handsome stone edifice, founded in 1738, and called Nassau Hall. It is 52 m. from New York, and 43 from Philadelphia.

PRINCE WILLIAM HENRY'S ISLAND, an island in the Eastern Indian Ocean, lying WNW of Tench's Island. It is pretty high, and seems to be about 70 m. in circuit. It is well wooded, and there were a number of clear cultivated tracts, on which something was growing that had the appearance of Indian corn, or sugar-cane. Several large and well-constructed houses were seen among the trees. This island has a luxuriant and picturesque appearance, and is supposed to be fertile and well peopled. The natives were quite naked, and seem to be the same sort of people as those of the Tench's Island, and their canoes of the same construction. It was discovered by Captains Ball and King, in 1790. A high mountain, rising in the centre of it, was called Mount Philip. Lat. 1 32 S lon. 149 30 E.

PRINCE WILLIAM HENRY'S ISLAND, an island of the S Pacific Ocean, discovered by Captain Wallis, in 1767. Lat. 19 0 S lon. 141 6 W.

PRINCE WILLIAM'S SOUND, an inlet on the NW coast of America, discovered by Capt. Cook, in 1778. The men, women, and children, are here all clothed alike. Their ordinary dress is a sort of close robe, which sometimes reaches only to the knees, but generally down to the ancles. They are composed of the skins of various animals, and are commonly worn with the hairy side outward. The men often paint their faces of a black colour, and of a bright red, and sometimes of a blueish or leaden hue; but not in any regular figure. The women puncture or stain the chin with black, that comes to a point in each of their cheeks. Their canoes are of two sorts; the one large and open, the other small and covered. The framing consists of slender pieces of wood, and the outside is composed of the skins of seals, or other sea animals, stretched over the wood. Their weapons, and implements for hunting and fishing, are the same as those used by the Esquimaux. Our knowledge of the animals of this part of the continent is entirely derived from the skins that were brought by the natives for sale. These were principally of bears, common and pine martins, sea-otters, seals, racoons, small ermines, foxes, and the whitish cat, or lynx. The birds found here were the halcyon, or great king-fisher, which had fine black colours; the white-headed eagle; the humming-bird; geese, small ducks, and black sea-pyes, with red bills, like those they had seen at Van Diemen's Land and New Zealand. Few vegetables of any kind were observed here; and the trees, that chiefly grew about the Sound, were the Canadian spruce pine, some of which are of considerable size. Lat. 60 to 61 N lon. 147 0 W.

PRINCE EDWARD'S ISLANDS, two islands in the Indian Sea, discovered in 1772 by Du Fresne and Crozet, French navigators; the most northerly is 27 m. in circumf. and the southernmost about 45 m. Lat. 46 50 lon. 38.

PRINCIPATO CITRA, a province of Naples, bounded on the N by Lavora and Principato Ultra; on the E by Basilicata; and on the S and W by the Mediterranean; about 65 m. in length, and from 12 to 30 in breadth. The soil is fertile in wine, corn, oil, saffron, and silk; and they have several mineral springs. The principal towns are Salerno, Amalsi, and Sorrento.

PRINCIPATO ULTRA, a province of Naples, bounded on the N by Lavora and Moliso; on the E by Basilicata and Capitanata; on the S by Principato Citra; and on the W by Lavora; about 50 m. in extent from E to W, and 30 from N to S. The principal towns are Benevento, Avelino, and Conza.

PROVENCE, a ci-devant province of France, on the Mediterranean, having Piedmont on the E, and the Rhone, and the country of Venaissin, on the W. The air is very different; for near the Alps it is cold, on the sea-coast hot, and in the middle temperate. In that which was called Upper Provence, the soil is fertile in corn and pastures: but in the lower it is dry and sandy. It produces, however, wine, oil, figs, almonds, prunes, and pomegranates, especially along the sea-coast from Toulon to Nice. There are orange and citron trees in the open fields; and many medicinal plants, mineral waters, and mines of several kinds. It now forms the departs. of Var, the Lower Alps, and the Mouths of the Rhone.

PROVIDENCE, the most flourishing town in the state of Rhode Island, has a considerable manufactory of cloth, and a large foreign and domestic trade. It contains 700 houses, and upwards of 4300 inhab. Here is a noble college, called Rhode Island College; also an elegant church for the Baptists; two for the Congregationalists; with others for other denominations. Providence is seated on both sides of the river of the same name, about 36 m. SW of Boston.

PROVIDENCE, a river of N. America, which rises in Massachusetts, and falls into Bristol Bay, a little below the town of Providence, in Rhode Island.

PROVIDENCE, one of the Bahama Islands, in the Atlantic Ocean, the second in point of size, but the best and most improved of those that are planted by the English. They import provisions from Carolina, which they lay up in store-houses, for the use of such ships as put in here. The island produces peas, Indian wheat, salt, and Brasilette wood: and fish of various kinds are found in the greatest plenty on the coast. It is about 30 m. in length, and 8 in breadth. Lat. 25 2 N lon. 77 20 W.

PROVIDENCE, a small island in the Atlantic Ocean, which the English buccaneers formerly fortified, and defended against the Spanish guarda-costas. It is about 150 m. E of the Musquito shore. Lat. 13 25 N lon. 80 44 W.

PROVINS, a town in the depart. of Seine and Marne, famous for its mineral waters, and excellent conserves of roses. It was of note in the time of Charlemagne; but though large, it is not populous. It is 47 m. SE of Paris.

PRUCK, a town of Stiria.

Pruddo Castle, Northumb. near the Tyne, 8 m. W of Newcastle. Prumsted, Norf. NW of Hickling.

PRUSSIA, a large country of Europe, bounded on the N by the Baltic and Samogitia, on the E by Lithuania, on the S by Poland, and on the W by Pomerelia; about 180 m. in length, and near 100 in breadth, where broadest. It is a very fertile country, producing a great deal of flax, hemp, and corn; and the sea, rivers, and lakes, supply them with great plenty of fish. Prussia also abounds with flocks and herds, and fine horses. Its chief commodities are wool, honey, wax, pitch, pit-coal, hops, and buckwheat. Here is plenty of game, as white and common hares, elks, deer, roebucks, and wild boars; but the forests are, at the same time, infested with lynxes, wolves, foxes, bears, wild asses, and uri, a species of buffalo. The hides of these last, which are extremely thick and strong, are sold to foreigners at a great price. Here is neither salt, wine, nor minerals, but yellow amber (for the sake of procuring which the Romans penetrated into and subdued this country), is found in great quantities on the Samland shore. There are several large lakes, besides the rivers Vistula, Pregel, Memel, &c. About 4 months of the year are temperate, warm, and pleasant; but the autumns are often wet, and the air in winter is cold, piercing, and severe. The manufactures in glass, linen, cloth, metals, &c. are rapidly increasing. The inhab. are a mixture of native Prussians (who appear to be genuine Germans), Lithuanians, and Poles. The Teutonic order had sovereignty in Prussia about 300 years; after which Prussia was added to the dominion of the electoral house of Brandenburg, and in 1704 it was raised to a kingdom, by the Elector Frederick, who, with his own hands, put the crown on his head, and on that of his consort, at Konigsberg. Prussia is divided into three parts, Samland, Natangen, and Oberland. Konigsberg is the capital.

PRUTH, a river which rises in Red Russia, in the Carpathian mountains, or in the SW part of the new kingdom of Galicia, crosses part of Lemburg, afterward runs through all Moldavia, and falls into the Danube near Renay in Bessarabia.

PRZEMISLAU. See PREMESLAW.

PRZEMYSL, a town of Lemburg, Poland, 37 m. W of Lemburg.

PSKOF, or PLESKOF, a government and large town of Russia. The government, once a republic, was formerly included in that of Novogorod. The town is seated on the river Velika, at the extremity of the Lake Piepus, 80 m. S of Narva, and 136 SSW of Petersburgh.

Publow, Somersets. NE of Pensford. Puckeridge, Herts, N of Ware. Puckington, Somersets. NE of Ilminster. Pucklechurch, Glouc. 7 m. E of Bristol. It was once the residence of some of the West Saxon kings, of whose great buildings some ruins are yet visible. Here king Edmund was stabbed with a dagger by an outlawed robber. Puckston, Somersets. W of Wrinton.

PUDDAR, or PADDAR, a river of Hindostan, which rises in the SE part of Agimere, and dividing the provinces of Cutch and Guzerat, falls into the Gulf of Cutch, 30 m. S of Janagur.

PUEBLA-DE-LOS-ANGELOS, a town of Mexico, capital of the province of Tlascala, 60 m. ESE of Mexico.

PUEBLO NUEVO, a town of Veragua, seated on a bay of the S Sea, 200 m. S by W of Panama.

PUENTE-DEL-REYNA, a town of Navarre, in Spain, 9 m. SSW of Pampeluna.

PUENTE-DE-ARCOBISPO, a town of New Castile, seated on the river Tajo, 50 m. WSW of Toledo.

PUERTO BELLO, PUERTO RICO, &c. See PORTO BELLO, PORTO RICO, &c.; and for all names which, in the Spanish language, signify a port, see PORTO; for although that word is not Spanish, but Italian, the English have adopted it both in writing and pronunciation.

PUFFIN ISLAND, on the coast of Kerry, in Munster, 4 m. S of Brea-Head, is steep and craggy, and has a remarkable opening or gap in its highest part. It is much frequented by the fowl called puffins, and is well stocked with rabbits.

PUGLIA, LA, the modern name of the ancient Apulia, containing the three provinces of Capitanata, Bari, and Otranto, on the N and NE side of the kingdom of Naples.

PULAON, an island in the Indian Sea, W of the Philippines. Lat. 9 30 N lon. 129 12 E.

Pulborough, Sussex, NE of Hardham. Pulford, S of Chester, on the river Alen. Pulham, E. and W. Dorsets. NE of Buckland Abbas. Pulham, St. Mary, Norf. N of Harleston. Pull, Somersets. near Sedgemore. Pullox-Hill, Bedfords. near Silsoe. Pully, S of Shrewsbury.

PULO CANTON, an island of Cochin China, in lat. 15 10 N lon. 109 35 E.

PULORE CONDORE. See CONDORE.

PULO DINNING, a small Dutch E. India island, near the peninsula of Malacca.

PULO TIMOAN, a pretty large island on the E coast of Malacca. It is mountainous and woody, but produces rice, and the cabbage and cocoa-nut trees, in great plenty. Ships often touch here for taking in wood, water, and other refreshments, and there is great plenty of green turtles. Commodore Byron landed here, in 1765. Lat. 3 12 N lon. 104 25 E.

PULO WAY, an island near Sumatra, peopled by men banished from Achen, from which it is distant about 9 leagues. Lat. 5 50 N lon. 95 39 E.

Pulsath, Cornwall, SW of Jacobstow.

Pulters, Herts, near Hinxworth. Pulton, Gloucesters. N of Cricklade.

PULTOWA, or POLTOWA, an indifferently built town of Russia, in the government of Ecaterinoslav, rendered famous by the decisive battle which was fought here, in 1709, between the Czar Peter I. and Charles XII. king of Sweden, wherein the latter was totally defeated, wounded, and obliged to fly into Turkey: 8000 men were left dead on the field, and the remaining 16,000 compelled to surrender at discretion. It is 100 m. SW of Belgorod. Lat. 49 26 N lon. 34 25 E.

PULTUSH, a town of Masovia, in Poland, 20 m. NE of Warsaw.

Pulweston, Northumb. near Wark-Castle.

PUNA, an island in the South Sea, about 60 m. in circumf. and containing about 300 inhab. chiefly Casts and Spaniards. Its only town, which is of the same name, and consists of about 50 houses, under a lieutenant and a priest, is situated on the NE coast, at the head of a harbour, where there is very good anchorage for large ships. This island lies at the entrance of the Bay of Guaiaquil, 90 m. N of Paira. Lat. 3 17 S lon. 81 6 W.

Punchardin, Devons. NW of Barnstaple. Punchin End, Herts, between Hemsted and Berkhamstead. Punknoll, Dorsets. in Portisham parish. Punknor, Dorsets. by Abbotsbury. Punsburn, Herts, in Hatfield parish, near Cheshunt Common. Punsonby, or Ponsonby, Cumb. between Egremont and Ravenglass.

PUNTA-DEL-GUDA, the capital town of St. Michael, one of the Azores, with a harbour and citadel.

PURBECK, ISLE OF, a healthy tract of Dorsets. with a deep clay soil, to the S of Pool Bay, about 10 m. long, and 6 over. It is nearly insulated by the sea, the river Frome, and Luxford Lake, and has been long famous for its stone, which is in great demand, for both paving and building. The principal quarries lie at its eastern extremity, near Swanwick, whence the stone is exported. It is of the calcareous kind, distinguished into numerous sorts, the finest of which take a polish, and deserve the name of marble. These are nearly black; and some abound in shells, and are used for chimney-pieces, hearths, &c. Tobacco-pipe clay is dug up in several parts of this island; the finest is near Corfe-Castle, of which much is exported, particularly for the Staffordshire potteries. Purbeck contains 2 hundreds, 1 town, and 9 parishes.

Purbright, Surry, in Woking parish. Purfleet, Essex, on the Thames, 19 m. from London; has some very extensive lime-works; also a considerable public magazine for gunpowder, which is deposited in several detached buildings, that are all bomb proof. Purford, Surry, near Byfleet and Newark, by the river Wey. In this parish is a lake, 2 m. about, called Sheer Water Lake. Purland, Somersets. near Hestercomb. Purleigh, Essex, N of Cold Norton. Purley, Berks, NW of Reading.

PURRYSBURG, a town of S. Carolina, seated on the river Savannah, 64 m. WSW of Charleston: built and peopled by a colony of Swiss from Neufchatel, under the conduct of Monsieur Purry.

Purser's-Cross, Middlesex, in Fulham parish. Pursloow, Shrops. near Clunbury. Purston, Great, and Little, Yorks. NW of Pontefract. Purton, Purton-Hill, and Purton-Stoke, Wilts. near Cricklade and Wootton-Basset. Pusey, Berks. E of Farringdon.

PUTALA, or PUTOLI, a mountain of Great Thibet. See LASSA.

PUY, LE, a populous town in the depart. of Upper Loire, seated on the mountain Anis, near the river Loire, 40 m. NNE of Mende. It has manufactures of lace and silk stuffs.

PUY CERDA, a considerable town of Spain, in Catalonia, capital of Cerdagne. It is 45 m. NW of Girona.

PUY-DE-DOME, a depart. of France, part of the late Auvergne, and comprising almost all Limagne, a territory about 14 leagues long, by 6 broad, one of the most pleasant and fertile in France; in which are seen under the same point of view, orchards, meadows, vineyards, and arable land, in a word, every kind of cultivation imaginable. Clermont is the capital.

PUY-EN-ANJOU, a town in the depart. of Maine and Loire, 10 m. SW of Saumur, and 160 SW of Paris.

PUY-LAURENS, a town in the depart. of Tarn, 8 m. SW of Castres, and 23 E of Toulouse.

PUY-L'EVESQUE, a town in the depart. of Lot, France, near Cahors.

PUZZOLI, a celebrated, but now inconsiderable town of Italy, situated on the bay of Naples. The temple of Jupiter Serapis in this town is accounted a very interesting monument of antiquity; being quite different from the Roman and Greek temples, and built in the manner of the Asiatics: "probably," says Dr. Moore, "by the Egyptian and Asiatic merchants settled at Puzzoli, which was the great emporium of Italy, till the Romans built Ostia and Antium." The ruins of Cicero's villa near this place, are of such extent, as to give a high idea of the wealth of this great orator.

PWLLHELLY, a large town in the S part of Caernarvons. seated on the sea-side between two rivers, 6 m. E of Newin, and 243 NW of London. Market on Wedn.

Pyddington, Northamptons. NW of Oulney. Pyeden, Northumberl, in Mitford manor.

Pyle, a river of Monmouths. which runs into the Olwy, 2 m. NE of Usk. Pyle, Chesh. in Delamere Forest. Pymore, Dorsets. a little N of Bridport. Pynham, Sussex, near Arundel.

PYRAMIDS OF EGYPT, structures formerly counted one of the Seven Wonders of the World. These surprising monuments of antiquity, which baffle the researches of the deepest antiquary, to fix with precision their origin, are built upon a rocky bottom, at the foot of the high mountains which run along the ancient course of the Nile, and separate Egypt from Lybia. Various have been the conjectures how and when they were built, yet no two authors agree exactly about them; however, this is certain, that they are extremely ancient, and that there is no account, in any author of credit, when or for what reason they were founded: most imagine they were designed for tombs, though there is no discoverable entrance into two of them. There are many of these edifices at a greater distance in the desert, of which very little notice is taken by travellers. The principal pyramids are ESE of Gize, a village on the western shore of the Nile. There are 4 of them that deserve the attention of the curious; for though there are 7 or 8 others in the neighbourhood, they are nothing in comparison of the former: the two largest pyramids are 500 feet in perpendicular height. The plain they stand on is a continual rock, almost covered with a moving sand, in which are great numbers of shells, and petrified oysters. The most northern of these great pyramids is the only one that is open; and those who enter it, and clamber up to a sort of room, find a tomb, or sarcophagus, which shews, by its dimensions, that men were of the same size then, as now. The external part is chiefly built of great square stones, of an equal size, without either lime or cramps of any metal. This pyramid is three hours' journey from Old Cairo, and the entrance into it is on the N side. The opening leads successively to five different passages, which, though running upward, downward, and horizontally, tend all toward the S, and terminate in 2 chambers, the one underneath, and the other in the centre of the pyramid. In the upper chamber is the sarcophagus just mentioned; it is of granite, and, if struck with a key, sounds almost like a bell. The ascent to the top of the pyramid on the outside is by steps, which are the height of each stone, the lowermost of which is 4 feet high, and 3 broad; but they were not originally designed for this purpose. The base at the N side of it is 693 feet, and as the pyramid is exactly square, the other sides must be of the same length. If we imagine 4 equilateral triangles, mutually inclining till they all meet in a point at the top, we shall then have a true notion of the dimensions and figure of this pyramid: the perimeter of each triangle comprehending 2079 feet, and the perimeter of the basis 2772 feet. Whence the whole area of the base contains 480,949 square feet, or 14 acres, and somewhat more. However, the top does not end in a point, but in a little flat, or square, where some imagine the Egyptian priests made their astronomical observations. One of the pyramids, about 150 feet high, is built with bricks of uncommon dimensions, supposed, by some, to have been the work of the enslaved Israelites; who, according to Josephus, were obliged, under Pharaoh, to cut canals for the Nile, build walls, and erect pyramids.

PYRENEAN MOUNTAINS, or PYRENEES, mountains which divide France from Spain, and extend from the Mediterranean to the ocean, being about 212 m. in length. They have different names, according to the different places in which they stand. There are only 5 passages over them from one country to the other; the 3 principal of which are from St. Sebastian to St. Jean de Luz, from Pampeluna to St. Jean de Luz, and from Jonqueira to Perpignan. These mountains yield great quantities of timber, with abundance of pitch and tar.

PYRENEES, EASTERN, a depart. of France, W of the Mediterranean, and containing the late province of Roussillon. Although great part of it is mountainous, it is fertile; producing corn, excellent wines, olives, oranges, and leather of a superior quality. Perpignan is the chief town.

PYRENEES, LOWER, a depart. of France, bounded on the S by Spain, and on the W by the Atlantic; it is composed of the provinces of Bearn, Navarre, and part of Gascony. Pau is the capital. See NAVARRE.

PYRENEES, UPPER, a depart. of France, bounded on the N by the depart. of Gers, and on the E by the depart. of Upper Garonne; it is composed chiefly of the late province of Bigorre. It produces excellent horses and good partridges. Its valleys are very fertile; furnishing rye, millet, Spanish corn, and flax. The mountains have mines of lead, iron, and copper; and quarries of slate, fine marble, and jasper. Tarbes is the capital.

PYRMONT, a town and county of Westphalia. At a little distance from it are mineral waters; of a vinous, acid taste, well known throughout Europe, and much frequented. It is 12 m. SW of Hameln, and 40 SW of Hanover.

PYRNA, a town of Meissen, in Upper Saxony. Near it is a very fine quarry of stone, which is transported to different places by the river Elbe, on which it is seated, 10 m. SE of Dresden.

PYSECK, a town of Prachin, in Bohemia, 50 m. S of Prague.

Pyworthy, Devons. near Houlsworthy.

QUACKENBRUCK, a town of Westphalia, in Osnaburg, on the river Hase, 20 m. N of Osnabruck, and 38 SW of Bremen.

QUADAY, or CUADAC, a sea-port of Asia, in Tonquin, seated on a river of the same name.

QUADENDORF, a town 3 m. E of Dantzig.

QUADIN, a town in Upper Egypt, seated on the Nile, between Esne and Dander. It is remarkable for a great number of valuable and ancient monuments.

Quadrage, Devons. in the parish of Holdsworthy.

QUADRATA, a town of Naples, 5 m. NW of Ruvo.

Quadring, Lincolns. SE of Dunnington.

Quære, Wilts, on the Madder, near Wilton.

Quainton, Bucks, 6 m. NW of Aylesbury.

QUAKU, or QUAQUA, a district of Acambou, in Guinea, on the Gold Coast. The manufacture of cotton habits, called Quaqua gowns, forms a considerable branch of trade here.

QUAM, a town of Norway, 68 m. N of Dronthelm.

Quaney, Camb. near Mildenhall-Fen.

QUANG-SI, an inland province in the S of China, situated to the NE of Tonquin. It produces plenty of rice, being watered by several large rivers. The southern part is a flat country, and well cultivated; but the northern is full of mountains covered with trees. It contains mines of all sorts; and particularly a gold mine. They have a particular tree, of whose pith they make bread; and there are little insects which produce white wax. A prodigious number of wild animals, curious birds, and uncommon insects, are found here. The capital is Quicling, or Kouei-ling.

QUANG-TONG, QUAMTUM, or CANTON, a province of China, bounded on the E by Kiang-Si and Fokien, on the S by the ocean, and on the W by Tonquin and Quang-Si. It is diversified by valleys and mountains, and yields two crops of corn in a year. It abounds in gold, jewels, silk, pearls, tin, quicksilver, sugar, brass, iron, steel, saltpetre, ebony, and several sorts of odoriferous wood; beside fruits of all sorts. They have lemons of the size of a man's head; and another sort which grows out at the trunk of a tree, whose rind is very hard, and contains a great number of little cells full of an excellent yellow pulp. They have also a tree, whose wood is remarkably hard and heavy, and thence is called iron-wood, and a prodigious number of ducks, whose eggs they hatch in ovens. A great number of small barks are loaded with these ducks, and carried to feed on the sea-shore, where, at low water, they find shrimps, oysters, and other shell-fish. These small fleets generally go in companies, and the ducks mix together on the shore; but, when night approaches, they are collected together by beating on a basin; they immediately form themselves into different flocks, and each returns to the vessel it belongs to. The mountains are covered with a sort of osiers, which creep along the ground, and are so tough, that they make baskets, hurdles, mats, and ropes of them. Canton is the capital.

Quantock Hills, in Somersets. Quantock's-Head, E. and W, Somersets. near Watchet.

Quarendon, Bucks, in Bearton parish, Aylesbury Vale. Quarendon, Leices. 2 m. N of Mountsorrel. Quarington, 4 m. SW of Blandford. Quarley, Hants, NW of the Wallops. Quarndon, near Derby. Quarnford, Staffords. in Alstonfield parish. Quarr, Dorsets. in Purbeck Isle, a little E of Haycroft. Quarr, Isle of Wight, between Newport and St. Helen's. Quarry Hill, 4 m. from Durham.

QUARTEN, a town of Swisserland, near Wallenstadt Lake, 5 m. E of Glaris.

Quat, Shrops. on the Severn, E of Chelmarsh. Quatford, Shrops. on the Severn, a m. below Bridgnorth.

QUEBEC, a large and handsome city of America, the capital of Lower Canada, founded by the French in 1608. It is built on a rock, and is divided into the upper and lower town. The river, which, from the sea hither, is about 4 or 5 leagues broad, narrows all of a sudden, to the breadth of a m. The harbour is safe, spacious, and commodious, and about 5 fathoms deep. It is flanked by two bastions, that are raised 25 feet from the ground, which is about the height of the tides at the time of the equinox. The castle stands on the brow of a rugged hill, 40 fathoms above the town. The fortifications are irregular, yet the place, from its situation, is capable of making a stout defence. The lower town is chiefly inhabited by merchants, whose trade is considerable. The noblest structure in the whole city is the palace where the governor resides. In 1711, a body of land forces, under Brigadier-General Hill, were sent with a design to conquer Canada; but the expedition failed through the rashness of the admiral, in sailing 500 near the Seven Isles, several ships being lost, with a number of sailors. In 1755, it surrendered to the English, after a victory obtained by the brave Gen. Wolfe, who fell in the engagement. It is situated at the confluence of the rivers St. Lawrence and St. Charles, in lat. 46 55 N and lon. 70 31 W.

QUEDA, a kingdom of Asia, on the W coast of Malacca, tributary to Siam. The principal town, however, which is of the same name, is subject to the Dutch. Here are mines of tin and lead, of which metal they export large quantities to Persia, Arabia, and India. It has a good harbour, and is 300 m. WNW of the city of Malacca. Lat. 6 40 N.

Quedgley, 3 m. S. of Gloucester.

QUEDLINGBURG, a town of Halberstadt, Upper Saxony, with a famous abbey, whose abbess is a princess of the empire. The inhab.

live by brewing, husbandry, and feeding of cattle. It is 7 m. SSE of Halberstadt.

QUEDLITZ, a town of Prussia, 4 m. S of Wartemburg.

QUEENBOROUGH, an ancient, but poor town in Kent, in the Isle of Sheppey, situated at the mouth of the river Medway. The chief employment of the inhab. is oyster-dredging, oysters being here in great plenty, and of a fine flavour. It is 15 m. NW of Canterbury, and 43 E of London. Markets on Mon. and Thurs. if not disused.

Queenborough, Leicesters. 6 m. from Leicester.

Queen-Camel, Somersets.

QUEEN CHARLOTTE'S ISLAND, in the S Pacific Ocean, discovered by Captain Wallis, in 1767. It is 6 m. long, and 1 wide. Lat. 19 18 S lon. 138 4 W.

QUEEN CHARLOTTE'S SOUND, a Sound at the N extremity of the southern island of New Zealand, near Cook's Strait, lying in lat. 41 0 S and lon. 184 19 E. The climate here is much more mild than at Dusky Bay; and though there is not such plenty of wild fowl and fish, that defect is amply compensated by a greater variety and abundance of excellent vegetables. Most of the hills about the Sound consist of an argillaceous stone, of a greenish grey, or blueish, or yellowish brown colour. A green talcous, or nephritic, which the jewellers call jadde, is likewise very common here, together with horn-stone, shingle, several sorts of flinty stones and pebbles, some loose pieces of basaltes, strata of a compact mica, or glimmer, with particles of quartz. Hence Captain Forster thinks there is great reason to suppose, that this part of New Zealand contains iron ore, and perhaps several other metallic bodies. The country here is not so steep as at Dusky Bay, and the hills near the sea side are, in general, of an inferior height, but covered with forests equally intricate and impenetrable. The dogs here are of the long-haired sort, with pricked ears, and much resemble the common shepherd's cur, but they are very stupid.

Queen Court, Kent, near Ospringe. Queen-Hill, Worcesters. by the Severn, S of Upton. Queen-Lodge, or Manor, Wilts, in Clarendon park. Queen-Moor, Somersets. near Weston. Queen Park, Warwicks. W of Kenilworth.

Queen-Island, one of the Blasquet Islands, on the coast of Kerry, Munster.

QUEEN'S COUNTY, a county in Ireland, in the province of Leinster, about 25 m. square, bounded on the N by W by King's County, and part of Tipperary, on the E by Kildare and part of Carlow, and on the S by Kilkenny. It was formerly full of woods and bogs, but is now much improved. It contains 50 parishes, about 15,048 houses, and 82,000 inhab. Maryborough is the capital.

QUEEN'S FERRY, a town of Linlithgows. seated on the Frith of Forth, where it is not more than 2 m. wide. It is a much frequented ferry, and is 9 m. W of Edinburgh.

Queinton, Glouc. 5 m. N of Campden. Queinton, Upper and Lower, Gloucesters. in Queinton parish. Quekes, Kent, in Thanet Isle, near Birchington. Quenbery, Herts, NW of Bishop's Stortford. Quenby, Leicesters. near Bilsdon. Quendon, Essex, near Newport. Quenington, Gloucesters. 2 m. from Fairford. Quenny, a river in Shrops. Quenock-Chapel, Monmouths. N of Caerleon.

QUENTIN, ST. a town in the depart. of Aisne, with a considerable manufactory of lawns and cambrics. Near this place, in 1557, the Spaniards gained a signal victory over the French, and afterwards took it by storm. It is seated on an eminence, near the Somme, 21 m. S of Cambray, and 83 N by E of Paris.

QUERCI, a ci-devant province of France, divided into the Upper and Lower, and fertile in corn, wine, and fruits. It now forms the depart. of Lot.

QUERFURT, a town of Upper Saxony, capital of a county of the same name, 16 m. SW of Halle.

QUERKEINESS, or KERKEINESS, anciently CERCINA, two islands on the coast of Tripoli, containing several villages.

Quern, Gloucester, by Cirencester.

QUESNOY, a small, but strongly fortified town, in the depart. of the North. It was taken by the allies, under the Duke of Ormond and Prince Eugene, in 1712, and retaken by the French the same year. It is seated in an extensive plain, on the little river Ronelle, 9 m. SSE of Valenciennes.

Quethiock, Cornw. E of Leskard.

QUETREVILLE, a town of France, in the depart. of the Channel, 6 m. S of Coutances.

QUETZ, a town of Saxony, in the circle of Leipsig, 2 m. SE of Zorbig.

Quevington, Gloucesters. near the Coln and Fairford.

QUIBERON, a small peninsula, in the depart. of Morbihan, to the N of Belleisle; also a small island, called the Point of Quiberon, separated from the peninsula by a channel; the sea next it is called the Bay of Quiberon. It is remarkable for an ill-conceived and unfortunate expedition against France, of English troops and emigrants, in 1795. A terrible slaughter was made of these last devoted men, who seem, on this occasion, to have formed the forlorn hope.

QUINCEY, a village in the depart. of Aube, situated on the little river Ardusson, near Nogent upon the Seine, and at no great distance from the city of Troyes. In this parish is the foundation or convent of The Paraclete, a place interesting to the readers of English poetry, as it will ever recall the delightful epistles of Pope and Cawthorn. Mr. Pope's description, however, is only ideal and poetical, there being neither rocks nor pines to be seen here; nor is it a kind of ground (being in a vale) which ever seemed to encourage such objects. The superstructure of the Paraclete is, probably, not the same as the twelfth century produced; but the vaulted part, as the arches are all pointed, are imagined, with reason, to be such. A low building, adjoining, has, however, marks of real antiquity, and seems to have been the public hall where Abelard gave his lectures; for, in the walls on each side, are small horizontal apertures, that have strong appearances of benches. In the abbatial vault, which, being small, is much crowded, the bones of the unfortunate lovers, Abelard, and Eloisa, are deposited; by these, Eloisa appears to have been much taller than Abelard. In the convent are, or lately were, only twenty-two sisters.

QUITO, a city of S. America, capital of an audience, seated in a pleasant valley, between two chains of the Andes, on higher ground than the rest of habitable Peru, being above 300 yards higher than the level of the sea. It is a bishop's see, and contains seven convents and a university. All sorts of merchandise and commodities are exceedingly dear, on account of the difficulty of bringing them hither. The inhab. amount to between 50 and 60,000. Lat. 0 13 S lon. 77 50 W.

QUITO, an audience in the viceroyalty of Terra Firma, S America, lying between two chains of the Andes, and bounded on the N by Popayan, and on the W by the Pacific Ocean; its extent is not known. The lands are generally well cultivated, and there are a great number of towns and villages inhabited by the Spaniards, or native Americans. Every village is adorned with a large square, and the church stands on one side of it. The streets are generally straight, and respect the four quarters of the world; and, indeed, all the roads are laid out in a line, crossing each other, insomuch that the general aspect of the country has the appearance of a large garden. It might be imagined this is a very hot country; but it stands so high, and so near the mountains, perpetually covered with snow, that the air is very temperate. There are no noxious animals, for the tigers and serpents are below in the forests. They have no vicunas, or guanacoes here, but they have an animal of the same kind, called by the natives lamas. They have the various sorts of materials proper for dyeing, and several sorts of fruits and plants which have been brought from Spain, beside those that naturally grow here. They have also imported beeves and sheep. In the N part they get a great deal of gold. The commerce here is principally carried on by Europeans. This province consists of nine jurisdictions: Ibarra, Otabala, Quito, Latacunga, Riobamba, Chimbo, or Guaranda, Guayaquil, Cuerca, and Loja. After the conquest by the Spaniards, Quito was annexed to Peru; but a new government having been since erected at Santa Fé de Bagoda, it was dismembered from Peru, and annexed to New Granada.

RHAYADERGOWY, a town of Radnors. seated in a hilly country, on the river Wye, 18 m. NW of Radnor, and 177 WNW of London. Market on Wed.

Rhaytylarsard, Caernarvons.

RHE, a very populous island on the W coast of France, comprised in the depart. of La Vendée, from the coast of which, and that of Lower Charente, it is separated by the Straits of Breton, about 7 m. wide. It is about 16 m. in length, and 3 in breadth. Its products are very bitter wine, and abundance of salt. The inhab. make excellent brandy, and the liquor called anisette. Their principal food is fish, and shell-fish are plentiful on the coast. The principal town is St. Martin de Rhe.

RHEIMS, a large, ancient, and celebrated city in the depart. of the Marne, containing about 30,000 inhab. Before the revolution, it was the see of an archbishop, who was the first duke and peer of France, and always crowned the king. The principal church, built before the year 406, is a very curious Gothic structure. In the church of St. Remy (under the altar of which the corpse of St. Remisius is preserved in a magnificent shrine), was lately kept, La Sainte Ampoule, a vial filled with a red congealed liquor, always used in the coronation of the kings of France, who, since Clovis, have been successively crowned at Rheims. The remains of an amphitheatre, a castle, a triumphal arch, and 3 gates of the city, which, to this day, bear the names of Pagan deities, viz. the Sun, Mars, and Ceres, are among the remarkable monuments of the Romans, still preserved here. Rheims is a long narrow city, with low houses, but the grand square is very magnificent. Here are considerable manufactures of flannel, coverlets, and other woollen and silk stuffs: and their wine and gingerbread are excellent. It is seated in a plain, surrounded by hills, on the river Vesle, 75 m. ENE of Paris.

RHEIN, a town of Prussia, 60 m. SE of Koningsberg.

RHEINTHAL, a valley in Switzerland, between the canton of Appenzel and the territory of St. Gall on the one side, and the Rhine on the other; about 30 m. in length, and from 3 to 8 in breadth. It is fertile, and produces excellent wine. The inhab. who are about 13,000, are partly Protestants and partly Romanists, and are governed by a bailiff who is appointed, alternately, by the cantons of Zurich, Lucern, Schweitz, Glaris, Uri, Underwalden, Zug, and Berne.

RHEINWALD, a valley in the country of the Grisons, about 20 m. in length. It is so called from the Hynder Rhine, which rises on Mount Vogelsberg, and runs through the valley.

RHENEN, a town of Utrecht, situated on the river Leck, 20 m. NNE of Bois le Duc, and 20 SE of Utrecht.

RHINE, a great river of Europe, which rises in three streams, in the Grison Alps, which unite into one. The principal branch descends from the mountain of St. Gothard, and passes through the lakes of Constance and Zell. After it has crossed part of Germany and the Netherlands, watering Basil, Huninguen, Strasburg, Worms, Mentz, Coblentz, Bonne, Cologne, Dusseldorf, Rees, Emmerick, &c. it divides itself into two branches, one of which preserves the name of the Rhine, and loses itself in the sands W of Leyden. The other takes the name of the Lech, or Leck, and falls into the Merwe, 5 m. NW of Dordrecht.

RHINE, LOWER, a circle of the empire of Germany, bounded by the circles of Westphalia, Upper Rhine, Franconia, Swabia, and by the duchy of Luxemburg, and France. It contains the electorates of Mentz, Treves, and Cologne, the palatinate of the Rhine, and some smaller states. The elector of Mentz is the director.

RHINE, LOWER, a depart. of France, having the Rhine to the E, and forming the northern part of the ci-devant Alsace. Strasburgh is the capital.

RHINE, UPPER, a depart. of France, S. of the depart. of the Lower Rhine. Colmar is the capital.

RHINE, UPPER, a circle of the empire of Germany, divided into two parts, the Upper and Lower. The lower part comprehends the territories of the landgraves of Hesse-Cassel, Hesse-Darmstadt, and Hesse-Rhinfeldt; the counties of Nassau, Solms, Hanau, Isenburg, Seine, Wied, Wingestein, Aatzfield, and Waldeck, with the abbeys of Fulda and Hirschfeld, and the imperial towns of Frankfort, Fridburg, and Wetzlar. The upper part of the circle of the Upper Rhine lies to the W of that river, and comprehends the bishoprics of Basle, Strasburgh, Spire, and Worms, with the duchy of Deux-ponts; the counties of Sponheim, Sarbruck, Falkenstein, and Linange, and the imperial towns of Worms and Spire. The summoning princes are the bishop of Worms and the elector palatine.

RHINE, PALATINATE OF THE. See PALATINATE.

RHINEBERG, a town of Cologne, situated on the Rhine, 44 m. NNW. of Cologne. It was taken by the allies in 1703, and afterwards dismantled.

RHINEBRUCK, a town of Treves, situated on the Rhine.

RHINECK, a town of Switzerland, capital of the Rheinthal, seated on the Rhine, near its junction with the Lake of Constance.

RHINFALS, a town, fortress, and county of Catzenelnbogen, in the circle of Upper Rhine, near St. Goar, and 15 m. S of Coblentz. It is built on a craggy rock, and commands the whole breadth of the Rhine. Vessels that pass here are obliged to pay a considerable toll.

RHINFELDT, or RHEINFELDEN, a small, but strong town of Austrian Swabia, the best of the four forest towns. It is seated on the S side of the Rhine, over which it has a handsome bridge, 9 m. SSE of Basle.

RHINLAND, a district of S. Holland, which lies on both sides the Rhine. Leyden is the capital.

RHINTHAL. See RHEINTHAL.

RHIN ZABERN, or SAVERNE, a town of Spire, in the circle of Upper Rhine.

RHODE ISLAND, one of the United States of N. America, bounded on the N and E by Massachusetts, on the S by the Atlantic, and on the W by Connecticut. These limits comprehend what has generally been called Rhode Island and Providence Plantations. It is divided into 5 co. containing 29 townships, 76,213 inhab. It is as healthful as any part of N. America, but is principally a country for pasture, and not for grain, the farmers here raising great numbers of the finest and largest neat cattle in America. They also export large quantities of excellent butter and cheese. In the rivers and bays are plenty of cod, halibut, mackerel, and other fish, to the amount of more than 70 different kinds. Providence and Newport are the two chief towns. About 600 vessels enter and clear annually, at the different ports of this state.

RHODE ISLAND, an island of N. America, in the state of the same name. It is about 13 m. long from N to S, and 4 m. wide, and is divided into three townships, Newport, Portsmouth, and Middleton. The soil is of a superior quality. This island is a noted resort of invalids from the southern climates. It is exceedingly pleasant and healthful, and celebrated for its fine women, so that travellers have called it, with propriety, the Eden of America.

RHODES, an island of Asia, on the S side of Natolia, and in the Mediterranean Sea, about 40 m. in length, and 15 in breadth. The air is good, and the soil is extremely fertile in excellent corn, from the numerous springs which water it, although it is, in itself, dry and sandy, but badly cultivated. It is famous for having been the residence of the knights of Jerusalem till the year 1523, when the Turks got possession of it. The principal town is of the same name, and is an archbishop's see; it has a good harbour, with a narrow entrance between two rocks, on which are two towers. Here, in all probability, stood the famous Colossus, a statue of bronze, 70 cubits high. It was reckoned one of the seven wonders of the old world, for a ship, with all its sails, might pass between the legs. It was thrown down by an earthquake, 56 years after it was first erected; and when the Saracens became masters of this island in the year 665, near 900 years after its fall, they knocked it in pieces, with which they loaded 900 camels. The knights of Jerusalem took it from the Saracens in the year 1309, and kept it till it was taken from them by the Turks. It is inhabited by Turks and Jews, for the Greeks and other Christians are obliged to live in the suburbs. The number of inhabitants, in the whole island, is estimated at about 36,500. Lat. 36 24 N lon. 28 25 E.

Rhodes, Lancash. NW of Manchester.

Rhodley, Northumberl. near Morpeth.

RICHENVIER, a town in the depart. of the Upper Rhine, 6 m. NNW of Colmar.

Rich-Hill, in Armagh, Ulster.

RICHLAND, a county of S. Carolina.

Richmond, a populous village in Surry, anciently called Sheen, but Henry VII. gave it the name of Richmond, from that district in Yorks. whereof he had been earl. Here was a palace, the favourite residence of Queen Elizabeth, and in which she closed her illustrious career; it is still distinguished by its beautiful royal gardens, which in the summer season are open to the public; and in these is a noble observatory, built by the late Sir W. Chambers, in 1769. In this, among other fine instruments, are particularly to be noticed a mural arch of 140 degrees and 8 feet radius; a zenith sector of 12 feet; a transit instrument of 8 feet, and a 10 feet reflector, by Herschel. The present palace, which is finely situated, is a very plain edifice, built by the Duke of Ormond, who had obtained a grant of some lands about Richmond, from King William III.; but, on that duke's attainder, it devolved to the crown. An elegant stone bridge, of 5 semicircular arches, was erected over the Thames here, in 1777. Near this village also is an extensive royal park. It is 9 m. WSW of London.

Richmond-Hill, its summit is a most delightful spot, commanding a truly beautiful, luxurious, and diversified prospect, (deservedly celebrated by the sweet poet, "who sung the seasons and their change," by Dr. Smollett, and by other writers of genius, "sensibly alive to the beauties of nature,") of the

with the royal palaces, magnificent seats, glittering towns, charming pleasure grounds, hills, groves, swelling lawns, meadows, pasture-grounds, corn-fields, &c. &c. on its banks. The landscape, from this favourite situation, exhibits a picture of the most elegant simplicity, nature decorated with the greatest neatness, the most exquisite embellishments of rural scenery; in short, an elysium, charming the eye with undescribable variety. It takes in a view, more or less distant of the city of London, of Windsor Castle, Hampton Court, Petersham, Esher, Ham, Harrow, Highgate, Hampstead, with other parts of Middlesex and Surry.

RICHMOND, a large town in the N. Riding of Yorks. containing many handsome houses, built of free-stone, with a flourishing manufactory of yarn stockings, and of woollen knit caps, for seamen. It is pleasantly seated on the river Swale, over which it has a stone bridge, 40 m. NW of York, and 230 NNW of London. Market on Sat.

RICHMOND, a town of N. America, capital of the state of Virginia. It has an elegant state-house, and stands on the N side of James River, at the foot of some falls, which are 7 m. in length; to obviate the inconvenience of which, a canal has been lately undertaken. It is 60 m. N by W of Williamsburg.

RIGA, a large, populous, and opulent city of Russia, capital of the government of Riga, or Livonia. Next to Petersburg, it is justly considered as the most commercial town in the whole empire. The trade is chiefly carried on by foreign merchants, who are resident in the town; but those of the English factory enjoy the greatest share of the commerce. The principal exports are corn, hemp, flax, iron, timber, masts, leather, tallow, &c. its principal imports are salt, cloth, silks, wine, groceryware, and salted herrings. The masts grow mostly in the districts which border on the Dnieper, and are sent up that river to a landing-place, from which they are transported to the Duna; but they can only pass the last-mentioned river in the spring, or about three weeks after the snow begins to melt, on account of the numerous shoals. They are then formed into floats of from 50 to 200 pieces, usually from 70 to 80 feet in length, and descend the stream to Riga. The hemp, which is brought from the Ukraine and Poland, employs two years in its passage to Riga. It is conveyed in barks of from 2 to 300 tons burden. Within the fortifications are about 9000 inhab. and in the suburbs 15,000, exclusive of a garrison of 1000 men. Here is a floating wooden bridge over the Dwina, or Duna, 40 feet in breadth, and 2600 in length. In the winter, when the ice sets in, this bridge is taken to pieces and removed, and in the spring it is replaced. Riga was finally obliged to submit to Peter the Great, in 1710. It is 5 m. from the mouth of the Duna, and 160 NE of Konigsberg. Lat. 56 53 N lon. 24 25 E.

It contains 560 houses, and 3633 inhab. It had once a flourishing woollen manufactory, and is still a staple for wool, which is brought up here every week by the clothiers of Leeds, Wakefield, Halifax, &c. but its most noted manufacture of hardware, particularly spurs, has long since gone to decay. Its magnificent church, adorned with 3 lofty spires, is both parochial and collegiate (having a dean and chapter, and sending a proctor to the convocation of the province of York) and is the only one that is so in England, except that of Southwell, in Notts. Before the conquest, and some time after it, this place was governed by elders and a chief magistrate, called a wakeman or watchman. A considerable number of Saxon coins were found here in the year 1695, particularly the brass coins called sticcas, 8 whereof made a penny. A navigable canal comes up to the town. It is pleasantly situated on the river Ure, or Aire, over which it has 2 stone bridges, 28 m. NW of York, and 218 NNW of London. Market on Thursd. ROCHESTER, an ancient, but little city of Kent, believed to have been a Roman station, from the bricks in the wall, and the Roman coins and other antiquities that have been found here. It was formerly much larger than at present, having now only one parish church, besides the cathedral; but it once had another, and of later times has been gradually increasing by the addition of some new houses and streets on the high side of the town. It consists chiefl, of one principal street, which is paved, containing 1100 houses, and 6400 inhab. The houses are generally inhabited by tradesmen and innkeepers, no sort of manufactory being carried on here. It has 2 free-schools, the one called the King's, and the other the City-School. There is here also an alms-house for six poor travellers, who are supplied with a supper, a bed and breakfast, and with four-pence to carry them forward on their journey; but they are to stay no longer than one night; and it is remarkable, that an inscription over the door intimates, that "rogues and proctors are excepted." The narrow stone bridge over the Medway, consisting of 21 arches, was built in the reign of Edward III. partly at the expence of Sir John Cobham and Sir Robert Knolles, out of the spoils they had taken in France. The corporation has jurisdiction over the great oyster-fishery in the several creeks of the Medway, which is now in a flourishing state. Rochester is parted from Stroud on the W by its bridge, and is contiguous to Chatham on the E. It is 27 m. NW by W of Canterbury, and 30 SE by E of London. ROMAGNA, a province of Italy, bounded on the N by the Ferrarese, on the E by the Adriatic, on the S by Urbino and Tuscany, and on the W by Bologna. It is about 45 m. in length, and 30 in breadth, and fertile in corn, wine, oil, fruits, and pastures; it has also mines, mineral waters, and salt-works, which last make its principal revenue. In the fifth century, it fell under the dominion of the Ostrogoths, whose king, Theodoric, in the year 493, made Ravenna his place of residence. In the following century, the Goths being driven out by Belisarius and Narses, generals of the emperors of the East, Ravenna became the residence of the emperor's exarchs, till the Lombards made themselves masters of it, and dispossessed the last exarchs. At length, in the year 755, Pepin, king of the Franks, having compelled Istulphus, king of the Lombards, to give up the whole exarchate, conferred it on the see of Rome. Ravenna is the capital.

ROME, a famous city of Europe, founded 748 years before the Christian æra. It was formerly three times as large as it is at present; and is now one of the largest and handsomest cities of Europe. It is divided into 14 quarters, or wards, called Riones, which contain 81 parishes, about 200,000 inhab. including strangers, 2827 priests, 3847 monks, 1910 nuns, 1665 students, and 1470 paupers. The number of inhab. has gradually increased during the whole of this present century. Some of the principal streets are of considerable length, and perfectly straight. That called the Corso is the most frequented. Here the nobility display their equipages during the carnival, and take the air in the evenings, in fair weather. The Strada Felice, and the Strada-di-Porta-Pia, are also very long and noble streets. There are no lamps lighted in the streets at night; and all Rome would be in utter darkness, were it not for the candles which the devotees sometimes place before the Madonnas, or statues of St. Mary; these appear glimmering, at vast intervals, like stars in a cloudy night. The footmen carry dark lanterns behind the carriages of people of distinction. Rome, at present, exhibits a strange mixture of magnificent and interesting, and of common and beggarly objects. The former consists of palaces, churches, fountains, and, above all, the interesting remains of antiquity. The latter comprehend all the rest of the city. The church of St. Peter, in the opinion of many, surpasses, in size and magnificence, the finest monuments of ancient architecture. Its length is exactly 730 feet; the breadth 520; and the height, from the pavement to the top of the cross which crowns the cupola, 450. The Pantheon is the most perfect of the Roman temples which now remain. "In spite," says Moore, "of the depredations which it has sustained from Goths, Vandals, and Popes, it still remains a beautiful monument of Roman taste. The pavillion of the great altar, which stands under the cupola of St. Peter's, and the four wreathed pillars of Corinthian brass which support it, were formed out of the spoils of the Pantheon, which, after all, and with the weight of 1800 years upon its head, has still a probability of outliving its proud capacious rival." From the circular form of this temple, it has obtained the name of the Rotundo. Its height is 150 feet, and its breadth nearly the same. There are no windows; the central opening in the dome admitting a sufficiency of light. The rain, which falls through this aperture, immediately drills through holes, which perforate a large piece of porphyry, that forms the centre of the pavement. Being converted into a Christian temple, the Pantheon, originally erected to the honour of all the gods, is now dedicated to Mary, and to all the martyrs and saints. As the Pantheon is the most entire, the Amphitheatre of Vespasian is the most stupendous monument of antiquity in Rome. About one half of the external circuit still remains: from which a pretty exact idea may be formed of the original structure. According to computation, it could contain 85,000 spectators. The Campidoglio is an elegant structure, raised on part of the ruins of the ancient Capitol. The ancient Forum is now a cow-market; and on the top of the beautiful column of Trajan, 120 feet high, is the statue of St. Peter, instead of that of Trajan. &c. The Romans say, that the church of St. John Lateran is the most ancient of all the churches of Rome, and the mother of all the churches in Christendom. To this temple every new pope constantly goes first, in a magnificent procession, to take possession of his see. The church of the Holy Cross of Jerusalem, celebrated for its magnificent columns of granite, &c. was built by Constantine. The pope has three superb palaces, of which the principal is the Vatican, near St. Peter's church, said to contain upwards of 4400 apartments. The library of this palace is the largest and most complete in the world; rich especially in manuscripts in all languages, and of all ages, of which there are said to be about 4000. In Rome, the connoisseur will meet with innumerable paintings by the greatest masters, and with the chef-d'œuvres of sculpture, &c. The castle of St. Angelo is said to serve more to keep the city in awe, than to repel any foreign attack. Rome is seated on the river Tiber, which runs through part of it, in lat. 41 54 N lon. 12 55 E.

ROMHILD, a town of Hanneburg, in Franconia.

ROMNEY, NEW, a town in Kent, once a very large place, containing five churches, a priory, and an hospital, with a good harbour: but since the sea retired from it in the reign of Edward I. it is much reduced. The two great meetings for all the Cinque Ports are held here on the Tuesday after St. Margaret's day. ROSETTA, a town in Egypt, called, by the natives, RASCHID, founded in the 8th century. It is near 2 m. in length, has no streets perfectly straight, nor any remarkable squares. They have a great manufactory of striped and other coarse linens; but its chief business is the carriage of goods hence to Cairo; for all European merchandise is brought hither from Alexandria by sea, and carried by boats to Cairo; as all the productions of Egypt are brought to the port of Alexandria. The Europeans have their vice-consuls and factors here. The country to the N has pleasant gardens, full of orange, lemon, and citron trees, and almost all sorts of fruits, with a variety of enchanting groves of palm-trees, with flowers scattered among them; and when the fields are green with rice, it adds greatly to the beauty of the country. The rice sown round it, is, by very rigorous laws, appropriated to the use and consumption of Constantinople only. Sir R. Wilson says, it is built of a dingy red brick, and that the greatest part of the town is in ruins, from the French, and the streets full of wretchedness, and the quantity of blind, prodigious, mosquitos of the most dreadful sort, vermin of every kind, and women so ugly, that, fortunately for Europeans, their faces are hid by a black cloth veil, in which are cut two holes for their eyes. It is seated on the western branch of the river Nile, 25 m. NE of Alexandria, and 90 NNW of Cairo. Lat. 31 22 N lon. 3 45 E.

ROSSSHIRE, a county of Scotland, bounded on the N by Sutherlands.; on the W by the sea; on the S by Invernesss.; and on the E by the Friths of Murray and Dornock, and the county of Cromarty. From N to S it extends near 60 m. and upwards of 70 from E to W. It contains 12,829 houses, and 60,853 inhab. including Cromarty. The NW part of this county is desolate and dreary, presenting nothing to the eye but vast piles of rocky mountains, with summits broken, and aspiring into every form. The E side feeds great numbers of black cattle, horses, goats, and deer, has woods of fir of great extent, and is fruitful in corn and herbs. It has also abundance of land and sea fowl, and is well supplied with fish, particularly herrings, in the extensive locks and bays found on the coasts. In the woods is the beautiful bird called Capercailzie, or Cock of the Wood; it is of a bright azure colour, and almost as large as a common turkey. On the tops of the mountains is found the Ptarmigan, a simple bird, not quite the size of a partridge. It is often indebted for its safety to its grey colour, which resembles the stones among which it lodges. In winter its colour changes to a pure white, like the snow, in which it often buries itself. The inhab. of the W and S parts speak the Erse language, which is also understood on the E coast, where, however, English is generally spoken. The principal towns are Tain, Dingwall, and Fortrose. The Island of Lewis is included in this county.

ROTTERDAM, a city and celebrated sea-port of Holland; next to Amsterdam the most considerable place in the United Provinces, for size, the beauty of its buildings, trade, and opulence. There are so many fine deep canals here, that the largest ships may conveniently unload at the very doors of the warehouses. The town is governed by a regency, consisting of 24 counsellors, out of which are elected 4 burgomasters, a grand bailly, and 7 echevins. It is more frequented by the British merchants than Amsterdam, because the ice goes away sooner, and a single tide, in two or three hours, will carry a vessel out into the open sea. The principal public buildings are, the town-house, the bank, the E. and W. India houses, the arsenal, and the College of Admiralty. On the E side of the city is a large bason and dock, for building and launching vessels employed in the service of the Admiralty and the E. India Company. Here is an English Presbyterian church, which being of the established religion, the minister is paid by the States; and, which is not the case with the Presbyterians in England and Scotland, they make use of an organ. Here is also an English episcopal church, whose minister is paid partly by a salary from the English government, and partly by a subscription of the congregation. Some of the houses are built in the old Spanish style, with the gable ends embattled in front; but there is a considerable number of modern brick houses, which are very lofty and spacious, particularly on that magnificent quay called the Bomb-Fees. On this quay is a handsome Jewish synagogue. The statue of Erasmus, in bronze, stands in an open place, at the head of one of the canals; and in a narrow street, leading from the statue to the great church, is still shown the house in which he was born, with an inscription in front, to his honour. Rotterdam is seated on the river Rotter, at its confluence with the Maese, 13 m. S of the Hague, and 30 SSW of Amsterdam. Lat. 51 55 N lon. 4 26 E.

of Normandy and the see of an archbishop. It contains upwards of 8000 houses, and 36 parish churches. The streets, however, are narrow, crooked, and dirty, and the houses are mostly of wood. Notwithstanding this disagreeable appearance, it is one of the most opulent, commercial, and important places in France. It is 2½ leagues in circuit; and (its six suburbs included) contains 87,000 inhab. The principal public buildings are, the Great Hall of the Palace, in which the late Parliament of Rouen met; the Old Castle; and the principal church, near which is a public library. In the market-place is a statue of the celebrated Maid of Orleans, who was burnt here by the English, for a witch. The linens of Rouen, particularly what are called the Scarvies, are much esteemed. There are also manufactures of cloth, and a manufactory of oil of vitriol, the only one in France. The suburb of St. Sever, situated on the other side of the Seine, communicates with the city by a bridge of boats which rises and falls with the tide, and is made to open so as to admit the passage of ships. This bridge is paved, and is 270 paces long. Rouen is seated on the river Seine, 50 m. SW of Amiens, and 70 NW of Paris. Lat. 49 27 N lon. 1 10 E.

RUSSIA, a large empire, partly in Asia, and partly in Europe, bounded on the N by the Frozen Ocean; on the S by Great Tartary, the Caspian Sea, and Persia; on the E by the N. Pacific Ocean; and on the W by Sweden, Poland, and Lapland; and it extends from 23 to 190 degrees of E lon. and from 43 to 78 degrees N lat. There were three countries that had the name of Russia; namely, Red Russia; White Russia, which comprehends Lithuania; and Black Russia, which comprehends the governments of Kaluga, Moscow, Tula, Rezan, Volodimir, and Yaroslaf; and hence his imperial majesty takes the title of Emperor of all the Russias. This empire, exclusive of the late acquisitions from the Turks and from Poland, may be likened to an oblong square, whose longest sides are about 2000 m. each. The seas of Russia are, the Baltic, the White Sea, the Frozen Ocean, the Black Sea, and the Caspian Sea. There are also five large rivers, namely, the Dnieper, Volga, Don, Duna, or Dwiner, and Oby. A country of such vast extent must lie in different climates; and the soil must be as different. The most fertile part is near the frontiers of Poland; insomuch that the inhabitants are able to supply their neighbours with corn; the N part is not only more cold, but very marshy, and over-run with forests, inhabited chiefly by wild beasts. Beside domestic animals, there are wild beeves, rein-deer, martens, white and black foxes, weasels, ermines, and sables, whose skins make the best furs in the world. They had very few vines before Peter the Great caused them to be planted in different places. In Russia are large quantities of cotton and silk, with which they make the various sorts of stuffs, skins, furs, Russia leather, talc, tallow, hemp, Russia cloth, honey, wax, and almost all the merchandises of China, India, Persia, Turkey, and some European countries. This vast empire has been divided by the late empress into 42 governments: namely, Petersburgh, Olonetz, Wiburgh, Revel, Riga, Pskof, Novogorod, Tver, Smolensko, Polotsk, Mohilef, Orel, Kaluga, Moscow, Tula, Rezan, Volodimir, Yaroslaf, Vologda, Archangel, Kostroma, Nishnei Novogorod, Kasan, Simbirsk, Penza, Tambof, Voronetz, Knusk, Novogorod-Severskoi, Tchernigof, Kiof, Kharkof, Catharinenslaf, Caucasus, Saratof, Usa, Viatka, Perm, Tobolsk, Kolyvan, Irkutzk, and the country of the Cossacks. The inhabitants, in general, are robust, great eaters, and fond of brandy. They use bathing, but smoke no tobacco, lest the smoke should dishonour the images of the saints, which they have in great veneration; however, they take a great deal of snuff, made of the tobacco brought from the Ukraine. They were formerly accounted the rudest and most ignorant people in the world, and many of them are now little better. Formerly, no Russians were seen in other countries, and they seldom or never sent ambassadors to foreign courts; but now they are more polite, and study the interest of different nations. They had no ships of war, or merchandise, before the reign of Peter I. but in the present reign, powerful Russian squadrons have appeared not only in the Baltic, but in the Black Sea, and in the Mediterranean. They have images in their churches; and the priests give a passport to those that are dying, addressed to St. Nicholas, who is desired to entreat St. Peter to open the gates of heaven, as they have certified that the bearer is a good christian. The church is governed by a patriarch, under whom are the archbishops and bishops. Every priest is called a papa, or pope, of whom there were 4000 in Moscow only. Formerly he was thought a learned man who could read and write; but Peter undertook to introduce arts and sciences, and, in 1724, the first university was founded that ever was in Russia; and there is also an academy of sciences at Petersburgh, supplied with eminent professors. With respect to dress, a long beard is in high estimation with the people of Russia, notwithstanding the efforts of their monarchs to root it out; and it is only those depending upon government, in the army and navy, who have yet complied with the custom and the wish of the court. Those who retain their beards, retain likewise the ancient dress; the long swaddling coat, either of skins, or of course cloth lined with skins, in winter, and in summer, of cloth only. About their middle they have a sash of any colour; but what they most affect, is green or yellow. They wear trowsers instead of breeches and stockings; their limbs are besides wrapped in many folds of woollen stuffs to keep them warm, and above all they wear boots. Their shirts are fashioned as women's, and their necks, exposed to the cold, have become very hard and impenetrable, from this practice. Government continue to exert every nerve to compel their subjects to adopt the German dress. The clergy alone excepted, none can procure any place, or must expect any favour from court, upon other condition than banishing the Asiatic sheep-skin robes. The dress of the women is the reverse of the men, both in fashion and colour; every part of it being as short and tight as decency will allow, and very gaudy. It is exactly the same with that of the Highland women in Scotland; both have the short jacket, the striped petticoat, and the tartan plaid; and both too, in general, have a napkin rolled about their head. The Russian women are, however, far more rich in their attire; nor is gold lace wanting, any more than the art of painting, to complete the Russian belle. The young generation are modernizing these antique vestments; the stiff embroidered napkin is supplanted by one of flowing silk; the jacket and petticoat are of muslin, or other fine stuffs; and the plaid is exchanged for a silk or satin cloak, in the cold season; lined with fur. The richer class of females wear velvet boots. The dress of the higher ranks is after the French and English fashion; and all must have a covering of fur six months in the year. Thus equipped, the prince and the peasant are whirled in their chaises and sledges through the dreary Scythian winter. The sovereigns of Russia are absolute. They were formerly called Grand Dukes, which is still the title of the heir apparent. They afterward assumed the title of Czar, and, in the sequel, that of Emperor. The natives pronounce the word czár like tzar, or zaar; and this, probably, by corruption, from Cæsar, or emperor; from some fancied relation to the Roman emperors; on account of which they also bear the eagle as a symbol of their empire. The first who assumed the title of czar was Basil, son of Basilides, who freed his country from its subjection to the Tartars, about the year 1470. At the shortest day, the sun rises at Moscow at half past 8, and sets at 23 min. past 3; and on the longest day, this order is reversed.

Rutland, in Queen's County, Leinster. Rutland, in Donegal, Ulster.

RUTLAND, the smallest county of England, about 15 m. in length, and 11 in breadth. It is supposed to have received its name from the red colour of the soil, which, in some parts, is a sort of ruddle, staining the fleeces of the sheep. It is bounded on the W by Leicesters. on the N by Lincolns. and part of Leicesters. and on the E and SE by Lincolns. and Northamptons. It is divided into 5 hundreds, which contain 2 market towns, 53 parishes, 3,325 houses, and 16,380 inhab. The air is very good, and the soil, in general, fertile, yet very various; producing excellent corn, and feeding a great number of cattle and sheep. The principal rivers are the Welland and the Guash, or Wash, besides which, it is extremely well watered by a number of small rivers and brooks, which fall into them, and which afford plenty of excellent fish. Oakham is the county town.

RYE, a handsome, well-built, and populous town in Sussex, an appendage to the Cinque Port of Hastings, containing 464 houses and 2,681 inhab. Its port, however, had been long so choked up with sand, that it could only admit small vessels. This inconvenience was remedied by an Act of Parliament, in 1761, and the harbour restored, by letting the sea and tides through a canal up to Winchelsea Wall, so that vessels of 300 tons burden may now ride here with safety and ease. It exports corn, malt, hops, timber, and wool, as also kettles, cannon, chimney-backs, &c. from the iron-works at Bakely, 4 m. to the NW and at Breed; and its fishermen send considerable supplies of soles, turbot, plaice, &c. to the London markets. It is situated on the edge of a cliff (where a modern battery has been planted to annoy privateers) at the mouth of the Rother, with a delightful prospect of the sea, 34 m. SAINTES, a town in the depart. of Lower Charente; before the revolution the capital of Saintonge, and the see of a bishop. Here are several monuments of antiquity, of which the most famous are the amphitheatre, the aqueducts, and the triumphal arch on the bridge over its river. It is seated on an eminence, near the Charente, 26 m. SE of Rochefort, and 262 SW of Paris.

Saintfield, in Down, Ulster; the linen manufacture is carried on here. St. John's, in Roscommon, Connaught. St. John's Town, in Longford, Leinster. St. Kennis, in Kilkenny, Leinster. St. Mullins, in Carlow, Leinster.

SAINTONGE, a ci-devant province of France, S of Poitou and Aunis, extending about 70 m. in length, and 30 in breadth. The river Charente runs through the middle of it, and renders it one of the most fertile tracts in France; and they make the best salt here in Europe. It now forms the depart. of Lower Charente.

SAL, or SALT, an island of Africa, one of the Cape de Verds, about 40 m. in circumf. It is so called from the great quantity of beautiful salt made here, which is the chief production of the island, and is procured from the salt ponds, by the crystallization of the seawater, which overflows part of it from time to time. Notwithstanding its apparent barrenness, bearing no trees nor verdure, except shrubs, it breeds an incredible number of goats, some asses, a few small horses, and a great variety of sea-fowls. A prodigious number of tortoises also lay their eggs here, which alone would be sufficient to maintain a number of inhab.; yet all authors agree, that the island is desolate and desert. It is 300 m. W of the coast of Africa. Lat. 16 39 N lon. 21 59 W.

SALA, or SALBERG, a town of Westmanland, 28 m. W of Upsal.

SALAMANCA, an ancient, large, rich, and populous city of Leon, in Spain, with a famous university, consisting of 24 handsome colleges. The structure, called the Schools, where all sorts of sciences are taught, is very large and curious, and is built of free-stone. The university has 61 professorships, without reckoning the anatomical theatre, and the college of the Hebrew, Greek, and Latin languages. There were formerly 7000 students, sent from all parts of Europe; and there are now upwards of 4000. The scholars are all clothed like priests, having their heads shaved, and caps thereon. Salamanca has a large public square, and some fine fountains, but the streets are narrow and dirty. The cathedral is one of the handsomest in Spain, and has a fine steeple. There are also 25 parish churches, 39 convents, 6 hospitals, and about 7000 houses. It is seated partly in a plain, and partly on three hills, being surrounded by walls, without which is a fine Roman causeway, on the river Formes, over which it has a bridge of 25 arches, and 300 paces long, built by the Romans. It is 37 m. SE of Miranda, and 90 NW of Madrid.

SALAMANCA, a town of Yucatan, in Mexico, 150 m S of Merida.

SALIS, a town of Russia, 24 m. NW of Volmar.

SALISBURY, or NEW SARUM, a large and ancient city of Wilts, of which it is the capital. It is situated in a chalky soil, almost surrounded by the Avon and its contributory rivers, and is rendered particularly clean by a small running stream flowing through every street. It has a fine cathedral, crowned by a spire, the most regular and elegant Gothic structure in the kingdom, built in the form of a lanthorn, 410 feet high. Its windows are said to be as many in number as there are days in a year. The town-hall is a handsome building, and stands in a spacious market-place. Here are manufactures of flannels, linseys, druggets, Salisbury whites, parchment, hardware, bone lace, and cutlery. It has a neat theatre, and contains 1533 houses, and 8243 inhab. The navigation from Christchurch comes within two m. of this city. It is 21 m. NE of Southampton, and 83 W by S of London. Markets on Tues. and Sat. Fairs on January 6th Tues. after Epiphany, Lady Day, and the Mon. before it, Whit. Tues., Thurs. after Michaelmas, October 2nd, and December 29th.

SALISBURY, a town in the respective States of Connecticut, Massachusetts, Maryland, N. Carolina, and the Delaware in N. America.

SALISBURY CRAIG, a hill on the S side of the city of Edinburgh, chiefly remarkable for a great precipice of solid rock, about a mile in length, and, in some parts, 100 feet high, which passes with some regularity along its brow.

Salisbury-Hall, Essex, near Walthamstow.

SALISBURY PLAIN, in Wilts, extends 25 m. E of Winchester, and 28 W to Weymouth, and in some places it is from 35 to 40 m. in breadth. There are so many cross roads in it, and so few houses to take direction from, that Thomas, the eighth earl of Pembroke, planted a tree at the end of each mile-stone from hence to Shaftesbury, as a guide to travellers. That part of it, which lies about the city, is a chalky down, like East Kent. The other parts are noted for feeding numerous flocks of sheep, some of which contain from 3000 to 5000 each, and the farmers hereabouts have frequently two or three such flocks. By folding the sheep upon the lands, after they are turned up with the plough, they become very fruitful, and bear very good wheat and other grain. In this plain, beside the famous Stonehenge, are traces of many Romish and British camps, sepulchres, &c.

Salkelds, Great and Little, Cumberl. N of Penrith, are washed by the Eden. At the latter there is a circle of stones, 77 in number, each of them 10 feet high, and before them, at the entrance, stands a single one, which is 15 feet high. They are thought to have been a Druidical work, and are called, by the country people, Long Meg and her daughters. Within the circles are 2 heaps of stones, under which dead bodies are supposed to be buried.

SALLENS, a neat and new-built town of Kildare in Leinster, seated on the banks of the Grand Canal, 14 m. from Dublin.

SALLEE, an ancient and considerable town of Benihassen, in the kingdom of Fez. Its harbour was formerly one of the best in the country, but now, on account of a bar that lies across it, ships of 200 tons burden are forced to unload their guns and ballast before they can enter it. There are docks to build ships, but they are seldom used, for want of skill and materials; and as the sand insensibly continues to accumulate, it is probable that, very soon, only vessels with oars will be able to enter the river. The road can only be frequented in the fine season, from the beginning of April to the end of September, for when the wind blows from the SSW (which seldom, however, happens, but in winter) it is no longer safe; and, besides, the shifting of the sands of the bar, renders the passage extremely difficult. Here is a battery of 24 pieces of cannon, which commands the road, and a redoubt which defends the entrance of the river. It is a large place, divided into the Old and New Towns, by the river Guero. It has long been infamous for its pirates, which make prizes of all the Christians' ships that come in their way, except there is a treaty to the contrary. It is seated on the river Sallee, formed by the union of two smaller streams, (the Guero and the Satta) 42 m. W of Mequinez. Lat. 34 0 N lon. 6 31 W.

SALO, a town in the Bresciano, seated near the Lake Garda, 14 m. NE of Brescia.

SALOBREANA, a sea-port of Grenada, in Spain, with a strong castle, in which the Moorish kings formerly kept their treasure. It carries on a great trade in sugar and fish, and is seated on a rock, 12 m. SE of Almunecar, and 36 S of Grenada.

Salomon's Bridge, Sussex, NW of Petworth. Salom Wood, Hunts, near Old Weston.

SALON, a town in the depart. of the Mouths of the Rhone, seated on the canal of Craponne, 18 m. NW of Aix.

SALONA, anciently called AMPHISSA, a reduced sea-port town of the late Venetian Dalmatia, celebrated as the retreat of the emperor Domitian. It was anciently a very considerable place, its ruins showing that it was 10 m. in circumf. It is 6 m. N of Spalatro.

SALONA, a town of Livadia, with a bishop's see. The inhab. are partly Greeks and partly Turks; but the Jews are not suffered to live here. It is seated on a mountain, on the top of which is a citadel, nearly 22 m. NW of Livadia.

SALONICHI, formerly called THESSALONICA, a sea-port of Turkey, in Europe, and the principal town in Macedonia, with an archbishop's see. It is large, populous, and rich, being about 10 m. in circumf. It is a place of considerable trade, which is carried on principally by the Greek Christians and the Jews, the former of whom form 30 churches, and the latter as many synagogues. Here is a triumphal arch, almost entire, erected in honour of the Emperor Antoninus, with several churches of extraordinary beauty, now converted into Turkish mosques. That of St. Demetrius has in it above a thousand pillars of jasper, porphyry, &c. The principal merchandise is silk. It is seated at the bottom of a gulf of the same name, partly on the top, and partly on the side of a hill, near the river Varda, 50 m. NNE of Larissa, and 270 W of Constantinople. Lat. 40 41 N lon. 22 53 E.

SALOP. See SHROPSHIRE.

SALORNAY, a town of France, in depart. of Saon and Loire, 16 m. NW of Mazon.

Salperton, or Cold Salperton, Gloucesters. 4 m. from Northleach.

SALSAS, a town, castle, and lake, in the depart. of the Eastern Pyrenees, 10 m. N of Perpignan.

SALSETTE, an island of Hindostan, lying off the coast of Concan, about 10 m. N of Bombay. It is about 120 m. in circumf. and is fertile in rice, fruits, and sugar-canes, besides which they have a trade in dried fish. It has subterraneous temples, cut out of the live rock, in the manner of those of Elephanta. It is only separated from Bombay by a channel ½ m. over, which is fordable at low water. In 1750, the Mahrattas took it from the Portuguese; and in 1774, the English took it by assault from the Mahrattas, and have kept it ever since agreeably to treaty. It is a most desirable acquisition to the East India Company, as the settlement of Bombay possessed no territory beyond the small island on which it is situated, and depended on foreign supplies for subsistence.

SALSONA, a town of Catalonia.

Salston, Cambridges. in a vale near Gogmagog-Hills. Salt, Staffords. near Ingestre.

SALTA, a town of Tucuman, in S. America, which sends large quantities of corn, wine, meat, hides, and other commodities to most parts of Peru. It contains about 400 houses, 2 churches, and 4 monasteries. The inhab. have frequent wars with the Indians. They have about 500 men that bear arms, with thrice that number of slaves. It is 50 m. S of St. Salvador. Lat. 25 20 S, lon. 66 30 W.

SALTASH, a borough town of Cornwall, trading principally in malt and beer. It consists of 3 streets, which are washed clean by every shower of rain, containing 160 houses. The harbour is capable of receiving vessels of any burden. Here is a ferry over the Tamar to Plymouth Dock, the inhab. of which generally come to this market by water, rather than go to Plymouth by land. It is seated on the descent of a steep hill, at the mouth of the Hamoaze, 4½ m. NW of Plymouth, and 220 WSW of London. Market on Sat.

Saltbox, Sussex, near Chichester. Saltburn, Yorks. in Cleveland, near Rodliff. Saltby, Leicesters. near Belvoir.

SALTCOATS, a sea-port of Ayrshire, containing about 2325 inhab. It is one of the principal watering places in the county, (furnishing accommodations in the season for 3 or 400 strangers,) has (and has long had) a manufacture of salt, of which about 2362 bolls are annually made here; a trade in coals, of which to the average amount of 23,000 tons are dug yearly near the town; a manufacture of sailcloth, a rope-yard, and docks for building ships, not only for this port, but for other towns. It is situated on the Clyde, 10 m. NNW of Ayr, and 22 SW of Glasgow.

Saltcote, Cumberl. between Newton Marsh and Rabycote.

SALTEES, two small islands on the coast of Wexford, in Leinster, about 3½ leag. W SW of Carnsore Point.

It tinges the stones near it with a red colour, and when boiled, has produced a great quantity of bay salt. Saltwick, Northumberl. near Stannington. Saltwood, Kent, 1 m. NW of Hythe.

SALTZBURG, a well-fortified city of Bavaria, capital of a territory of the same name, under the archbishop of Saltzburg, who is a sovereign prince. It is populous and well-built, although the streets are narrow and ill-paved. The archbishop's palace is a superb structure, and has a magnificent garden adorned with statues and planted with uncommon trees. This is his summer-house; but that for winter contains 163 apartments all richly furnished, without reckoning the halls and galleries. The university partly depends on the Benedictine monks, who have a fine library in their monastery. In 1737, a separate college was built here for young gentlemen. The cathedral is built of freestone and marble, and contains five organs. Near Saltzburg are some considerable salt-works. It is seated on the river Saltz, 45 m. S by W of Passaw, and 140 W SW of Vienna.

SALTZBURG, THE ARCHBISHOPRIC OF, a county of Germany, W of Austria, S of Upper Bavaria, and N of Carinthia. It is a mountainous country, but pretty fertile, and contains mines of copper, silver, and iron. No manner of grain is sown here, but hay of a peculiar goodness is produced in every part. Here are considerable manufactures of steel and brass, as appears from the astonishing number of swords, sabres, muskets, cannon, &c. which are to be seen in the armories all over the country. In the archbishopric are 6 cities, and 25 market towns. It extends 100 m. in length, and 60 in breadth. The principal town is of the same name. In 1732, above 30,000 Lutheran Saltzburghers withdrew with their effects, from the archbishopric, dispersing themselves in the other Protestant countries, and even the British colonies in America.

SALVADOR, a town of Congo, capital of the country of Pemba, with a large palace, where the king resides, and a Portuguese bishop. It contains several churches, and about 40,000 inhab. of whom 4000 are white. The Portuguese live in a quarter by themselves. It is seated on a craggy mountain, in lat. 5 50 S and lon. 15 39 E.

SALVADOR, ST. a large, populous, and handsome city of Brasil, formerly the residence of the governor, and containing several religious houses. The inhab. who are described as voluptuous, proud, ignorant, and superstitious, carry on a considerable trade. The houses are two or three stories high, and the walls thick and strong, being built of stone. The streets are generally large and straight; yet most of them have so steep an ascent, that they are impracticable to wheel-carriages. Here are also many gardens, full of a great variety of fruit-trees, herbs, and flowers. The chief commodities for exportation, are sugar, tobacco, woad for dyers, raw hides, tallow, train-oil, Brasil wood, balsam of copaiva, ipecacuanha, and other drugs. It is seated on an eminence, 100 fathoms in height, formed by the E side of the Bay of All-Saints, and the harbour is just below it. Lat. 12 45 S lon. 40 10 W.

SALZWEDEL, a town of Brandenburgh, 68 m. SE of Hamburg.

SAMAR, or TANDAY, one of the Philippine Islands, near the SE extremity of Luzon, from which it is separated by a narrow strait. It is about 320 m. in circumference, and is full of craggy mountains, among which, however, are many valleys, extremely fertile in rice, yams, cocoa, gaby, (a root so called), pepper, honey, wax, sugar-canes, cabbages, Chinese oranges, lemons, figs, and other kinds of fruit, little known in Europe. The woods swarm with birds of almost every description, particularly the common fowl, with shorter legs than ours; among which is also a very small bird, of the diminutive size of the wasp, with colours peculiarly vivid and beautiful, consisting of yellow, mixed with red and blue. Many kinds of monkeys, one of which is remarkably large, roebucks, wild buffaloes, and other quadrupeds, abound in the woods. The iron tree, ebony, and dying wood, grow in every part of the island, and gold-dust is found in its more interior regions. The natives, at least on the sea-coast, were formerly Mahometans, but the missionary Jesuits have converted them to the religion and allegiance of Spain. Lat. 12 15 N.

SAMARANG, a town on the NE coast of the island of Java.

SAMARCAND, or SARMACAND, (called also MAWARALNAHR), supposed to be the MARAKANDUS of the ancients, a very large and well-peopled city of Asia, capital of a kingdom of the same name, in the country of the Usbeck Tartars, with a famous academy of sciences, to which the Mahometans resort to study, from all the neighbouring countries. Many of the houses are built of stone, and it is fortified with strong bulwarks of earth. It was formerly the seat of Tamerlane the Great, as it now is of a Tartar prince, and carries on a great trade with Persia, Hindostan, Chinese Tartary, &c. The silk paper made here is in great request throughout the East. The soil produces pears, apples, raisins, and melons of an exquisite taste. It is pleasantly seated on the river Sogde, 150 m. E by N of Bokhara. Lat. 39 50 N lon. 63 20 E.

SAMBALLAS, several islands of America, on the N coast of the isthmus of Darien. None of them are inhabited, but they are all claimed by the Spaniards. In the long channel between the Samballas and the isthmus, extending from Point Samballas to the Gulf of Darien, the sea is navigable from one end to the other, affording good anchorage and shelter, let the wind blow from what quarter it will.

Samborn, Warwicks. in parish of Great Coughton.

SAMERE, a river of the Netherlands, which rises in the depart. of Aisne, and passing by Landrecy, Maubeuge, Charleroy, &c. falls into the Maese at Namur.

Samford, Dorsets. NE of Evershot. Samford, Somersets. SW of Bridgewater. Samford Arundel, S W of Wellington, and Samford-Bret, Somersets. SW of Quantock-Hills. Samford Courtenay, Devons. SAMLAND, a province of Prussia, bounded on the N and W by the Baltic, on the E by Lithuania. It abounds with forests and lakes. Koningsberg is the capital.

Samlesbury, Lancas. 5 m. NW of Blackburn, near a navigable canal, which communicates with all the late inland navigations. It contains 1500 manufacturers.

SAMMADE, a town in the depart. of Landes, 9 m. SSE of St. Sever.

Samnet, or Samesbouse, Northumb. W of Holy Island. Sammons, Essex, between Thorndons and Tilbury.

SAMOGITIA, a province of Poland, S of the duchy of Courland, and E of the Baltic, about 150 m. in length, and 90 in breadth. It is full of forests and very high mountains, which feed a great number of cattle, and produce a large quantity of honey. There are also very active horses, in high esteem. The inhab. are accounted clownish, but honest; and a singular custom is said to prevail here, that no young woman is allowed to go out in the night, without a candle in her hand, and two bells at her girdle. Rosienne and Medniki are the principal places.

SAMORIA, a town of Hungary, 8 m. SE of Presburg.

SAMOS, an island of the Grecian Archipelago, on the coast of Natolia, about 24 m. in length, and 10 in breadth, and extremely fertile. The inhab. live at their ease, their taxation by the Turks being moderate. They are clothed in the Turkish manner, except a red coif, and their hair hanging down their backs, with plates of silver, or block-tin, fastened to the ends. They have abundance of melons, lentils, kidney-beans, and excellent muscadine grapes. They have white figs, four times as big as the common sort, but not so well tasted. Their silk is very fine, and the honey and wax admirable. This island abounds with partridges, woodcocks, snipes, thrushes, wood-pigeons, turtle-doves, wheat-ears, and excellent poultry. They have iron mines, and most of the soil is of a rusty colour: they have also emery-stone, and all the mountains are of white marble. The inhab. are about 12,000, who are almost all Greeks, but the monks and priests occupy most part of the island. They have a bishop, who resides at Corea.

SAMOTHRACIA, or SAMONDRAKI, a small island of the Archipelago, between Stalimene and the coast of Romania. It is 17 m. in circumference, and pretty well cultivated. Lat. 40 34 N lon. 25 17 E.

SAMOYEDES, THE, once a numerous nation of Tartary in Asia, but now strangely dispersed; some of them are found in small detached bodies among the mountains which lie to the W of Lake Baikal: others are supposed to be within the Chinese frontiers; while others are scattered among the deserts which extend along the Frozen Ocean; and some nearly as far to the W as Archangel. They have no longer the use of horses, because the climate of their present country renders their subsistence impossible; but they have still preserved the manners of a pastoral people, and retain the use of moveable habitations, with which they wander from place to place. They neither have, nor appear ever to have had, any kind of regular government. They have a large head, a flat face, high cheek bones, small eyes, a flat nose, a wide mouth, a yellow complexion, large ears, straight harsh black hair, a short thick neck, little or no beard, and short legs.

Sampford-Peverel, Devons. by the river Leman, NE of Tiverton; and Sampford-Shiney, SE of Tavistock. Sampson-Grange, Kent, near Margate. Samsbury, Lancas. on the Ribble, NE of Preston.

SANDVLIET, a town of Brabant, 11 m. NNW of Antwerp.

Sandwal, Staffords. 5 m. from Wolverhampton.

SANDWICH, a cinque-port and borough town of Kent, consisting of 1300 houses, most of them old and built with wood, though there are a few new ones built with brick and flints. The members properly belonging to it, as a cinque-port, are Fordwich, Deal, Walmer, Ramsgate, Reculver, Stonar and Sar. It was once a considerable sea-port, but is now much decayed, on account of the river Stour, on which it is seated, being so choked up with sand as to admit only small vessels. By these, however, it exports, chiefly to the London markets, corn, malt, the largest and sweetest carrots, fruits, and seeds, the soil being remarkably good for all sorts of garden stuff. It is 13 m. E of Canterbury, and 67 E by S of London. Markets on Wed. and Sat.

SANDWICH ISLANDS, in the N. Pacific Ocean, are 11 in number, and extend in lat. from 18 54 to 22 15 N and in lon. from 150 54 to 160 24 W. They are called by the natives Owhyhee, Mowee, Ranai, Morotoi, Tahoorowa, Woahoo, Atooi, Neeheeheow, Oreehoua, Morotinne, and Tahoora, all inhabited except the two last. The climate of these islands differs very little from that of the W. Indies in the same latitude, except that it is more temperate; and there are no traces of those violent winds and hurricanes, which render the stormy months in the W. Indies so dreadful. There is also more rain at the Sandwich Isles, where the mountainous parts being generally enveloped in a cloud, successive showers fall in the inland parts, with fine weather and a clear sky on the sea-shore. Hence it is, that few of those inconveniences, to which many tropical countries are subject, either from heat or moisture, are experienced here. The winds, in the winter months, are generally from ESE to NE. The vegetable productions are nearly the same as those of the other islands in this ocean; but the taro root is here of a superior quality. The bread-fruit trees thrive not in such abundance as in the rich plains of Otaheite, but produce double the quantity of fruit. The sugar-canes are of a very unusual size, some of them measuring 11½ inches in circumf. and having 14 feet eatable. There is also a root of a brown colour, shaped like a yam, and from 6 to 10 pounds in weight, the juice of which is very sweet, of a pleasant taste, and is an excellent substitute for sugar. The quadrupeds are hogs, dogs, and rats; the fowls are of the common sort, and there are other birds beautiful and numerous, though not various. Goats, pigs, and European seeds, were left by Captain Cook; but the possession of the goats soon gave rise to a contest between two districts, in which the breed was entirely destroyed. The inhab. are undoubtedly of the same race that possesses the islands S of the equator; and in their persons, language, customs, and manners, approach nearer to the New Zealanders than to their less distant neighbours, either of the Society or Friendly Islands. They are, in general, above the middle size, and strong; they walk gracefully, run nimbly, and are capable of bearing great fatigue. Many of both sexes are said to have fine open countenances; and the women, in particular, have good eyes and teeth, with a sweetness and sensibility of look, that render them very engaging. There is one peculiarity characteristic of every part of this nation, that even in the handsomest faces there is a fulness of the nostril, without any flatness or spreading of the nose. They suffer their beards to grow, and wear their hair after various fashions. The dress of both men and women nearly resembles those of New Zealand, and both sexes wear necklaces of small variegated shells. Tattooing the body is practised by every colony of this nation. The hands and arms of the women are also very neatly marked, and they have the singular custom of tattooing the tip of the tongue. Like the New Zealanders, they have adopted the method of living together in villages, containing from 100 to 200 houses, built pretty closely together, without much order, and having a winding path between them. They are generally flanked, toward the sea, with detached walls, which are meant both for shelter and defence. These walls consist of loose stones, and the inhab. are very dexterous in shifting them suddenly to such places as the direction of the attack may require. In the sides of the hills they have little caves, or retreats, the entrance to which is secured by a fence of the same kind. Some of their houses are large and commodious, from 40 to 50 feet long, and from 20 to 30 broad; while others are mere hovels. Their food consists principally of fish and vegetables, to which they add the flesh of dogs and hogs. The making of canoes, mats, &c. forms the occupation of the men; the women are employed in manufacturing cloth; and the servants are principally engaged in the plantations and fishing. They have various amusements, such as dancing, boxing, wrestling, &c. Their agriculture and navigation bear a great resemblance to those of the South Sea Islands. Their plantations, which are spread over the whole sea-coast, consist of the taro, or eddy-root, and sweet potatoes, with plants of the cloth-tree set in rows. The bottoms of their canoes are of a single piece of wood, hollowed out to the thickness of an inch, and brought to a point at each end. The sides consist of three boards, each about an inch thick, neatly fitted and lashed to the bottom part. Some of their double canoes measure 70 feet in length, 3½ in depth, and 12 in breadth. They make salt in great abundance, and of a good quality. As the islands are not united under one government, wars are frequent among them. The same system of subordination prevails here as at the other islands, the same absolute authority on the part of the chiefs, and the same unresisting submission on the part of the people. The government is monarchical and hereditary. At Owhyhee is a regular society of priests living by themselves, and distinct, in all respects, from the rest of the people. Human sacrifices are here frequent; not only at the commencement of a war, or signal enterprise, but the death of every considerable chief calls for a repetition of these horrid rites. Yet, apart from these observances, they are acknowledged to be of the most mild and affectionate disposition. They live in the utmost harmony and friendship with each other; and in hospitality to strangers they are not exceeded even by the inhab. of the Friendly Islands, when their resentment is not kindled by injury. Their improvements in agriculture, and the perfection of their manufactures, are certainly adequate to the circumstances of their situation, and the natural advantages which they enjoy.

SANPOO. See BURRAMPOOTER.

SANQUHAR, a town or royal borough of Nithsdale, in the county of Dumfries, containing about 2600 inhab. It is chiefly remarkable for its coal trade, (the coals in this and the adjacent parish, supplying a large tract of country), and a manufactory of knit worsted mittens and stockings, both coarse and fine. Here are also some beds of fuller's earth and lime-stone. It is seated on the river Nith, 24 m. NNW of Dumfries.

SANS SOUCI, a town of Brandenburg, near Potsdam, where the king of Prussia has a palace.

SANTA-CLARA, a small island on the coast of Peru, in the Bay of Guyaquil.

SANTA-CRUZ, a town on the SW coast of the Island of Teneriffe, defended by four small forts and several batteries. The town is very irregularly laid out, and contains about 300 houses, built of stone. The principal street is broad; and has more the appearance of a square than a street, with the governor's house at the upper end. Here is a church, and several convents. The road before the town is the principal one in the island for shelter, capacity, and the goodness of its bottom. It lies, however, entirely open to the SE and S winds; but these never continue long, and there is not an instance of a ship's driving from her anchors on shore. Lat. 28 31 N lon. 16 31 W.

SANTA-CRUZ, a town of Suz, on the coast of Morocco, with a large and secure harbour. It is seated on the Cape Aguer, or Ger, in lat. 30 38 N and lon. 10 7 W.

SANTA-FE-DE-BOGOTA, a town of S. America, capital of New Granada, with a university. It is seated on the river Magdalena, in a plentiful country, abounding in corn, cattle, and fruit, with mines of silver in the mountains, 363 m. S of Carthagena. Lat. 4 9 N lon. 73 5 W.

SANTA MARIA, the most southerly of the Azores, about 30 m. in circumf.

SANTANDER, a sea-port of Spain, in Asturia, situated at the foot of a hill; the harbour is defended by two castles, well fortified, and can contain a numerous fleet. A mole advances into the sea; the suburbs are inhabited by fishermen, and the environs are laid out in excellent vineyards and gardens. The packets from England land here.

SANTAREN, a town of Portugal, in Estramadura, containing about 8000 inhab. It is situated in a country very fertile in wheat, wine, and oil, near the river Tajo, 45 m. NNE of Lisbon.

SANTEE, a river of S. Carolina.

SANTEN, a town of Cleves, with fine walks, that run as far as Wesel, from which it is 5 m. distant to the W.

SANTILLANA, a sea-port of Asturias, capital of the eastern part of that province, 70 m. E of Oviedo, and 11 SW of Santander, N of Madrid.

Santon, Cumberl. near Penrith. Santon, Devons. in Branton parish. Santon, Lincolns. near Spittle-in-the-Street.

Santon, Cumberl. in Irton parish. Santon-House, Norf. near Brandon-Ferry.

SANTORIN, or St. ERINI, (anciently called THERA, and CALISTE, or the HANDSOME) an island of the Archipelago, to the N of Candia, and to the SW of Namphio. It is about 8 m. in length, nearly as much in breadth, and almost covered with pumice stone, whence the soil, in general, must be dry and barren; it is, however, greatly improved, by the labour and industry of the inhab. who have turned the most ungrateful spot of ground in the world into a perfect orchard. It affords little wheat, but a great deal of barley and cotton, and a potent spirituous wine, of the colour of Rhenish, in profusion; in the exportation of which, to all parts of the Archipelago, and even as far as Constantinople, as also in the manufactory of cotton, their trade principally consists. Fruit is scarce, except figs, and they have neither oil nor wood. They kill their beeves but once a year, and then they put it in pickle. The inhab. also, who are all Greeks, are about 10,000 in number; though they are subject to the Turks, they chuse their own magistrates. Pyrgos is the capital, besides which there are four towns and five villages. They have but one spring in the island, for which reason they preserve the rain-water in cisterns. Lat. 36 10 N lon. 36 1 E.

SANTOS, a fortified town in the government of St. Paul, in Brasil, situated on a river, about half a league in breadth and five fathoms deep, in a bay of the same name, about 51 leagues SE of St. Paul.

Sapperton, Lincolns. W of Folkingham. Sapy, Upper, Hereford, N of Bromyard. Sapy, Lower, or Sapy-Pitchard, Worcesters. N of Bromyard.

SARACENS, the general name of a people, celebrated some centuries ago, who came originally from the deserts of Arabia: Sarra, in their language, signifying a desert. They were the first disciples of Mahomet, and within 60 years after his death, conquered a considerable part of Asia, Africa, and Europe. They invaded France, and kept possession of Spain, till the year 1511, when they were finally expelled. They also maintained a war in Palestine a long time, against the Western Christians, and, at length, drove them entirely out of it; but now there are no people known by that name, for the descendants of those who conquered Spain are called Moors.

SARAGOSSA, a large, handsome, well-built city of Spain, in Arragon, with an archbishop's see, a university, founded in 1474, and a court of inquisition. It was originally built by the Phœnicians, who called it Salduba; and the Romans sent a colony here in the reign of Augustus, whence it had the name of Cæsar-Augusta, which, by corruption, has been changed into Saragossa. It is adorned with many magnificent buildings, and they reckon here 17 large churches, and 14 handsome monasteries, not to mention others less considerable. The streets are long and broad, but ill-paved and dirty; and the houses are from three to six stories high. The river Ebro runs across the place, dividing it into two; and on its banks is a handsome quay, which serves for a public walk. The Holy street is so large and broad, that it may be taken for a square; and here they have their bull-fights. In this street are the houses of several noblemen's families, particularly that of the viceroy. The cathedral is a large, but irregular Gothic building; but the finest church here is the collegiate one of Nuestra-Signora del Pilar, both for its supposed miraculous image, and also for its valuable treasures. This celebrated Madonna, or image of St. Mary and the infant, stands on a marble pillar, and with its ornaments is immensely rich; the crown being full of precious stones of an inestimable price; scarce any thing is to be seen but gold and jewels, which, with the silver lamps, wax lights, &c. dazzle the beholder's eye, and a vast number of devotees resort in pilgrimage hither. The town-house is a sumptuous structure; in the hall are the pictures of all the kings of Arragon, and in the corner of it a St. George on horseback, with a dragon of white marble under him. Saragossa is seated in a large plain, rendered extremely fertile in fruits, &c. by the winding of the Ebro, on which it stands, and over which it has two bridges, one of stone, the other of wood (which latter has been thought the most beautiful of its kind in Europe), 130 m. nearly W of Barcelona, and 160 NE of Madrid. Lat. 41 53 N lon. 0 28 W.

SARAMON, a town in the depart. of the Gers, 15 m. E of Mirande.

SARATOF, or SARATOVSKI, a government of Russia, divided into 12 districts, of which, that of the same name is the principal. It was formerly a province of Astracan.

SARATOF, a town of Russia, in the government of the same name, seated on the Volga, 392 m. SE of Moscow. Lat. 51 30 N.

SARATOGA, a town of New York, situated on the river Hudson, where, in 1777, a British army, under General Burgoyne, surrendered to the Americans, under General Gates, on a capitulation, whereby they were to have a free passage to Great Britain, on condition of not serving against America, during the war. It is 28 m. N of New York.

SARBRUCK, a town of Treves.

SARBURG, a town in the depart. of Meurthe, seated on the river Saare, 33 m. E of Nanci.

SARCA, a town of the Tyrol, 15 m. W of Trent.

SARDAM, or SAENREDAM, a sea-port of N. Holland, where formerly were vast magazines of timber for building ships, and naval stores, with a prodigious number of shipwrights. Here is still seen the hut in which Peter the Great, czar of Russia, resided, while he worked as a shipwright in this town, and to which the Emperor Alexander paid a visit, in June, 1814, on his return from England, and placed a marble inscription commemorative of the event. It has been said, that the ship-builders of Sardam would undertake, on two months' notice, to build a ship of war every week during the year. Sardam is seated on the river Wye, 6 m. NW of Amsterdam.

SARDINIA, an island of the Mediterranean, 142 m. in length from N to S, and 60 in its mean breadth from E to W. It was originally peopled by the Phœnicians and Greeks, and called by the latter Ichnusa, Sandialotis, and Sardo. The soil is fertile in corn and wine, and there are a great number of oranges, citrons, and olives. On the coast is a fishery for anchovies and coral, of which they send large quantities to Genoa and Leghorn. Beeves and sheep are numerous, as well as horses, which are very good for labour and the road. They are fed in the little islands about it, which abound in game; and in that of Asnaria are great numbers of turtles. The air is reckoned very unhealthy, from the marshy land. The inhabitants were formerly accounted rude and barbarous, and the Romans banished their state prisoners to this island; but they are much more civilized since, and enjoyed great liberty, till an inquisition was established at Sassari. As the inhabitants are not very industrious, the land is not sufficiently cultivated; nor do they pay much attention to trade. It contains mines of silver, lead, sulphur, and alum; and they make a good deal of salt. In 1708, this island was taken by the English for Charles III. and allotted to the emperor by the treaty of Utrecht, in 1713; but, in 1720, it was ceded to the duke of Savoy, as an equivalent for Sicily. The royal revenue is inconsiderable, after the charges of the army and civil officers are deducted. The king of Sardinia keeps his court at Turin, the capital of his Piedmontese territories; but he has a viceroy at Cagliari, which is the capital of this island.

SARDO, or SART, a decayed town of Turkey in Asia, in Natolia. It was formerly called Sardis, and was capital of Lydia, and the seat of the famous king Crœsus. It now contains only a few poor huts. However, here is a large caravansary, where there are handsome lodgings for travellers, it lying in the great road from Smyrna to Aleppo, and the Turks have a mosque, which was formerly a Christian church. The inhabitants are now almost all shepherds, who feed their flocks in the neighbouring plains. There are also a few Christians, who employ themselves in gardening. It is about 30 m. ENE of Smyrna.

SARDOAL, a town of Portugal in Estremadura, 3 m. N of Abranta.

Sardon, Great and Little, Staffords. SW of Cank.

SAREPTA, a town of Russia, in the government of Saratof.

Saresden, Oxfords. in Churchill parish.

SARGA, a town of France, in the depart. of Loire and Cher, 3 m. SW of Montdoubleau.

SARGANS, a town of Zurich, Switzerland, capital of a mountainous, but fertile county of the same name, about 15 m. in extent every way. It is governed by a bailiff, sent by the eight cantons alternately. The inhabitants are partly Calvinists and partly papists. It is situated on the top of a hill, near some mineral springs, 45 m. ESE of Zurich.

SARGEL, a sea-port of Tremesen, seated on the sea-coast, 25 m. from Algiers. Lat. 36 30 N lon. 2 15 W.

SARGUEMINE, a town in the depart. of Moselle, seated on the river Saré, 9 m. N of Sarbruck.

SARK, or SERK, a little island, on, or near the coast of France, about 2 m. long, and nearly as much wide, and containing about 300 inhab. The air is serene and remarkably healthful, and the soil, though generally hot and sandy, affords all necessaries for its inhabitants, particularly apples, of which they make excellent cyder, turnips, carrots, and other roots, with most kinds of grain. Their pasture, though short, is exceedingly sweet, and therefore they have very fine mutton; they have also milk and butter, but their cheese generally comes from England. Ducks, mallards, woodcocks, teal, &c. abound here, and at some seasons, the cliff-pigeons almost cover the island. Of rabbits they have great plenty, and also a variety of sea-fish. The only manufacture of the island is knitting of stockings, gloves, waistcoats, with which they trade to Bristol and some of the western ports, and return with necessaries, having several small vessels for that purpose.

SARK, LITTLE, a very small island, situated a little to the S of Sark.

SARK, a river which rises in the E part of Dumfriess. and, for several miles, forms the boundary between England and Scotland. It is formed of two branches, the White and Black, and runs into the Eden, below Milner-Hill, or about 4 m. below Carlisle.

SARLAT, a town in the depart. of Dordogne, 27 m. SE of Perigueux.

SARAT LOUIS, a fortified town in the depart. of Moselle, seated in a peninsula formed by the river Sare, 32 m. ENE of Mentz.

Sæmesfield, and Sarnesfield-Coffen, Herefords. near Weobley. Sarney, N. and S. Gloucesters. near Cirencester. Sarnfolgrin, Caernarvons.

SARNO, a town of Principato Citra, 10 m. NW of Salerno. The environs produce, annually, about 4000 pounds weight of the finest and best wound silk in the kingdom.

SARNO, or SAFATA, a small river of Naples, which rises near a town of the same name, and runs into the Mediterranean, about 10 m. SSE of Naples.

SAROS, a town of Hungary, noted for a poisonous spring in its neighbourhood. It is 6 m. NW of Eperies.

SARPEN, a town of Christiansand, in Norway, near which is a dreadful cataract or waterfall, the noise of which is plainly heard at the distance of 20 m. It drives 17 mills, and is 10 m. WSW of Frederickstadt.

Sarre, or Sarre-street, Kent, in the Isle of Thanet. Sarret, Herts, N of Watford.

SARRE, a river of France, which rises in the depart. of the Vosges, and passing by Sarbruck, Sar Louis, Sarbruck in Treves, falls into the Moselle, a little above Treves.

SARREAL, a town of Catalonia, seated on the river Francoli. In the neighbourhood are quarries of alabaster, so transparent that they glaze their windows with it.

SARRI, a town of Corsica, 11 m. N of Ajaccio.

SARSANA, a town of Genoa, situated on the river Magra, 45 m. ESE of Genoa.

SARSINA, a town of Romagna.

SARTE, a depart. of France, S of that of Orne, and E of that of Mayenne. It takes its name from a river which rises near Sees, in the depart. of Orne, and passing by Alençon, Frenay le Vicomte, Le Mans, &c. where it becomes navigable, joins the Mayenne near Angiers, 4 m. below which the united streams fall into the Loire. The capital is Mans.

SARUM, NEW. See SALISBURY.

SARUM, OLD, an ancient borough of Wilts, which, though now reduced to a single farm-house, still sends two members to parliament; these are chosen by the proprietors of certain adjacent lands. It once covered the summit of a high steep hill; but there is nothing now to be seen of it but some small ruins of a castle, with a double intrenchment, and a deep ditch. The tracts of the streets and cathedral may be pretty distinctly traced out by the different colour of the corn growing where once the city stood. It is about 1 m. N of Salisbury.

SARVERDEN, a town in the depart. of Moselle, seated on the river Sare, 10 m. NNW of Sarbruck.

SARVITZA, a town of Macedonia in Turkey.

SARWAR, a town and county of Hungary, 48 m. SE of Vienna.

SARZANA, a city of the Genoese, 50 m. SE of Genoa.

SASSA, a town of Naples, 7 m. SW of Aquila.

SASSARI, a city of Sardinia, capital of the territory of Logari, and the occasional residence of the viceroy. It contains near 30,000 inhab. and is famous for a fountain called Rossel, which is said to be much more magnificent than the best at Rome. The inhabitants, indeed, have the following proverb, Chi none vidde Rossel, non vidde mondo: he that has not seen Rossel, has not seen the world. It is seated in a plain, 6 m. NNE of Algiers, in lat. 40 46 N and lon. 8 39 E.

SASSELO, a town of Genoa, 10 m. N of Savona.

SAS-VAN-GHENT, a town of Dutch Flanders, small, but regularly fortified. It has 5 sluices, and is seated on a canal, which communicates with the Scheld and with the Ghent, 8 m. N of that city.

SASSUOLO, a town of Modena.

SATABAGO, a province of Asiatic Turkey, S of Imiretta.

SATALIA, or ANTALIA, a sea-port of Caramania, large, strong, and divided into three towns. Here is a superb mosque, which was formerly a Christian church. The country about it is fertile; and the citrons and oranges are excellent. The inhabitants trade in wool, cotton, goats' hair, agaric, gum-tragacanth, opium and bees' wax. It is 134 m. S of Kiutaga, and 265 S by E of Constantinople. Lat. 37 1 N lon. 32 21 E.

Saterleigh, Devons. on the Bray, SW of South-Moulton. Saterthwaite, Lancash. in the NW angle of it, between the rivers Fosse and Thuston.

SATGONG, or SATAGONG, an inconsiderable village in the soubah of Bengal. In the 16th century, however, it was a large, trading city, in which the European traders had their factories. It is seated on a creek of the Hooghly River, about 4 m. NW of Hooghly.

SATRIANO, a town of Naples, 8 m. S of Squillace.

Satridge, Herts, NE of Thunbridge. Satron, Yorks. E of Swaledale.

SAVE, a river in Germany, which rises in Carniola, and runs into the Danube, at or near Belgrade.

Savernake Forest, Wilts, SE of Marlborough, about 12 m. in compass, and the only privileged forest for hunting that is possessed by a subject. It is plentifully stocked with large deer, and adorned with many delightful walks and vistas, (cut through the woods and coppices), eight of which meet in a point near the centre.

SAVERNAY, a town in the depart. of the Lower Loire, 18 m. NW of Nantes.

SAVERNDROOG, a fortress of Mysore, in Hindostan, situated on the top of a vast rock, rising half a mile in perpendicular height, from a base of above 8 m. in circumf.; and divided at the summit by a chasm, which forms it into two hills. These, having each their peculiar defences, form two citadels capable of being maintained independently of the lower works. Walls, cross-walls, and barriers have also been erected at every accessible place. On Dec. 10th, 1791, Colonel Stuart encamped within 3 m. of the rock, and on the morning of the 21st, at 11 o'clock, the British soldiery made themselves masters of the fortress which had hitherto been considered as impregnable. It is 18 m. W of Bangalore, and 47 NE of Seringapatam.

SAVERDUN, a town in the depart. of Arriege, seated on the river Arriege, 15 m. NW of Mirepoix.

SAVERNE, or ZABERNE, a town in the depart. of Lower Rhine, 18 m. NW of Strasburgh, and 120 E of Paris.

SAVERNE DU RHINE, or RHEINZABERN, a town of Spire, 21 m. SSW of Manheim.

SAXMUNDHAM, a town of Suff. containing 200 pretty good houses, but the streets are narrow and not paved. It has no particular manufacture, and it is situated upon a hill, between Woodbridge and Yoxford, in the road to Halesworth, 19 m. NE of Ipswich, and 89 NE of London. Market on Thurs.

SAXONY, UPPER, one of the nine circles of the German empire. It is bounded on the E by Prussia, and a part of Poland and Silesia; on the S by Bohemia, and Franconia; on the W by the circle of the Upper Rhine, and that of Lower Saxony; and on the N by the Baltic, and the circle of Lower Saxony. The elector of Saxony was formerly the director, but as the whole circle now is mostly Lutheran, eight assessors are deputed to the imperial chambers, of which the elector of Saxony names two, the elector of Brandenburgh two, and the other states name the rest. It comprehends the electorate of Saxony, or Saxony Proper, the principality of Anhalt, the landgravate of Thuringia, the marche of Brandenburgh, and the duchy of Pomerania; and these are subdivided into many districts.

SAXONY, LOWER, one of the nine circles of the German empire, is bounded on the N by the Baltic and the duchy of Sleswick; on the W by the German Ocean and the circle of Westphalia; and on the S and E by the circle of the Upper Rhine, and the circle of Upper Saxony. The directors of this circle are the dukes of Magdeburgh, Bremen, and of Brunswick-Lunenburgh. It comprehends the archbishopric of Magdeburg, the bishopric of Hildesheim, the archbishopric of Bremen, the bishoprics of Halberstadt, Schwerin, Ratzburgh, Lubec, and Sleswick; the duchies of Brunswick, Lunenburgh, Lawenburgh, and Mecklenburgh: the principality of Verden; the counties of Reinstein and Bauburg; the free cities of Hamburg, Lubec, Goslan, Mulhausen, and Northausen.

SAXONY, PROPER, or THE ELECTORATE OF SAXONY, in the circle of Upper Saxony, composed of the duchy of Saxony, the greater part of the margraviate of Misnia, a part of the Vogtland, on the N part of Thuringia, Lusatia, and a part of the county of Henneburgh. It is about 75 m. in length, and 62 in breadth, is cut into two unequal parts by the river Elbe, and is a very fertile and trading country, abounding in mines.

Saxted, Suff. near Framlingham. Saxthorp, Norf. NW of Alesham. Saxton, Yorks. near Aberforth.

SAYA, a town of the Island of Cuba, 15 m. SW of Spirito Sancto.

SAYBROOK, a town of Connecticut, in N. America, originally built by the agent of Lord Viscount Say and Seal. It is situated on the W side of the river Connecticut, near its mouth, 15 m. W of New London.

SAYCOCK, one of the islands of Japan, divided from Niphon by a narrow channel. The Dutch factors are permitted to reside in the little island of Disnia, which is on the W side of it. Lat. 34 0 N lon. 132 28 E.

Scalm-Park, Yorks. between Sherborn and Selby.

Scalmarlin-Rocks, in Down, Ulster. They are situated in Donaghadee-Harbour, and, though so smooth and flat that vessels seldom suffer on them, are rather dangerous, being overflowed by the tide.

SCALP, a curious chasm, or fissure, in a ridge of mountains, 5 m. from Dublin, on the road to the Dargle and Waterfall. It seems as if, by an extraordinary convulsion in nature, the mountain had been cracked across, and torn asunder, prodigious heaps of stones, of enormous size, having tumbled down into the rocky chasm. It forms one of the most striking curiosities in Ireland. By breaking down and levelling the prominences of the prodigious piles of massive rocks in the bottom, an easy and good road has been insinuated through the rugged fissure.

Scamelsby, Lincolns. N of Horncastle. Scampton, 4 m. from Lincoln.

SCAMINA, a town of Livadia, 20 m. N of Athens.

SCANDAROON. See ALEXANDRETTA.

SCARA, a town of W. Gothland, formerly the residence of the kings of Gothland. It is seated S of the lake Wenner, 66 m. NE of Gottenburg.

SCARBOROUGH, an ancient, large, and well-built town, in the N. Riding of Yorks. sheltered from the N and NE winds by a high steep rock, near which are huge craggy cliffs, almost inaccessible. On the top of this rock, is a large green plain, of about 19 acres, with a little well of fresh water springing out of the rock. A noble large castle was erected here by King Henry II. which is now mostly in ruins. This place is greatly frequented on account of its spa well, the waters of which are a compound of vitriol, iron, alum, nitre, and salt, and are both purgative and diuretic, as also for sea-bathing, on which account it is much improved of late years in the number and beauty of its buildings. The spring was under the cliff, part of which fell down in December, 1737, and the water was lost; but in clearing away the ruins to rebuild the wharf, it was recovered, to the great joy of the town. Here are assemblies and balls, in the same manner as at Tunbridge. Scarborough has a very convenient pier harbour (reckoned the best for vessels in stress of weather to put into, between Newcastle and the Humber), possesses a considerable shipping-trade, and supplies York and other places with cod, mackerel, turbot, pickled herrings, &c. It is romantically situated in the form of a half moon, partly surrounded by the sea, 36 m. NE by E of York, and 237 N of London. Markets on Thurs. and Sat.

SCARBOROUGH, a town and fort of Tobago, taken from the French by storm, by the English general Cuyler, April 15, 1793.

SCHAFFHAUSEN, a town of Switzerland, capital of a canton of the same name, situated on the N shore of the Rhine, near a celebrated cataract. It was formerly an imperial town, governed by an aristocracy, but was admitted a member of the Helvetic confederacy in 1501; its territory formed, or lately did, the twelfth canton in rank. The inhab. of this town are computed at 6000; but the number of citizens or burgesses (in whom the supreme power ultimately resides) is about 1600. From these are elected 85 members, who form the great and little council; the senate, or little council of 25, being intrusted with the executive power, and the great council (including the senate) finally deciding all appeals, and regulating the more important concerns of government. The town is tolerably well built, and is much noted for its wooden bridge over the Rhine. The river being extremely rapid here, had already destroyed several stone bridges of the strongest construction, when, in 1754, Ulric Grubenman, a carpenter of Tuffen, in Appenzel, undertook to throw a wooden bridge of a single arch over the river, which is near 400 feet wide. The magistrates, however, required that it should consist of two arches, and that he should, for that purpose, employ the middle pier of the old bridge. He has done so; but has contrived to leave it a matter of doubt, whether the bridge is supported by the middle pier or not. A man of the slightest weight feels it almost tremble under him; yet waggons heavily laden pass over it continually without danger. It is what the Germans call bænge-work, or hanging bridge; the sides and top of it are covered; the road, which is almost level, is not carried, as usual, over the top of the arch, but (if the expression may be used) is let into the middle of it, and there suspended. The ingenious architect, however, was totally unacquainted with the theory of mechanics. Vessels that go down the Rhine pay a toll here. The inhab. are about 7000. Schaffhausen is 22 m. N by E of Zurich. Lat. 47 43 N lon. 8 42 E.

SCHAFFHAUSEN, the smallest canton of Switzerland, bounded on the N and W by Swabia; on the E by part of Swabia, and the bishoprick of Constance; and on the S by the Rhine. It is about 5 leagues in length, and 3 in breadth, and contains 17 parishes and 10 bailiwicks. The revenues of the state are not very considerable, as will appear from the salary of the burgomaster, or chief of the republic, which barely amounts to 150l. a year. The reformation was introduced here in 1529. The clergy are supported by the state; but their income is barely sufficient for their maintenance, the greatest salary being only 100l. and the least 40l. per annum. The professors of literature also, who are taken from the clergy, are paid by government; and a school is supported at the public expence. Sumptuary laws are in force here, as well as in most parts of Switzerland; and no dancing is allowed, except upon particular occasions. The pastures are good, and they export wine; corn is mostly procured from Swabia. The population of the canton, without including the town of Schaffhausen, is estimated at 23,000.

SCHALHOLF, or SKAALHOLT, a town of Iceland, the see of a bishop (to which belongs 163 churches), with a college, a cathedral, and a school. Lat. 64 40 N lon. 22 20 W.

SCHAMACHYA, a town of Persia, capital of Shirvan. It was formerly very large, but is now decayed, above 6000 houses having been thrown down by an earthquake. It has, however, very large manufactories of silks and cottons, and is seated on the W side of the Caspian Sea, 250 m. NNE of Tauris. Lat. 40 50 N lon. 50 4 E.

SCHANTZ STERNEY, a fortress in Carelia, seated on the river Neva, a little to the eastward of Petersburg.

SCHARDING, a town of Bavaria, seated on the river Inn, 7 m. S of Passaw.

SCHELDT, one of the most considerable rivers of the Netherlands, which rises about 8 m. N of St. Quintin, in the depart. of Aisne, and passing by Cambray, Bouchain, Valenciennes, Condé, Tournay, Oudenarde, Ghent, Dendermond, and Antwerp, divides itself into two branches below Fort Lillo. One of these, called the Eastern-Scheldt, flows by Bergen-op-Zoom; the other, the West Scheldt, proceeds to Flushing, and both forming several islands, fall into the German Ocean.

SCHELLA, a town of Hungary, seated on the river Waag, (near a volcano, that burns continually,) 25 m. NE of Presburg.

SCHELLENBURG, a town of Bavaria, famous for the defeat of the French and Bavarians, in 1704, by the English and Imperialists, under the Duke of Marlborough and Prince Lewis of Baden. The former were very strongly intrenched. It is 22 m. SSW of Ingoldstadt; also a town of Erzgeburg, in Upper Saxony, and a town in the duchy of Westphalia.

SCHELLING, an island of W. Friesland, at the entrance of the Zuyder-Zee, between Vly Island and Ameland.

Schelly, Sussex, NE of Horsham.

SCHEMBERG, a town of Germany, 38 m. SW of Stutgard.

SCHEMNITZ, a town of Hungary, one of the seven mountain towns, defended by three castles, and containing a college, and a royal mine office, 2 churches, and 2 castles. In largeness, and number of mine-works, it surpasses all the other mine-towns in Hungary. The gold and silver mines here still produce a considerable quantity of ore. The workmen are in number above 5000. The yearly charges to the crown, of the mine-works here, amount to above 500,000 guilders. It is 14 m. S of Kremnitz, and 92 E of Vienna.

SCHENING, a town in E. Gothland, Sweden. The annual fair here, on the 29th of July, is reckoned one of the greatest in the whole kingdom. It is seated in a fertile country, on the river Skena, 8 m. SSE of Vastena, and 17 SW of Linkoping.

SCHENINGEN, a town of Westphalia, 18 m. SE of Wolfenbuttel.

SCHENCK, or SCHENKENSHANS, a strong fortress of Guelderland, situated in an angle of the Betuwe, (where the Rhine divides itself into two branches, called the Waal and the Rhine,) 2½ m. N of Cleves. It completely commands the two streams, and is considered as the centre of communication between Germany and Holland.

SCHENECTADY, a town of New York, situated in a fertile soil, on the Mohawk's river, 18 m. NW of Albany.

SCHENINGEN, a town of Wolfenbuttel, large and opulent, but now very much declined.

SCHER, a town of Swabia.

SCHERDING, a town of Upper Bavaria, situated on the Inn, 6 m. S of Passau.

SCHESBURG, a town of Transylvania, 47 m. ESE of Colosvar.

SCHEVE, a town of N. Jutland.

SCHEVELING, a village of Holland, agreeably situated, about 1 leag. NW from the Hague.

SCHIEDAM, a town of S. Holland, seated on the canal called the Schie, which communicates with the Maese, a little below the town, 4 m. W of Rotterdam, and 30 W of Utrecht.

SCHIERLING, a town of Bavaria, 10 m. SE of Kalheim.

Schilcester, or St. Oswald's, in the Pict's Wall, near Castle-Steeds, above the conflux of the N. and S. Tyne. Schilmington, Northumberl. in the manor of Heppal.

SCHILTACH, a town of Wurtemburg.

SCHINZNACH, a town of Bern, celebrated for its tepid mineral waters.

SCHIRAS, a large and considerable city of Persia, capital of Farsistan, extending about 3 m. in length, from E to W, but not so much in breadth. The houses are built of bricks dried in the sun, and the roofs are flat and terraced. It contains 15 handsome mosques, tiled with stones of a bluish green colour, and lined within with black polished marble. Here are also about 20 delightful public gardens, with trees, the largest of the kind, perhaps, in the world; and fruits almost of every kind, beside various beautiful flowers; but there are not many grand bazars, nor fine baths. Most of the buildings indeed are in ruins, and the streets are narrow and dirty. The country about Schiras is surprisingly fertile, producing the finest horses, the best pasture, and sheep, whose tails weigh 18 or 20 pounds each. The wines of Schiras are reckoned the best throughout the East. It is about 190 m. S of Ispahon.

SCHIRVAN, a part of the ancient ALBANIA, a province of Persia, bounded on the N by Dagestan, on the E and SE by the Caspian Sea, on the SW by Erivan, and on the W by Georgia. It extends about 50 leag. in length, and 30 in breadth, and has a very fertile soil, producing great quantities of rice, wheat, and barley. Here are also vast quantities of pheasants and other wild fowls, with abundance of hares and foxes that run in herds in the night time, about the villages, making a doleful noise. The inhab. use buffaloes (which they feed with fenugreek) instead of horses, and make them draw in the same manner. Scamachie is the capital.

SCHLATTEN, Switzerland, 2 m. W of Dissenhofen.

SCHLESTADT, a town in the depart. of the Lower Rhine, seated on the river Ill, 18 m. SSW of Strasburg.

SCHLEUSSINGEN, a town of Henningen, in Franconia, seated on the river Schleus.

Scholesmore, Yorks. SW of Bradford.

SCHOMBERG, a town of Treves; a town of Olmutz, in Moravia; and a town of Schweidnitz in Silesia.

SCHONECK, a town of Vogtland, in Upper Saxony.

SCHONEN, SCANIA, or SKONE, a province of Sweden, on the Sound, S of Haland and Smaland, and W of Blekingen and the Baltic. It is about 65 m. in length, and 48 in breadth, and is a very level, fertile, and pleasant country, containing more fine seats and well-built towns than any other province in the kingdom; and, indeed, from its many advantages, it may be called the storehouse and granary of Sweden. Lunden is the capital.

SCHONGAW, a town of Upper Bavaria, seated on the Lech, 90 m. W of Saltzburg.

SCHOONHOVEN, a town in S. Holland, with a very commodious haven, situated on the river Lech, in which there is an excellent salmon fishery, 10 m. NE of Dort, and 13 SE of Utrecht.

SCHORNDORF, a town of Wurtemburg, noted for its salt-springs. It is 16 m. E of Stutgard.

SCHOUTEN, an island in the Eastern Indian Sea, about 120 m. in circumf. discovered by W. Schouten, a Dutchman, in 1616. Lat. 0 50 S lon. 135 25 E.

SCHOWEN, an island in Zealand, lying between the Islands of Goree and Beverland; it is abqut 15 m. in length, and 6 in breadth. Ziriczee is the capital.

SCHUT, a large island of Hungary, a little below Presburg, in the river Danube, about 30 m. in length, and 10 in its mean breadth. There is another island of the same name, separated from the above by a branch of the Danube, about 20 m. in length, and 5 in breadth.

SCHWABACH, a town of Anspach in Franconia.

SCHWARTZEMBURG, a lordship of Franconia; a town of Erzgeberg, in Upper Saxony, and a town and bailiwick of Berne, in Switzerland.

SCHWARTZ, a town in the Tyrol, famous for its mines of different metals; it is seated on the river Inn, 14 m. ENE of Inspruck.

SCHWARTZBURG, a town in Thuringia, giving name to a principality which is divided between the two principal branches of Schwartzburg Sondershausen, and Schwartzburg Rudolstadt.* It is seated on the river Schwart, 22 m. SE of Erfurt.

SCHWARTZENBURG, a town and bailiwick of Berne, and a town and lordship of Franconia.

SCHWEIDNITZ, a city of Silesia, capital of a province of the same name, (S of the principalities of Lignitz and Breslau) in which are 14 towns with flourishing linen and woollen manufactures. It is the handsomest town of Silesia, next to Breslau. The streets are large, the church elegant, and the houses well-built. The royal palace here has been turned into a convent. All the magistrates are Romanists, but most of the inhab. are Protestants, who have a church without the town, as also a public school. It is situated on the river Weistritz, 22 m. SW of Breslau.

SCHWEINFURT, or SURFORD, an imperial town of Franconia, with a palace, where the senators meet, who are 12 in number. The environs abound in cattle, corn, and excellent wine, and the inhab. who are Protestants, carry on a large trade in linen and woollen cloth, goose-quills and feathers. It is seated on the river Maine, over which it has a stone bridge, 25 m. NNW of Bamberg.

SCHWEITZ, a canton of Switzerland, bounded on the N by the canton of Zurich; on the E by the bailiwick of Gaster, and the canton of Glarus; on the S by the canton of Uri; and on the W by the cantons of Lucerne, Zug, and Zurich. This canton, with that of Uri and Underwalden, threw off the yoke of Austria, Jan. 13, 1308. In 1315, having given the Austrians a total overthrow at Morgarten, they formed a perpetual alliance, which was the grand foundation of the Helvetic confederacy. The name of Schwetzerland, or Switzerland, which originally comprehended only the three cantons mentioned above, was afterward extended to all Helvetia. The governments of Schweitz and Uri contain, including their territories, purchased and acquired, about 50,000 inhab. hardy, warlike, and distinguished for the purity of their morals. The same kind of soil and the same productions are common to the two cantons. The country in general is rugged and mountainous, yet intersected with fertile valleys; it consists chiefly of pasture, raises little corn, and has no wine: but this soil, naturally barren, has been improved by the natives to an astonishing degree of fertility. The government is democratic, every male 16 years old having a vote in the landesgemeine; but the ordinary regency consists of 60 counsellors, with a landgamman as president, viz. ten from each of the six quarters into which this country is divided. Out of this council the principal officers are elected. The Romish religion is here exclusively established.

SCHWEITZ, a town of Switzerland, capital of the canton of the same name, containing one large magnificent church, and three convents. It is seated in a fertile country, on the slope of a hill, near the Waldstætter lake, 10 m. ESE of Lucerne.

SCHWELM, a town of Mark, in Westphalia, situated on a rivulet of the same name, near some medicinal springs, 22 m. NE of Cologne.

SCHWERIN, a city of Lower Saxony, capital of the duchy of Mecklenburgh, the usual residence of the dukes of the Schwerin line. It is divided into four parts; namely, Schwerin, the New Town, the Island of Schelf, and the Moor. The cathedral is a fine Gothic pile, with a lofty spire. The ducal palace and gardens are pleasantly situated on an island in the lake, and have a communication with the town by a draw-bridge. It is situated on a pleasant lake of the same name, abounding in fish, and which almost surrounds the town, 34 m. ESE of Lubeck.

SCHWERTE, a town of Germany, 38 m. NE of Cologne.

SCHWETZ, a town and castle of Pomerania, 7 m. N of Culm.

SCHWINBURG, a town of Denmark, on the SE coast of Funen.

SCIATI, a small island of the Archipelago, about 18 m. N of Negropont.

SCIGLIO, a town of Naples, in Calabria Ultra, on a rocky promontory, anciently called Scylla, and noted for shipwrecks. The ancient rock, so beautifully described by Homer, rises like a round tower, on which is built the castle. It is 10 m. NE of Reggio. Part of this town was destroyed by earthquake in 1783.

Scilly, in Cork, Munster, near Kinsale. The inhabitants are the descendants of an English colony, who first settled here after the defeat of the Spaniards, in the reign of Elizabeth. They have several fishing vessels, and annually take great quantities of fish, which they cure for foreign markets and home consumption. As they seldom marry out of the village, they are generally related to each other.

SCILLY, a cluster of islands and rocks, which lie almost 10 leagues to the W of the Land's End, in Cornw. and are easily discerned from it. Of these, only 5 or 6 are inhabited. They are supposed formerly to have produced much tin, but are now chiefly known as a resort of sea-fowl, and a place of shelter for ships in bad weather. They are said to be 145 in number. The inhabitants principally subsist by fishing, burning kelp, and acting as pilots. They have wild-fowl of all sorts, and tame-fowl, puffins, and rabbits in great number. The chief of the islands is St. Mary's, which is near 10 m. in circumf. and has a good port. This island, which is the largest and best cultivated, contains more and richer inhabitants than all the rest put together. It is defended by a castle, built by Queen Elizabeth, and several strong batteries, one of which towards the sea, is mounted with 64 pieces of cannon, some of them 18 pounders. Here is also a guard-house, barracks, a store-house, with a company of soldiers, a master-gunner, and 6 other gunners. In Sampson Island, which is the smallest, only one family lives, which goes to the place of worship in the other islands, the only communication being by a boat. In St. Mary's, and in two or three other of the largest islands, are various antiquities, particularly the remains of a temple of the Druids, and ancient sepulchres; but the greatest ornament of this island is the light-house, 51 feet high, the gallery of which is four. The sash lights are 11 feet 6 inches high, and 3 feet 2 inches broad. It stands on high land, and is a very fine column. The Scilly Rocks have been destructive to numbers of ships entering the Channel. One of the most disastrous events of this kind happened October 22d, 1707, when three men of war, under Sir Cloudesley Shovel, were lost, with all their crews. Lat. 49 56 N lon. 6 41 W.

SCILLY, a group of islands or shoals in the S. Pacific Ocean, discovered by Captain Wallis, in 1767, and described as extremely dangerous. Lat. 16 28 S lon. 155 30 W.

SCIO, or CHIOS, one of the most beautiful and pleasant islands of the Archipelago, near the coast of Natolia, to the S of Metelin, and to the NE of Samos. It is about 32 m. in length, and 15 in breadth; a mountainous country, yet pleasant, there being fruits of various kinds growing in the fields, such as oranges, citrons, olives, mulberries, and pomegranates. Large quantities of pleasant wines are produced here, which they export to the neighbouring islands; but their principal trade is in silk manufactured into velvet, damask, and other stuffs, designed for Asia, Egypt, and Barbary. They have also some commerce in wool, cheese, figs, mastic, turpentine, honey, and wax. The women are accounted more polite than in other parts of the Levant; their dress is odd, yet very neat. The partridges are tame, being sent every day into the fields, and in the evening they are called back with a whistle. The town of Scio is large, pleasant, and well built, the houses being beautiful and commodious; some of them are terraced, and others covered with tiles. The streets are paved with flint stones. The Venetians, while they had this island in their possession, made a great many alterations for the better. The castle is an old citadel, built by the Genoese. The harbour of Scio is the rendezvous of all shipping that go to or come from Constantinople, and will hold a fleet of fourscore vessels. They reckon only 10,000 Turks, and 3000 Latins, but 100,000 Greeks, on this island. Scio is a bishop's see, and is seated on the sea side, 47 m. SSW of Smyrna.

Sciredun, Devons. on the Dart, between Dartmore and Ashburton.

SCIROS, an island of the Archipelago, to the W of Metelin, about 15 m. in length and 8 in breadth. It is a mountainous country, but has no mines, and contains about 300 families. Their cheese, which is made of the milk of goats and sheep mixed together, and the wine, are excellent. They also collect large quantities of wax, and some mastic. There is but one town on the island, which is of the same name, and is built on a rock, which runs up like a sugar-loaf, about 10 m. from the harbour of St. George, in lat. 38 54 N. The inhabitants are Greeks, the cadi being the only Turk among them.

SCITUATE, a town of Massachusetts, on the S coast, and a town of Connecticut.

SCLAVONIA, a country of Europe, situated S of Hungary, and between the rivers Drave and Danube on the N and Save on the S. It is divided into 6 counties, and is subject to the house of Austria. It was formerly a kingdom, and extends about 150 m. in length, and from 25 to 45 in breadth, from the frontiers of Croatia to Belgrade. It is a fine, level, fruitful country, where cultivated; and the natives, in general, are a brave, hardy race, soldiers from their cradles. The eastern part, which is called Ratzia, and the inhabitants Ratzians, form a particular nation, and are of the Greek church. The language of Sclavonia is the mother of four others, namely those of Hungary, Bohemia, Poland, and Russia.

Scoggerbar, Cumberl. in Bootle parish, near the sea. Scole, Norf. Scoles, Yorks. SW of Halifax.

Scone, or Scoone, a town of Perths. seated on the E side of the river Tay, N by W of Perth. Here is the ancient royal palace of Scone, in which the kings of Scotland were crowned in the celebrated stone chair, which is now in Westminster Abbey.

SCONIE, a town of Fifes. 10 m. SW of St. Andrews, and 17 NNE of Edinburgh.

Engraved for Walker's Geography &c.

SCOPIA, or USCUR, a town of Turkish Servia, situated on the river Vardar, on the confines of Bosnia.

SCOPOLO, an island of the Archipelago, at the entrance of the Gulf of Salonichi. It is about 10 m. in length and 5 in breadth; is very fertile, produces plenty of good wine, and contains 12,000 inhab. who are almost all Greeks.

Scornston, Norf. S of Worsted. Scorton, Yorks. NE of Catterick. Scoston, Nottinghams. on the Ryton, NE of Worksop. Scotby, Cumberl. adjoining Kirkbride, near Carlisle. Scotfield, Bedfords. NW of Baldock. Scotfield, Staffords. NE of Tamworth. Scotford, S of Lancaster. Scotgrove, Kent, by Ash. Scothorn, NE of Lincoln. Scothorp, Yorks. SE of Settle.

SCOTLAND, or NORTH BRITAIN, the most northern of the two kingdoms into which the island of Great Britain was formerly divided. It is bounded on all sides by the sea, except towards the S and SE where it is joined to England. The islands, also, on its western coast, called the Hebrides, or Western Islands, and those to the NE called the Orkney and Shetland Islands, are also a part of Scotland. From N to S it extends about 280 m. and from E to W in some parts 150 m. but in others only 30. It contains an area of 27,794 m. having about 12,000 cultivated, and about 14,000 uncultivated. Exclusively of the islands, Scotland seems to be naturally divided into three large districts. The Northern division is formed by a chain of lakes, which cross the country from the Frith of Murray to the island of Mull. The Middle division is bounded on the S by the Friths of Forth and Clyde, and the great canal by which they are united; and, on the S side of this boundary is the South division. The Northern division is chiefly an assemblage of vast dreary mountains; not, however, without some fertile valleys on the northern and eastern shores. The Middle division is traversed in different directions, by many great ranges of mountains; and though cultivation here is also found, especially on the eastern shore, yet of this division, as well as of the former, it may be observed, that the arable land bears but a small proportion to the mountainous and barren tracts. However, the eastern coast of the Middle division, and the whole of the Southern, has a great resemblance to England, and with respect both to the general aspect of the country, and to the progress of cultivation, exhibits every kind of rural variety. The rivers of Scotland are, in general, remarkable for their rapidity, and yield abundance of salmon, trout, and other excellent fish; the principal are the Spey, Don, Tay, Tweed, Clyde, Forth, the Northern Dee, the Esk, Annan, Nith, and Southern Dee; and the lochs, or lakes, are numerous and extensive. The climate is very various, in different places. The northern extremity, which is in the same latitude with some parts of Norway, is extremely cold: but the frosts are far from being so intense here as in parts of the continent equally as far to the north. For this advantage, Scotland is indebted to an insular situation. Its west coast is subject to frequent rains in the summer, and to sudden changes of weather. In many places on the eastern shore, and in the whole South division, the climate is not inferior to the north part of England; and, in general, the air of Scotland is very healthy. The products of the country are grain, flax, woods of oak and fir, coal, lead, iron, freestone, lime-stone, slate, the most beautiful marble, fine rock crystals, pearls, variegated pebbles, kelp, &c. It feeds vast herds of cattle and flocks of sheep; they are both small, but much valued for the delicacy of their flesh; and the fleece of the latter emulates the finest Spanish wool. It is in the high grounds that the cattle are so diminutive; for in many parts of the country, the horses and cows are not excelled in size and beauty by those of the English breed. Among the wild animals are the roe, stag, fox, badger, otter, hedge-hog, rabbit, weasel, mole, and other small quadrupeds. Among the feathered race, are the capercailzie, or cock of the wood, the eagle, falcon, partridge, quail, snipe, plover, black-game, and grouse, &c. The fisheries in the surrounding seas are of great national importance, and will become a real source of wealth to the nation, when increasing commerce shall enable the inhab. to form roads, erect villages, and open canals, in the remote parts of the country. The trade and population of most of the great towns have considerably increased of late years. The western shores, however, are annually drained of their inhab. by the emigration of individuals. Scotland was an independent kingdom till James VI. was called to the throne of England; and in the reign of Queen Anne, one of his successors, both kingdoms were united under the name of Great Britain. Sixteen peers are elected to represent the nobility, and 45 commoners to represent the counties and boroughs in the same parliament with that of England. There are five universities in Scotland, viz. St. Andrews, Glasgow, Edinburgh, New Aberdeen, and Old Aberdeen. Scotland is divided into 33 counties, namely Shetland and Orkney, Bute, Caithness, Sutherland, Ross, Cromarty, Nairne, Inverness, Murray, Banff, Aberdeen, Kincardine, Angus, Perth, Fife, Kinross, Clackmannan, Stirling, Dumbarton, Argyle, Renfrew, Ayr, Wigton, Kirkcudbright, Dumfries, Roxburgh, Selkirk, Peebles, Lanark, Linlithgow, Edinburgh, Haddington, and Berwick, the whole containing 304,093 inhabited houses, and 1,805,688 inhab. The established religion is the Presbyterian, and the capital is Edinburgh.

SCURGULO, a town of Capitanata.

SCURRIZANO, a town of Capitanata.

SCUTARI, a town of Turkey in Europe, capital of Upper Albania, the residence of a beglerbeg, a Greek archbishop, and a Latin bishop, and anciently the residence of the kings of Illyricum. It is seated on a lake to which it gives name, 52 m. SE of Ragusa.

SCUTARI, a large and handsome town of Turkey, in Asia, in Natolia, with a well frequented harbour. It is seated on the E side of Constantinople, of which it is looked upon as a suburb, being directly over against it. It contains the Grand Signior's seraglio, and a very handsome mosque; and is built on the side of a hill.

SCYLLA, a rock near the Faro of Messina, on the coast of Calabria, opposite the celebrated Charybdis; which, though the terror of ancient mariners, and the theme of poets, on account of its great whirlpool, is now, comparatively speaking, no longer formidable. This rock is about a mile from the entrance of the Faro, and forms a small promontory, which runs a little out to sea, and meets the whole force of the waters as they come out of the narrowest parts of the Straits. The head of this promontory is the famous Scylla. "It must be owned," says Mr. Brydone, "that it does not altogether come up to the formidable description that Homer gives of it; the reading of which (like that of Shakespeare's Cliff) almost makes one's head giddy. Neither is the passage so wondrous narrow and difficult as he makes it. Indeed, it is probable, that the breadth of it is greatly increased since his time, by the violent impetuosity of the current; and this violence, too, must always have diminished in proportion as the breadth of the channel increased. Our pilot says, there are many small rocks that shew their heads near the base of the large ones. These are probably the dogs that are described as howling round the monster Scylla. There are likewise many caverns that add greatly to the noise of the water, and tend still to increase the horror of the scene. The rock is near 200 feet high. There is a kind of castle, or fort, on its summit; and the town of Scylla, or Sciglio, containing 3 or 400 inhab. stands on its S side, and gives the title of prince to a Calabrese family."

Seaborough, Somersets. S of Crewkern. Seabraham, or Sebergham, Cumberl. near Wigton. Seachurch, Essex, near Canvey-Isle. Seacroft, Yorks. NE of Leeds.

SEAFORD, a small sea-port, or fishing town in Sussex, built mostly of stone and slate. It is one of the Cinque Ports, and is 8 m. SSE of Lewes, and 59 S by E of London.

SEBASTIA, a town of Palestine, the remains of the ancient city of Jamaira. It is 34 m. NNE of Jerusalem.

SEBASTIAN, ST. a town of Guipuscoa, in Spain, with a good and well-frequented harbour, secured by two moles, on which redoubts are planted, and within which only one ship can pass at a time. The streets are long, broad, and straight, and paved with white flagstones. The houses are handsome, the churches neat, and the environs pleasant. It carries on a great trade, and is very populous, as several families are obliged to live in the same house. Their greatest trade consists in iron and steel, which some affirm to be the best in Europe; they also deal in wool, which comes from Old Castile. On August 3d, 1794, this place was invested by the republican troops, and capitulated on the following day. The garrison, consisting of 2000 men, surrendered prisoners of war: 180 pieces of brass cannon were taken, with considerable magazines and stores. It was taken by the British troops in 1813. It is situated at the mouth of the Gurumea, with a delightful prospect of the sea on one side, and a distant view of the Pyrenean mountains on the other, 50 m. NNE of Bilboa.

SEBASTIAN, ST. or RIO-DE-JANEIRO, a large, well-built, and populous city and seaport of Brasil, in S. America, capital of the province of Rio Janeiro, and of late years, and at present, of all Brasil. The city is well-designed, and about 3 m. in circuit. The houses in general are of stone, two stories high; every house having, after the manner of the Portuguese, a little balcony before its windows, and a lattice of wood before the balcony. The streets are straight and of a convenient breadth, intersecting each other at right angles. It stands, however, upon low ground, which was formerly swampy, and surrounded by hills of vast height, which exclude the benefit of the refreshing sea and land breezes; so that it is of course, suffocatingly hot, and unhealthy, in the summer. The different mechanics carry on their business in distinct parts of the town; particular streets being set apart for particular trades. On the S. side, of a spacious square is the palace of the viceroy. There are no manufactures here, but much gold is brought from the mines, and plenty of diamonds, topazes, and amethysts. Forty thousand negroes are annually imported, to work in the mines, on the king's account. This port is a very good place for ships to put into, that want refreshment; all sorts of provisions, except wheaten bread and flour, may be easily procured; as a substitute for bread, there are yams and cassava in plenty. The country round the town is beautiful in the highest degree, the wildest spots being varied with a greater luxuriance of flowers, both as to number and beauty, than the best gardens in England. Upon the trees and bushes sit an almost endless variety of birds, especially small ones, many of them covered with the most elegant plumage: there is a great variety of insects, some of them very beautiful, and much more nimble than those of Europe; and the gardens produce melons, oranges, lemons, citrons, plantains, bananas, apples, cocoa-nuts, the prickly pear, yams, cassava, and some European fruits. Lat. 22 50 S lon. 42 48 W. Also a town in the island of Tercera, situated between mountains, about half a mile from the sea; and a town of Carthagena and Popayan, both in S. America; a town of Algarva, in Portugal; and a town in the depart. of Lower Loire, 3 m. SE of Nantes.

SEBENICO, a sea-port of Dalmatia, capital of a county of the same name, with a bishop's see, defended by 4 citadels and a castle. It is seated near the mouth of the river Cherca, in the Adriatic, 25 m. NW of Spalatro.

SEBENSTEIN, a town of Austria, 10 m. S of Ebenfurth.

SEBNITZ, a town of Saxony, 20 m. SE of Dresden.

SEGONZAC, a town in the depart. of the Charente, 15 m. W of Angouleme.

SEGORBA, a town of Valencia, containing from 5 to about 6000 inhab. The fountain here is a great curiosity; its water is wholesome, clear, and well tasted; it does not breed either reptiles or flies, and is remarkable for petrifying the roots and branches of the trees which grow by its side, and even the channels through which it passes. It is surrounded by well-cultivated gardens, the climate is mild, and the country is fertile in corn, wine, and fruits. Near it there are quarries of fine marble. It is seated on the river Morviedro, 27 m. NW of Valencia, and 150 E of Madrid.

SEGOVIA, a city of Spain, in Old Castile, the see of a bishop, containing 27 churches, 24 convents, and about 8000 houses. Here the best cloth in Spain is made, from the fine Spanish wool, so much esteemed in other countries. The manufacturing of this is one part of their trade; in 1785, however, the number of their looms, formerly so numerous, did not exceed 250; another is that of very fine paper. The cathedral, which is a mixture of the Gothic and Moorish architecture, stands on one side of the great square, and contains the statue of Mary in massy silver. The alcazar is a well preserved edifice, and was formerly the residence of the Gothic kings. It is seated in the highest part of the town, is covered with lead, and has 16 rooms richly adorned with tapestry, a great deal of gilding, and fine ornaments of marble and porphyry. The royal chapel is magnificently gilded, and embellished with fine paintings. The mint is surrounded by a river, on which are mills employed in coining, and by which every thing is done almost instantaneously. This mint was for some time the only one in Spain; of late another has been established at Seville. The aqueduct is one of the most astonishing and best preserved of the Roman works; it is 3000 paces in length, and is supported by 177 arches of a prodigious height, consisting of two rows, rising majestically one above the other. Its solidity, which has braved upwards of 16 centuries, seems inexplicable, on observing the simplicity of its construction, and comparing the slender base with the wonderful height. Segovia is seated on a mountain between two hills, (which singular situation of the city renders an aqueduct necessary,) 45 m. NW of Madrid.

SEGOVIA, a considerable town of Luçon, in the Manilla Islands, founded in 1598; the see of a bishop, defended by a fort and garrison. It is situated near the N coast, 250 m. N of Manilla.

SEIKS, THE, a numerous nation of Hindostan Proper, consisting of several small independent states, that have formed a kind of federal union. They possess the whole of Lahore, the principal part of Moultan, and the W. part of Delhi. This tract extends about 400 m. from NW to SE, and is from 100 to 200 broad, in general, although in the part between Attock and Behker, (that is along the Indus) the extent cannot be less than 320. Their capital is Lahore. We know but little concerning the state of this government, but it is represented as being mild. In their mode of making war they are unquestionably savage and cruel. Their army consists almost entirely of horse, of which they are said to be able to bring at least 100,000 into the field. The Seiks, like the Hindoos, molest not others in matters of faith, and require only a conformity in certain signs and ceremonies; but, unlike the Hindoos, they admit proselytes, although those from among the Mahometans are the least esteemed.

SEIK, or HOR, a mountain in Arabia Petræa, which formerly bounded Judea on the S. and separated it from Idumea. It is now called Sardonny, and is about 140 m. E of Cairo, in Egypt.

SENEGAL, or SENEGAMBIA, a country of Africa, between the rivers Senegal and Gambia, in which are included many kingdoms and states.

SENEGAL, a large river of Africa, which rises in the interior country, but in what part can only be conjectured; it overflows, however, like the Nile, and, indeed, much about the same time of the year. It is 40 days before it comes to the height, when the river overflows its banks, and the channel is difficult to find by those who go up it in boats. The French once sent 30 men up this river, who rowed 1000 m. undergoing great hardships, insomuch that only 5 returned back alive; their boat once stuck fast on the tops of trees, and they got it off with a great deal of difficulty. From the lake Benin, (the furthest that Europeans have penetrated) it is 800 leag. to the mouth of this river, which is laid down in lat. 15 50 N. It stretches by a number of windings, to a prodigious length from E to W, and is believed to separate the country of the Negroes from the Moors of Zahara, or the Desert.

SENEGAL, an island of Africa, situated in the river Senegal, near its mouth; about 1¼ m. in length, and ½ m. in breadth. The inhab. who are about 3000, live chiefly on fish and maize. Lat. 16 5 N.

SENNAR, a city of Africa, in Nubia, capital of a kingdom of the same name, which lies on the banks of the Nile, between Egypt and Abyssinia. It is 5 m. in circumf. containing near 100,000 inhab. The houses are all one story high, flat roofed, and very ill-built, but the suburbs contain only cottages, covered with reeds. The king's palace is surrounded by high walls, of bricks dried in the sun, but is only a confused heap of buildings. The heats are excessive, and in the rainy season the air is extremely unwholesome. There is a market every day in the week, in the middle of the town, where they sell all sorts of provisions and goods. They have also a market near the king's palace, where slaves are sold: the females sit on one side, and the males on another: the Egyptian merchants buy great numbers of them every year. Their horned cattle are very large and fat, but the common meat sold in the market is camel's flesh. Their religion is Mahometanism. They are an ignorant, superstitious, and yet a cunning sort of people. The women who can afford it, have slight garments of silk, and wear rings of various metals on their hair, arms, legs, ears, and fingers. Their legs are naked, and they have only a single sole fastened to their feet with strings. Other women and girls have clothes wrapped round them from the waist to the knees. The men go almost naked. According to Mr. Bruce, their trade is not great; they have no manufactures, and the principal article of consumption is blue cotton cloth from Surat. Formerly, when the ways were open, and merchants travelled in caravans with safety, Indian goods were brought to Sennar from Jidda, and then dispersed over the black country. The return was made in gold, in powder called tibbar, civet, rhinoceros' horns, ivory, ostrich feathers, and, above all, in slaves and glass, more of which were exported from Sennar than from all the rest of Africa put together. But this trade is almost destroyed: so is that of the gold and ivory. However, the gold still keeps up its reputation of being the purest and best in Africa; and is therefore bought at Mocha, to be carried to India, where it all at last centres. Sennar is seated on an eminence, on the W side of the river Nile, in lat. 13 34 N lon. 33 30 E.

SENS, an ancient and considerable town in the depart. of the Yonne; before the revolution it was the see of an archbishop, and contained 16 parish churches, and 14 abbeys and convents. A communication between this river and the Thames, the Trent, the Dee, the Mersey, and other rivers, has been opened by a number of different canals.

SEVERN, THE VALE OF, a spacious and extensive vale in Gloucesters. which borders both sides of the river Severn. Its fertile pastures furnish the kingdom with that cheese for which the county is so justly famous. In this vale, the air is so mild, even in winter, that it seems to enjoy a different climate from that of the Cotswold Hills.

SEVERN, a river of Maryland, which enters Chesapeak Bay, by a broad mouth, a little below Annapolis.

SEVERNDROOG, a sea-port town of Hindostan, situated on an island or peninsula, in the Concan county, 68 m. S of Bombay; near which was a fort that belonged to Angria the Pirate, which was taken by Commodore James, in 1756.

Severn Stoke, or Stoke-upon-Severn, Worcesters. N of Upton.

SEVERO, St. a town of Capitanata.

SEVERUS' WALL, commonly called GRAHAM'S DIKE, in the W of Scotland. It is a work of the Romans, and supposed to be done by the emperor whose name it bears, to prevent the incursions of the Picts and Scots. It began at Abercorn, on the Frith of Forth, 4 m. NE of Linlithgow, and ran W across the county to the Frith of Clyde, ending at Kirkpatrick, near Dumbarton.

SEVILLE, a district of Andalusia, called also Lower Andalusia, extending from Estramadura and Cordova, to the Atlantic and the Straits of Gibraltar, about 120 m. in length, and from 70 to 110 in breadth.

SEVILLE, an ancient city (in Latin HISPALIS, which the Arabians pronounced IXBILLA, and the Castilians SEVILLA), capital of Andalusia, one of the most considerable in Spain, and the see of an archbishop. It is of a round form, and takes up more ground than Madrid, although it does not contain so many inhab. The Moors built an aqueduct here, still to be seen, extending 6 m. in length. The cathedral is the largest Gothic building in Spain, and is supposed by some travellers to be the largest church in the world, next to St. Peter's, at Rome; the steeple is of very curious workmanship, and extremely high, consisting of three towers, one above another, with galleries and balconies. Of the convents, which are 77 in number, that of St. Francis is the most curious, adorned with a very handsome public square, in the midst of which is a fine fountain. It contains 160 monks, beside 140 lay brethren. The university of Seville consists of many colleges; the professors enjoying rich pensions. Near the cathedral is the royal palace, called Alcazar, which was partly built after the antique by the Moors, and partly in the modern taste by king Pedro; it is a mile in extent, and flanked by large square towers, built with stones taken from the ancient temple of Hercules, said to be the original founder of the city. The exchange is a square building, of the Tuscan order, each front 100 feet in length, and 3 stories high. The suburbs, of which there are several, stand on the other side of the river. In this suburb the house of the Inquisition is placed, and here are the public walks where the inhab. go to take the air. The town-house is adorned with a great number of statues, and there is a large square before it, with a fine fountain in the middle. In this city are 29 parish churches and 24 hospitals, richly endowed. An academy of the belles lettres, was founded here in 1730. Under the Moors Seville contained 600,000 inhab. and in the time of Ferdinand and Isabella, 6000 looms were employed here; but at present their manufactures are much neglected. Its situation near the sea renders it still, however, one of the most commercial towns of Spain. The E. and W. India companies have their houses here, where they are obliged to register themselves and their merchandise. Their ships, indeed, stop in the harbour of Cadiz, but their lading is carried thence to Seville; and there all the gold and silver is coined, there being above 600 men employed in the mint. The country about it is extremely fertile in corn, wine, &c. and there is abundance of oil; for to the W of the river is a grove of olive trees, 30 m. in length. The Spaniards commonly say, Quen no ha visto Sevilla, no ha visto maravilla: He who has not seen Seville, has not seen a wonder. It is situated on the river Guadalquiver, over which it has a long bridge of boats, 45 m. from the sea, 112 W of Granada, and 212 S by W of Madrid. Lat. 37 32 N lon. 5 34 W.

SHAFTESBURY, or SHASTON, an ancient borough-town of Dorsets. containing 520 houses, many of which are of free-stone, a neat town-hall, where the quarter sessions are held, a free-school, and several remains of antiquity. Water is so scarce here, that they are obliged to bring it from a great distance, in pails or on horses. They enjoy, however, a wholesome air, and have a very extensive prospect over the counties of Dorset, Somerset, and Wilts. It is situated in the northern extremity of the county, on a high hill, difficult of access, except on the E, 25 m. W by S of Salisbury, and 102 W by S of London. A considerable market on Sat.

SHANNON, the largest river in Ireland, and one of the finest in the British Isles, rolling nearly from N to S 200 m. and expanding in its course, in many places, into deep and spacious lakes. It rises from Lough Lean, in the county of Leitrim, and passing by Leitrim, Carrick, Lanesborough, Athlone, Killaloe, Limerick, &c. runs into the Atlantic, between Kerry Head and Cape Lean. From Limerick to the Atlantic it is navigable for the largest vessels. At some distance above Limerick, and a little below Killaloe, there is a ledge of rocks which interrupts the navigation of this fine river. Here, however, there is a valuable eel and salmon fishery; and from Killaloe to Carrick-on-Shannon, near its source, there is an inland navigation, which promises the greatest advantages to the rising prosperity of Ireland.

Shannon-Bridge, in Galway, Connaught. Shannon-Bridge, in King's County, Leinster. Shannon-Grove, in Limerick, Munster. Shannon-Park, in Cork, Munster. Shanrahan, in Waterford, Munster.

Shap, Westmorl. at the source of the Loder, between Orton and Penrith. It had once a famous abbey, built in 1119, of which little remains, except a tower and the ruins of an old bridge. A more ancient and permanent monument of human industry appears in some great stones, like pyramids, which are placed in almost a direct line, for 1 m. together, at 8, 10, and 12 yards distance from each other, and are of such immense weight, that no carriages, now in use, could support them. It was, probably, a place of druidical worship.

SHAPPINSHA, one of the Orkney Islands, lying NE of Mainland, or Pomona, with about 80 boats belonging to it, most of which are employed in fishing. In the summer they burn kelp, which produces, in some seasons, upwards of 3000 tons, bringing near 2000*l.* to the inhab.

SHEERNESS, a fort in Kent, seated on the northern point of the Isle of Sheppey, at the W Swale, or the principal mouth of the river Medway, 3 m. N of Queenborough. The buildings belonging to it make a neat little town; and there is also a dock-yard, and a chapel. Here is a fort built by king Charles II. after the insult of the Dutch, and in the room of that demolished at Queenborough, with a line of cannon facing the water side, which contains good apartments for the officers of the ordnance, navy, and garrison. An excellent spring was lately discovered here, before which the yard and garrison were supplied with fresh water from Chatham. It is reckoned one of the most unhealthy spots in the kingdom.

Sheesby Mountains, in Cork, Munster, in the barony of Carbery.

Sheet, Hants, near Petersfield.

SHEFFIELD, a large, thriving, and populous town, in the West Riding of Yorks. long celebrated for its various hardware manufactories, which consist particularly of steel cutlery wares, plated goods, and various tools. It has been a staple for knives, or whittles, and files, above 300 years. It is reputed to excel Birmingham in this sort of wares; as that does this town in locks, hinges, nails, and polished steel. Here are about 600 master cutlers incorporated by the style of the cutlers of Hallamshire, of which this is reckoned the chief town. By the Don, which is navigable within five m. of the town, it receives iron from Hull, and conveys thither its manufactures for exportation, which are not confined to the town, but extend several m. over the country, employing not less than 40,000 persons. Its neighbourhood abounds with coal, and there are some mines of alum. Here are also lead-works and a silk-mill. It is in a hilly situation, and is chiefly supplied with water by pipes from the high ground. A new market-place has been lately erected here by the Duke of Norfolk, on a commodious plan of shambles, strongly inclosed; and a large and elegant infirmary has been lately completed. In the old parts of the town the streets are narrow; the new parts, however, are more commodious, and the surrounding country affords a rich and beautiful variety of landscape. It is seated on the rivers Don and Sheaf, 34 m. N of Derby, and 161 NW by N of London. A large market on Tues. particularly for corn. Fairs on Tues. after Trinity Sun. and November 28th.

SHETLAND, the general name of a cluster of islands, which lie about 100 m. NNE of Caithnesss. between 59 56 and 61 11 N lat. They are reckoned to be 46 in number, besides 40 smaller, called Holms, which produce pasture, and as many barren, the whole divided into 29 parishes, and a population of 22,379. The names of the principal are Mainland, Yell, Unst, Fula, and Phaderfroy. The description already given of the largest, or MAINLAND, may be applied to the others, as to the particulars of climate, inhabitants, &c. and the same may be said of the ORCADES. In all these islands the Aurora Borealis, or Merry Dancers, as they are called by the inhabitants, are very remarkable. They are the constant attendants of clear evenings, and prove great reliefs amid the gloom of long winter nights. They commonly appear at twilight near the horizon, of a dun colour, approaching to yellow, sometimes continuing in that state for several hours, without any apparent motion; after which they break out into streams of stronger light, spreading into columns, and altering slowly into ten thousand different shapes, varying their colours from all the tints of yellow to the most obscure russet. They often cover the whole hemisphere, and make the most brilliant appearance. There is no light-house in all these islands, nor is there any chart of the country extant, that can be depended upon. The native Shetland poney is very strong and hardy, seldom above 10 hands high, seldom or never taken into a stable, and often attains the age of 40 years in health and vigour. A considerable manufactory for plaiting straw has been lately established, but the chief occupation is the fisheries, particularly the coal-fish, a nutritious food, whose livers yield very fine oil, of which has been produced 2000 barrels in a season. The sheep as well as the ponies, during the winter, feed upon the weed or the drift of the beach. Shetland with Orkney, forms one of the counties of Scotland, and pays one part in three of the land-tax. Lerwick is the capital.

SHREWSBURY, a large and flourishing borough town of Shrops. capital of the county, so called from the Saxon word Scrobbesberig, which signifies a town built on a woody hill. It is well built, well lighted, and well paved, and contains 3509 houses, and 18,543 inhab. It is the chief mart for a coarse kind of woollen cloth made in Montgomerys. called Welsh webs, which are bought up in all parts of the country, as much as come to about 1000l. a week, and dressed here, whence they are sent for exportation, principally to America and Flanders. Much of the Welsh flannel is also bought at Welsh-Pool by the drapers of this place, which is indeed a common mart for all sorts of Welsh commodities. It is also famous for its excellent brawn, which is sent to various parts of the kingdom. One great ornament of this town is the Quarry, one of the finest promenades in England. It takes in 20 acres, is shaded with a double row of lime trees, and has a fine double alcove in the centre, with seats. About 20 vessels are constantly employed on the river Severn, between Shrewsbury, Gloucester, and Bristol. Shrewsbury has been long famous for its excellent brawn, and from the plenty of salmon, other fish, and provisions of all sorts; it is full of genteel families. It is beautifully situated in a sort of horse shoe, formed by the river Severn, 46 m. W of Lichfield, and 160 NW of London. Lat. 52 43 N lon. 2 41 W. Markets for corn, cattle, and provisions, on Wednes.

SHROPSHIRE, or SALOP, a county of England, bounded on the N by Cheshire, and a detached party of Flintsh.; on the E by Staffords.; on the SE by Worcesters.; on the S by Herefords.; on the SW by Radnors.; and on the W by the counties of Montgomery and Denbigh. It extends upwards of 40 m. in length from N to S, and is divided into 15 hundreds, which contain 16 market-towns, 170 parishes, 615 villages, 35,506 inhabited houses, and 194,298 inhab. The air is salubrious, and not very sharp, except on the hills. The soil is generally fruitful, especially in the northern and eastern parts, which produce plenty of wheat and barley; but the southern and western being mountainous, are less fertile, yet yield sufficient pasture for sheep and cattle. There are mines of lead, copper, iron, limestone, free-stone, pipe-clay, and inexhaustible coal-pits. Over most of the coal lies a stratum of a blackish, hard, porous substance, containing great quantities of bitumen, which, being ground to powder in horse-mills, and boiled in coppers of water, a bituminous matter swims on the surface, that, by evaporation, is brought to the consistence of pitch; or by the help of an oil distilled from the same substance, and mixed with it, may be thinned to a sort of tar; both these substances serve particularly for caulking of ships, as well, if not better, than pitch and tar, it being less liable to crack. The wool of many parts of this country is remarkably fine. The principal rivers are the Severn, (which is navigable in every quarter of the county) and the Tend. The capital is Shrewsbury.

SIAM, a kingdom of Asia, bounded on the N by that of Ava, on the E by Cambodia and Laos, on the S by a gulf of the same name and Malacca, and on the W by the bay of Bengal. It extends about 800 m. in length, and from 200 to 350 in breadth. It is divided into the Higher and Lower, and the soil produces plenty of rice, cotton, and a variety of fruits, different from those of Europe. The animals are also peculiar to those parts of the world. Some French authors, indeed, have extolled it a the finest and richest country in the world. The inhab. both men and women, go almost naked, except the wealthy, who wear rich garments. The king shows himself but once a year to the common people. He is proprietor of all the lands in the country, and no one can buy any merchandise till he has the choice of them. He generally keeps a numerous army, among which are 1000 elephants. It is a flat country, which, in the rainy season, is overflowed; for which reason, most of the houses are built on pillars, and they have no communication for some months but by boats. It consists of cultivated and uncultivated land, most of it being of the latter, and covered with wood. There are mines of gold, ilver, tin, and copper, and they have plenty of pepper, aloes, benjamin and musk. The most profitable trees are those which produce cotton, oil, and varnish. The women are the only merchants in buying goods, the men being generally maintained by the industry of their wives. The Europeans that come there to trade, it is said, generally take wives for the time they stay, who are not less in esteem when the men are gone. The mandarins, that is, the principal men who daily attend the palace, are 3000 in number, and are whipt very severely with split rattans for the least fault. Even the ladies are not exempted from this punishment; and they are so far from being ashamed of it, that they expose their backs as they go along the streets, to shew what they have undergone, thinking it an honour to be taken notice of by so great a king. The inhab. have large foreheads, little noses, plump lips, and black sparkling eyes. Both sexes go bare-headed, and the men are of an olive colour, with little beards; but the women are of a straw complexion, and some have their cheeks a little red. They have abundance of wild animals in the woods, as elephants, rhinoceroses, leopards, and tigers. Their tame cattle are beeves, buffaloes, and hogs, of which they have plenty about their farms; beside which, there are large and dangerous crocodiles, and serpents 20 feet long. Their temples and priests are very numerous: the latter are distinguished from the laity by an orange-coloured garment, and they keep their heads, beards, and eye-brows close shaved. The roofs of their temples are gilded, and many of their statues, and other cast works, are of gold; yet they have sought of late, in vain, for mines either of gold or silver. They have schools for the education of their children, and there is scarce any among them but what can read and write. Siam, Odiam, Juthia, or Juda, is the capital.

SIBERIA, a large country, comprehending in its most extensive sense, all the northern part of the Russian empire in Asia; but originally it denoted only the S part of the government of Tobolski. It is bounded on the E by the Eastern Ocean, on the S by Tartary, on the W by Russia, and on the N by the Frozen Ocean. It is about 3000 m. in length from E to W, and 1200 in breadth, from N to S. The S part produces all the necessaries of life; but the N part is extremely cold, almost unculti-vated, and consequently thin of people. The principal riches of Siberia consist of fine skins and furs. Tobolski is the capital town, where the viceroy resides. The inhab. are principally of three sorts, Pagans, or the original natives of the country; Mahometans; and Russians. The former dwell in forests in the winter, and in the summer on the banks of rivers. Their garments are the skins of wild beasts. They have bows, arrows, a knife, and a kettle, in which all their riches consist. They make use of rein-deer and dogs, instead of horses, to draw their sledges. They all live in huts, which they remove from place to place. Those in the southern parts are not much more polite; but they have horses with which they go a hunting, and their houses, though poor, are not shifted from place to place. The Russians set-tled here are much the same as in their native country. It is through this vast tract of land the Russian caravans travel every year, when they carry their merchandise to China. The principal rivers are the Oby, Lena, Irtysh, Ve-nisei, and Okota. The western part of Siberia is comprised in the Russian government of To-bolski and Kolyvan; all the eastern part is con-tained in the government of Irkutzk; these are subdivided into smaller districts. Siberia is the place to which criminals, as well as persons under the displeasure of the court, are common-ly banished.

SIBU, one of the Manilla islands, about 80 leagues in circumf. Its principal production is the borona, a species of grain which serves in-stead of rice; also cotton, tobacco, wax, and civet. Its principal town, containing about 5000 houses, is of the same name. Lat. 10 20 N lon. 122 E.

SICAL, a town of Yucatan, in Mexico, si-tuated on the N coast, about 70 m. WNW of Merida, situated on the Demer.

SICILY, an island of the Mediterranean Sea, almost in the form of a triangle, terminating in three points or capes; that which is nearest Italy, is called Capo del Faro; that which re-gards the Morea, Capo Passaro; and the third, which points to Africa, Capo-di-Boco. Sicily is separated from the kingdom of Naples by a narrow strait, called the Faro, 7 m. across; and as Messina is seated on it, it is called the Faro-di-Messina. The two kingdoms of Naples and Sicily have nearly the same climate, and the productions are much the same; but Sicily abounds much more in corn, particularly in the valleys of Noto and Mazara. The valley of Demona has more forests and fruit-trees than the two others. The quantity of corn and silk exported annually from this island, is estimated at about 7 millions of ducats, of which, the ar-ticle of silk produces one million. Sicily is divided into the valleys just mentioned, called Val-di-Demona, Val-di-Noto, and Val-di-Ma-zara. It is about 156 m. in length, and 85 in its mean breadth. Its produce not already mentioned, is wine, oil, silk, and excellent fruits. Sicily was originally planted by different colonies from Greece, but the Romans became its con-querors, and held it in subjection till the year 440, when the Vandals invaded this island. These were driven away by Belisarius, and it became a part of the eastern empire till the year 828. It was then conquered by the Sa-racens, who, in their turn, were driven out by Roger, the son of Tancred, a Norman prince, who took the title of Count of Sicily, in 1080. His son, Roger, united Sicily with Naples, and was crowned king of both Sicilies in 1130. Charles, brother of St. Louis, conquered it from the Norman princes; but Peter, king of Arra-gon, claiming the kingdom, was received by the Sicilians with open arms, was crowned at Pa-lermo, and transmitted Sicily to his descendants. Ferdinand V. united it with Naples. It is go-verned by a viceroy, who resides at Palermo.

SIDMOUTH, a sea-port of Devons. situated, or rather embosomed between two hills, at the mouth of the river Sid, on a bay of the English Channel, 12 m. S of Exeter, and 158 W by S of London. It is a small place, containing only 310 houses, but was one of the most considerable towns in the county, before its harbour (now only frequented by fishing smacks) was choked up. As a watering-place, it is still much frequented, the air being remarkably salubrious, and the situation well adapted to consumptive invalids.

Sidney, Surry, near Awfold. Sidney. Sussex, near Cuckfield.

SIDNEY COVE. See JACKSON, PORT.

SIDON, SAYD, or SEIDA, a sea-port in Palestine, containing about 5000 inhab. It was anciently a place of great note, had an extensive commerce, and is said to be the place where glass was invented. Like all the other Turkish towns, it is ill built, and full of ruins, but has still a considerable trade, and is the emporium of Damascus, and all the interior country. The French are, or were till lately, the only Europeans here. The exports are silk, and raw and spun cottons. It is the residence of a Turkish bashaw, and is 55 m. W of Damascus.

SIEGEBURGH, a town of Berg, in Westphalia.

SIEGEN, a town of Nassau-Siegen, in Westphalia, seated on a river of the same name.

SIENNA, a celebrated city of Italy, in Tuscany, capital of the Siennese, containing about 17,000 inhab. It is upwards of 4 m. in circumf. and surrounded by an old wall. The Gothic cathedral is coated with a black and white marble, within and without, and the pavement is of Mosaic work. The houses are of brick, and the streets are paved with the same; and here is, or lately was, a famous university, and an academy of the Intronati, founded in the 15th century. Sienna is adorned with a great number of palaces, fountains, and superb churches, and with a magnificent hospital. The great area is round, and the houses about it are of the same height, supported by piazzas, under which the people may walk in all weathers. In the middle is a basin, which they can fill with water at any time, and represent a sea-fight with small vessels. The Italian language is taught here with such purity, that a great many foreigners resort to it on that account. Sienna was formerly a free republic, till conquered by the emperor, Charles V. in 1554, whose son, Philip II. king of Spain, ceded all parts, except the Stato-de-gli-Præsidii, to Cosmo I. duke of Florence. It is seated on three eminences, in a healthy, fertile soil, 36 m. S of Florence, and 105 by W of Rome. Lat 43 10 N lon. 11 11 E.

SIENNESE, a duchy in Italy, on the Tuscan Sea, about 55 m. in length, and as much in breadth. The soil is pretty fertile, especially in mulberry trees; and there are several mineral springs. Sienna is the capital.

SIERRA LEONE, a large and fruitful country on the W coast of Africa, so named, according to some authors, by the Portuguese, on account of the mountains on this coast abounding with a great number of lions. Some extend its limits from the Grain Coast on the SE to Cape Verga, or Vega, on the NW, that is, between 7 and 10 deg. N lat. Others, however, confine the country between Cape Verga and Cape Tagrin.

SIERRA LEONE, called also RITOMSA and TAGRIN, a great river of Africa, in the country of Guinea. Its source is uncertain; but its mouth, in lat. 8 5 N lon. 12 30 W, is 8 m. wide. In the open and plain country, on the banks of this river, the heat of the sun, before any breeze arises, is almost intolerable; but as a refreshing gale constantly springs up about noon, it renders the country very supportable. In 1791, an act of parliament was obtained, incorporating a company, called the Sierra Leone Company, for the express purpose of cultivating West India and other tropical productions on the banks of this river, on land purchased of the prince of the country. The first settlers amounted to about 200 white persons, beside a number of free blacks from Nova Scotia. The natives appeared to be extremely friendly; and a few natives, in 1792, had come to work for the colony. On the setting in of the rains, about the latter end of May, the same year, a considerable degree of sickness and mortality prevailed, occasioned chiefly by the insufficiency of the temporary habitations, which could not be completed before the rains set in. Thirty-five white persons (of whom 14 were soldiers) and many of the blacks died of this sickness. The next year, the setting in of the rains was not productive of the same fatal effects. The colonists were in good health, were all put in possession of small lots of land, and a new town, on a regular and extended scale, was begun to be built. A new town has also been built 5 m. in-land, upon a small river called the Hog-Brook. It is named Kingston. Beside the Nova Scotia blacks, a large party of the natives were at work for the company, and the experiments in sugar, cotton, &c. appeared to be promising. The native chiefs and people continue to be extremely friendly; and the company's schools were regularly attended by upwards of 400 children, who appear to have made full as much improvement as is common in European schools, under similar circumstances. The rice, cotton, and other articles in the company's plantations, thrive exceedingly. The colony appears to be gradually improving and advancing in every respect. The river abounds in fish, but is much infested with alligators. The adjacent country produces abundance of millet and rice; and the woods are filled with parrots of various kinds, and other beautiful birds; serpents are found, some of very large size; and numerous wild beasts, such as lions, tigers, elephants, wild boars, and monkeys.

SIERRA LEONE, or MOUNTAINS OF THE LIONS, mountains of Africa, which divide Nigritia from Guinea, and are said to extend as far as Abyssinia.

SIERRA MORENA, a chain of mountains in Spain, which divide Andalusia from New Castile, and from a small part of Estramadura.

SIFANTO, anciently SIPHNOS, an island of the Archipelago, to the W of Paros. The air is so wholesome here, that many of the inhab. live to the age of 120; and their water, fruits, wild-fowl, and poultry, are excellent, but more especially the grapes. It is covered over with marble and granite; and they have lead-mines, and yet it is one of the most fertile and best cultivated of these islands. The inhab. employ themselves in cultivating olive-trees and capers, and they have very good silk. They trade in figs, onions, wax, honey, straw hats, sesamum, and calicoes. Here are 5 villages, and about 5000 inhab. Lat. 36 37 N lon. 25 15 E.

SIGUENSA, a town in Old Castile, containing a cathedral, 3 churches, and between 7 and 800 houses, with an university, consisting of several colleges, founded in 1441, by Cardinal Ximenes. It is seated near the source of the river Henares, 60 m. NE of Madrid.

Silchester, Hants, NE of Kingsclere, a place of good repute in the time of the Romans, and where King Arthur was crowned, according to the British historians. Its ancient walls are yet in a great measure entire, and on the NE side of it is a noble piece of antiquity, a Roman amphitheatre, exactly like that at Dorchester; it has, however, time out of mind, been converted into a yard for cattle, and a watering pond. British tiles, and Roman coins, are often dug up here. Sileby, Leices. NE of Mountsorrel. Sileby, Lincolns. N of Alford. Silesburn, Warwicks. between Warwick and Alcester.

SILESIA, a province or duchy of Germany, said to contain (in the whole country) 180 cities and towns, 4000 villages, and 1,800,000 inhab. It is bounded on the N by the marquisate of Brandenburg and Poland; on the S by Moravia and Hungary; on the E by Poland; and on the W by Lower Lusatia and Bohemia. It is about 274 m. in length, and 100 in breadth. The principal rivers are, the Oder, Vistula, Neisse, Bober, Queis, Oppa, and Else. A long chain of mountains separates Silesia from Bohemia. There are mines of gold and silver; but they have not been worked for many years. There are also some precious stones, but too much time is required to obtain them. The highest mountain of Silesia is called Zotenberg, situated in the principality of Schweidnitz, and is 104 m. in circumf. The most considerable silver mines, at present, are at Reitstein, in the principality of Brieg. There are also mines of lead, copper, and iron, and quarries of various stones, besides antimony, saltpetre, sulphur, alum, vitriol, quicksilver, &c. The principal manufacture is linen cloth; and they have also some woollen manufactories and glass-houses. They feed a great number of cattle, have large studs of horses, and plenty of the common sorts of game in the woods. They have but few lynxes and bear, and fewer wolves, because they give a ducat a head for every one that is killed. They have a great many lakes, full of pike, carp, and other good fish; also plenty of bees, which produce a great deal of honey and wax. They have wheat, barley, oats, millet-seed, and turnips, sufficient for the use of the inhab. In some places they cultivate saffron; and the culture of silk is likely to be carried to its utmost extent. Their wine is very poor, and therefore they turn it mostly into vinegar. Silesia is divided into the Upper and Lower. In the Upper, the inhab. are generally Romanists, speaking the Polish language; and in the Lower, almost all Protestants, and speak their mother tongue. Silesia is divided into 19 principalities, and 7 free states, without comprehending the county of Glatz. The greater part of this country was ceded to the king of Prussia, in 1742, by the treaty of Breslaw, the empress reserving to herself only the principality of Teschen; the part of the principalities of Troppau and Jaggerndorf beyond the Oppa; the part of the principality of Neisse, bordering on Moravia; and a small district bordering on Moravia; with some frontier towns. Breslaw is the capital of Prussian, and Troppau of Bohemian Silesia.

SINAI, a mountain in Arabia Petræa, in a peninsula formed by the two arms of the Red Sea. The Mahometans hold it in great veneration; and here the Christians have a monastery, which formerly contained a great number of monks, and there were a great number of little chapels and cells for hermits. The monastery is surrounded by a high wall, and those that go in and out, are let down or drawn up in baskets. It is 144 m. ESE of Suez.

SINCAPORA, a promontory at the S extremity of the peninsula of Malacca, which, with the Malacca coast, form the Strait of Sincapore. Lat. 1 10 N lon. 103 30 E.

SINDE. See INDUS and TATTA.

Sinderby, Yorks. W of Thirsk. Sindrop, Northumberl. SW of Hexham.

SINDY, a province of Hindostan, bounded on the W by Makran, a province of Persia; on the N by the territories of the king of Candahar; on the NE by those of the Seiks; on the E by a sandy desert; and on the SE by Cutch. It extends along the course of the river Sinde, or Indus, from its mouth to the frontiers of Moultan. Reckoned that way, it is about 300 m. long; and its breadth, in its widest part, is about 160. In many particulars of soil and climate, and in the general appearance of the surface, Sindy not a little resembles Egypt; the lower part of it being composed of rich vegetable mould, and extended into a wide delta; while the upper part is a narrow slip of country, confined on the Persian side by a ridge of mountains, and on the other by a sandy desert; the river Indus, equal at least to the Nile, winding through the midst of this level valley, and annually overflowing it. During great part of the SW monsoon, or our summer quarter, which is the rainy season in most other parts of India, the atmosphere is here generally clouded, but no rain falls, except very near the sea. Indeed very few showers fall during the whole year; and, at the time when Capt. Hamilton visited Tatta, no rain had fallen for three years before. Owing to this, and the neighbourhood of the sandy deserts, which bound it on the E and on the NW, the heats are so violent, and the winds from those quarters so pernicious, that the houses are contrived so as to be occasionally ventilated by means of apertures on the tops of them, resembling the funnels of small chimneys. When the hot winds prevail, the windows are closely shut, by which the hottest part of the current of the air (that nearest the surface) is excluded; and a cooler part, because more elevated, descends into the house through the funnels. By this contrivance also, vast clouds of dust are excluded; the entrance of which would alone be sufficient to render the houses uninhabitable. The roofs are composed of thick layers of earth instead of terraces. Few countries are more unwholesome to European constitutions, particularly the lower part of the delta. The prince is a Mahometan, tributary to the king of Candahar. He resides at Hydrabad, although Tatta is the capital. This province was conquered, in 1739, by Nadir Shah from the Great Mogul, and retained by Abdallah, when he seized the other provinces which compose the empire of Candahar. The Hindoos, who were the original inhab. of Sindy, and were reckoned in Captain Hamilton's time, to outnumber the Mahometans ten to one, are treated with great rigour by their Mahometan governors, and are not permitted to erect any pagodas, or places of worship; and this severity drives vast numbers of them into other countries. The inland parts of Sindy produce saltpetre, sal-ammoniac, borax, bezoar, lapislazuli, and raw silk. They have also manufactures of cotton and silk of various kinds; and they make fine cabinets, inlaid with ivory, and finely lacquered. They also export great quantities of butter clarified, and wrapped up in duppas, made of the hides of cattle. The women wear hoops of ivory on both their arms and legs, and when they die, they are burnt with them. They have large black cattle, excellent mutton, and small, hardy horses. Their wild animals are deer, hares, antelopes and foxes, which they hunt with dogs, leopards, and a small fierce creature called shiahgush.

SINGANFOU, or SINGAN, a city of China, of the first rank, capital of the province of Chensi. Next to Pekin, this is the largest, and most populous, and commercial city of China, and was for several ages the seat of the Chinese emperors. They breed up mules here in great numbers, and send them to Pekin. Lat. 34 46 N lon. 108 13 E.

SINOPE, or SINOB, a sea-port of Kiutaja, in Natolia, the birthplace of Diogenes, the famous cynic. The inhab. who are Turks, will not admit any Jews to reside here, and the Greeks live in the suburbs. It is seated on an isthmus of a peninsula, in the Black Sea, with two good harbours, 280 m. E of Constantinople.

SINTZHEIM, a town in the palatinate of the Rhine, 13 m. SSE of Heidelberg.

SION, or SITTEN, a town of Switzerland, capital of the Valais, seated on a river of the same name, which soon after falls into the Rhone. It contains six churches, with some convents, a college, and no less than 6 episcopal palaces, all standing one above the other. The highest, called Tourbillon, is old, ruinous, and deserted. Near the second, denominated Valeria, are the remains of the old cathedral, and a few houses belonging to the canons. De Marjorei, the third, is the present episcopal palace, an edifice of stone, built in 1547; the apartments furnished with great plainness and simplicity. Sion was formerly the capital of the Seduni, who inhabited this country in the time of Julius Cæsar; and some Roman inscriptions still remain to attest its antiquity. Its bishop is a prince of the empire. It is 48 m. S of Berne.

SION, a famous mountain of Judea, situated on the S side of Jerusalem.

Sion House, Midd. near the influx of the Brent into the Thames, between Brentford and Isleworth. It is a noble, square, stone building, finely finished and furnished, now one of the seats of the Duke of Northumberland.

SIOTO, a river of the United States, in N. America, which rises in the NW territory, in lat. 40 40 N and lon. 83 W, and falls into the Ohio, 12 m. W from Washington, in Kentucky.

SIOUT, OSIOT, or SCIOT, a large, populous, and well-built town in Egypt, with a lake dug near it, which serves to water the grounds. It has several mosques, and is the see of a Copti bishop. Its situation on an artificial mount, denotes its occupying the site of an ancient city, thought to be Nicopolis, where the wolf was accounted a sacred animal. Here are, accordingly, the ruins of an ancient amphitheatre, and some Roman sepulchres. It is surrounded by pleasant gardens, and fine palm-trees, that bear the best dates in Egypt. This place is the rendezvous of those that go in the caravan to Sennar, in Nubia. It is about 2 m. W of the river Nile, and 157 S of Cairo.

SIPHANTO. See SIFANTO.

SIPHNO, a town of the island of Nanfio, in the Archipelago.

SKYE, an island of Scotland, one of the largest of the Western Islands, or Hebrides. It is near 50 m. in length, and, in some places, above 20 broad. The SE end of this island is separated from Invernesss, (to which it belongs) by a narrow channel, the narrowest part of which, cattle are made to swim across. Here is, notwithstanding some mountainous tracts, a great proportion of level ground, with excellent pasturage. There are also numbers of deer, and different kinds of game, in this island, which abounds with limestone, marble, &c. The basaltic columns, resembling the Giant's Causeway in Ireland, are its greatest curiosity. A cave, at the E end of the island, afforded an asylum, in 1746, to the disappointed Pretender, and his faithful guide, for two nights. Many thousands of black cattle are annually exported hence. Some small horses are bred, and a great quantity of kelp manufactured here. Portree is the principal place in this island.

Skyers, Yorks. near Halifax. Skyth, Suf. N of Mendlesham. Slad, Gloucesters. in Painswick parish. Sladborn, Yorks. W. Riding, near Bowland Forest. Slade, Devons. NE of Plympton. Slade, Gloucesters. a hamlet to Miserden.

Slaughbam, Sussex, SE of Horsham. Slaughden Vale, Suf. near Aldborough. Here is a con-modious quay, with warehouses for fish; and a little more to the S are conveniences for drying fish. The fishery, which is considerable in the seasons for catching herrings and sprats, is the chief employment of the inhab. as likewise of those of Aldborough; and it is the only place in England for curing red sprats. Slaughterford, Wilts. S of Castlecomb. Slaughterford, Upper, and Nether, Gloucesters. near Stow-in-the-Would. Slauston, Leicesters. S of Hallaton.

SLAWKAW, or SCHLAKENWALD, a town of Elnbogen, Bohemia.

Sleady, Northumberl. S of Dilston.

SLEAFORD, NEW, so called to distinguish it from Old Sleaford, in the neighbourhood: a populous, thriving town in Lincolns. continually improving in its buildings. It is seated on a small, rapid stream, which drives several corn and fulling mills, &c. near the town, and soon falls into the Witham, 18 m. S of Lincoln, and 115 N of London. Market on Mond. Its markets on Mond. after Epiphany, Easter, and Whitsuntide, are equal to some great fairs. Fairs on Plow-Mond. Whit-Mond. Aug. 12, and Oct. 10.

SLESWICK, a town of Denmark, containing about 5630 inhab. It is an irregular town of great length. The houses are of brick, and, like all the other towns in this country, resemble, in neatness and manner of building, those of Holland. The inhab. dress also like the Dutch; and many of them speak their tongue, though the usual languages are the German and Danish. It is situated on the Sley, which is now no longer a port, being choked up with sand, 60 m. N of Hamburg. Lat. 54 39 N lon. 9 38 E.

SLESWICK, or SOUTH JUTLAND, a duchy of Denmark, N of Holstein, from which it is mostly separated by the river Eyder. It contains several towns, and 1500 villages, and has from time immemorial been united to Denmark, but has sometimes been given to the brother of the reigning king, as a fief. In the last century, however, the duke, in possession, attempted to become an independent prince, but in 1720, it was recovered to the crown. The governor and counsellors reside at Gottorp. This duchy is about 72 m. in length, and from 30 to 56 in breadth; and is a level, fertile, populous, and well-cultivated country. Sleswick is the capital, being 60 m. NW of Lubeck.

Slewen, Cornw. between Mount's Bay, and Land's End. Slewesholm Priory, Norf. in Methwold parish.

Slidery Ford, a little river in Down, Ulster, running into the inner bay of Dundrum. Slieve Bingan, Croob, Donard, Na Boil Trough; Na Grideal, Neir, and Sephin, or Snawen, mountains in Down, Ulster. Slieve-Bloom, a range of mountains between the King's and Queen's Counties. Slieve-Carmen, a name given to the mountains of Wicklow. Slieve-Miss, a name given to the mountains between the bays of Tralee and Castlemain, in Kerry, Munster.

Slifield, Surry, near Epsom.

SLIGO, a county of Ireland in the province of Connaught, about 32 m. in length, and 29 in its greatest breadth; bounded on the W by Mayo; and on the N and NW by the Atlantic; on the E by Leitrim; and on the SE, S and SW by Roscommon and Mayo. It contains 39 parishes, about 11,500 houses, and 60,000 inhab. Sligo is the only town of consequence. There are, however, some considerable villages, in which the linen manufacture flourishes. The soil is in some parts good, in others coarse, and, towards the coast, boggy.

SLIGO, a town, the capital of the county of the same name, is seated on a river that runs into a bay of the same name, navigable for vessels of 1200 tons, up to the quays. It has a considerable trade; the number of houses in 1788 was 916, and the number of inhab. about 8000. It is 26 m. NNE of Killala, and 94 NNW of Dublin.

SMITH'S ISLAND, in the S. Pacific Ocean, discovered by Lieutenant Ball, in 1790. Lat. 9 44 S lon. 161 54 E.

SMOLAND, or SMALAND, a province of Sweden, in which are 21 lakes, immense forests of pine and fir, and some iron mines. The approach to the villages here is announced by groves of oak, beech, and birch, and by numerous plots, or parterres, of arable land among pastures and rocks. An acre of land in this country, has been frequently observed to be laid out with alternate slips of rye, barley, flax, and hemp; the intervals between, and around, sown with grass. In many parts, the trees are cut down and burnt, in order to manure the soil. This province is about 100 m. long, and 60 broad, and was formerly governed by kings of its own. It was formerly included in E. Gothland.

SMOLENSKO, a city of Russia, capital of the government of the same name. It is built so as to extend over two mountains, and the valley between them. It is surrounded by walls 30 feet high, and 15 thick: the lower part of them is built of stone, the upper of brick, and the circumf. is 4¾ m. They are surmounted by towers, 3 stories high, placed at the angles, between which are others of a smaller size; and in the plain, the walls are surrounded by a deep ditch and covered way. The houses are mostly of wood, and only one story high. The city is divided through its whole length by one straight, paved street, the others are circular and floored with planks. The alternate rising and sinking of the walls, from the inequality of the ground, their gothic architecture, and grotesque towers, the steeples rising above the trees, which conceal the houses from the sight, the gardens, meadows, and corn-fields, within the walls, altogether form a truly singular, picturesque, and varied prospect. Notwithstanding its extent, however, it contains only about 4000 inhab. and has no proper manufactories, but carries on, with Dantzic, Riga, and the Ukraine, a pretty considerable traffic in linen, hemp, honey, wax, leather, furs, timber, hides, hogs' bristles, &c. It is situated on the Dnieper, 197 m. NE of Novogrodeck, and 180 WSW of Moscow. Lat. 54 50 N lon. 31 22 E.

SMOLENSKO, a government of Russia, on the frontiers of Lithuania. It contains White Russia, properly so called.

SMOW, a noted cavern on the N coast of Sutherlands, between Cape Wrath and Loch Eribol. It runs so far under ground that its extremity, it is said, could never yet be explored.

SMYRNA, or ISMIR, a considerable city and sea-port of Natolia, situated on a spacious bay of the Mediterranean. The commodiousness of the harbour (which is capable of containing the largest navy) has caused it to be rebuilt several times, after having been destroyed by earthquakes. It is the common rendezvous of merchants from all parts of the world, especially of English, and the staple of their merchandise. The whole town, indeed, is a continual bazar, or fair, where nothing is wanted for clothing, sustenance, or pleasure, as all the best commodities of Europe and Asia are brought hither and vended at cheap rates. The Turks have 19 mosques, the Greeks form 2 churches, the Jews 8 synagogues, the Armenians 1 church, and the Latins have 3 convents. There are 3 bishops, one Greek, another Latin, and the third Armenian. The streets are more open, better paved, and the houses better built, than in other towns of this part of the continent. The street of the Franks is the finest in Smyrna, stretching along the harbour, and here the European consuls live in great state and magnificence. Smyrna is eight days' journey from Constantinople by land, 25 days from Aleppo by the caravans, and 6 from Satalia. The caravans of Persia often bring 200 bales of silk in a year, beside drugs and cloth. The other commodities brought here, are thread made of goats' hair, cotton, yarn, cotton in bags, various kinds of drugs, and all sorts of carpets. Most of the trade here, as well as in all Turkey, passes through the hands of the Jews, the Turks never transacting any bargain with Christians. The English and Dutch factories have Protestant chapels; and taverns are as open here as in Europe. The territory about Smyrna is fertile, with fine olive trees and vines; and the wine is excellent. It is 176 m. SSW of Constantinople. Lat. 38 28 N lon. 27 25 E.

SNACKENBURG, a large trading town of Lunenburg-Zoll, 68 m. ENE of Zoll.

Snailwell, Cumberl. near Newmarket.

SNAITH, a little town in the W. Riding of Yorks. but of good trade, from the navigation to it in boats. It is situated at the conflux of the rivers Aire and Don 22 m. S of York, and 174 N by W of London. Market on Frid.

SNAKENBURGH, a town of Brandenburgh, on the Elbe, 10 m. N of Schausen.

W of Clay. Snitterton, Norf. between Harpham and Lerling. Snodhurst, Kent, partly in Chatham, and partly in the limits of Rochester. Snodland, Kent, by the Medway, 4½ m. NW of Maidstone. Snore-Hall, Norf. near the river Wissey, S of Downham. Snoreham, Essex, adjoining Lachington. Snoring, Magna, and Parva, Norf. near Walsingham. Snotterton, Durham, near Staindrop. Snowden-Hall, Herefords. near the Golden Vale and the river Doier. Snowden-Pool, Staffords. W of Patshall.

SNOWDON, a famous mountain of Caernarvons. in N. Wales, which occupies the centre of the county. Its name signifies literally the Hill of Snow, from snow and down. Eryri, the Welsh name, is derived from Mynyd Eryod, the Hill of Eagles. This is the most noted eminence in the whole region of the Welsh hills; its top, by way of eminence, is termed y Wyddfa; that is, the conspicuous. On the top there are bogs, and two lakes that abound with fish, particularly the char and the gurnard. Mr. Pennant says, "that the height of the mountain, reckoning, from the quay of Caernarvon to its highest peak, is 3568 feet. It was held sacred by the ancient Britons, as Parnassus was by the Greeks, and Ida by the Cretans." From the summit may be seen a part of Ireland, of Scotland, and of Cumberland, Lancashire, Cheshire, and all N. Wales, the Irish and British seas, and a vast number of Lakes.

Snowshill, Gloucesters. near Broadway. Snukebank, Northumberl. between Alnwick and Rothbury. Snyte, a river which rises in Leicesters. and passing through Nottinghams. falls into the Dean at Shilton. Soak, Hants, near Winchester.

SOANA, or SUANE, a decayed town of Tuscany in the Siennese, 30 m. SE of Sienna.

SOANE, a river of Hindostan, which rises on the southern confines of Allahabad, issuing from the lake, that is the source of the Nerbudda, and after a course of about 1500 m. falls into the Ganges a few m. W of Patna.

SOBATZ, a town of Sclavonia, 30 m. SW of Belgrade.

SOBERNHEIM, a town of Sponheim, in the circle of Upper Rhine.

SOBIESLAU, a town of Bechin, in Bohemia.

SOCHEU, a town of China, in the province of Chensi. Here is a temple dedicated to a blind man, said to have been one of the greatest politicians in China.

SOCIETY ISLES, a cluster of isles, discovered by Captain Cook, in 1769, and so named by him, because they lie contiguous to each other. They are situated between the latitudes of 16 10 and 16 55 S and between longitudes of 150 57 and 152 W. They are 7 in number; namely, Huaheine, Ulietea, Otaha, Bolabola, Mauroua, Toobaee, and Tabooyamenoo. The soil, productions, people, their language, religion, customs and manners, are nearly the same as at Otaheite. The soil is equally bountiful and fertile, and the inhab. are as luxurious and indolent. A plantain branch is the emblem of peace among them, and changing names the greatest token of friendship. Their dances, however, are more elegant; their dramatic entertainments also have something of plot and consistency, and they exhibit temporary occurrences as the objects of praise or satire: so that the origin of ancient comedy may be fairly discerned among them. The inhab. seemed to be stouter than those of Otaheite, and the women were in general fairer and handsomer, though none were equal to some individuals. Those of Ulietea, however, were smaller and blacker, and much less orderly. Mr. Banks found here only eleven new plants; but he observed some insects, and a species of scorpion he had never seen before. Among these islands are several excellent harbours; the entrances into them, indeed, are generally narrow, yet, when a ship is once in, nothing can hurt her.

Sock, Somers. 3 m. from Yeovil. Sockborn, Durham, on the Tees, 4 m. SE of Darlington. Sockbridge, Westmore. on the Elmot, near Penrith. Sockneys, Sussex, near Burwash and Salehurst. Socomb, Kent, NW of Wye.

SOCONUSCO, a district of Guatimala, in Mexico, S of the district of Chiapa, on the N. Pacific Ocean. It is about 88 m. in length, and almost as much in breadth. It is sheltered from the N winds by high mountains, which renders the air exceedingly hot, and the country is not very healthful or fertile. The few Spaniards who were settled here are extremely rich. Great quantities of indigo and cocoa-nuts are raised here, which are sent to all the other parts of Mexico.

SOCOTARA, a populous, fruitful island in the Arabian Sea, about 50 m. in length, and 20 in breadth. The capital, of the same name, is situated on a river near the sea, in lat. 15 24 N. The natives are Mahometans, with a mixture of Paganism. They trade to Goa with the produce of their island, viz. fine aloes, frankincense, ambergrease, dragon's blood, rice, dates, and coral, which are transported from thence to many parts of India and all Europe. The sultan is tributary to the princes of Arabia. The shore everywhere affords safe anchorage and good ports, and here are, in particular, two remarkably fine harbours, where shipping may ride secure from every wind that blows. Lat. 12 15 N lon. 54 E.

SODA, a town of Hedjas, Arabia.

Sodbury, Durham, near Darlington.

SODBURY, CHIPPING, an ancient town of Gloucesters. containing 233 houses, and several good inns, as it is a great thoroughfare on the road between Bristol and Cirencester. It has a considerable market for corn, and the greatest cheese-market in England, except Athelstone, in Warwicks. It is 15 m. ENE of Bristol, and 112 W of London. Market on Thurs. Fairs on May 23, and June 24.

Sodbury, Little, and Old, Gloucesters. 1 m. ENE of Chipping Sodbury.

SOCORRO, a barren, uninhabited island in the N. Pacific Ocean, about 70 leag. W from the coast of Mexico. Lat. 18 30 N.

SODOM, formerly a city of Asia, situated on a plain, now under water, in what is called the Dead Sea, or Lake Asphaltites, in Judea.

Sodor, a little village in Icolmkill; one of the Western Isles of Scotland, near that of Mull.

SOEBORG, a town of Denmark, in the island of Zealand, 9 m. WNW of Elsinore.

SOEST, a town of Mark, in Westphalia, 27 m. SE of Munster, formerly imperial, and one of the Hanse Towns, but since 1752 has been subject to the king of Prussia. Several of the successors of the Emperor Charlemagne resided here.

SOFALA, or QUITERVE, a kingdom of Africa, bounded on the E by the Mosambique sea, on the S by Sabia, and on the N and W by the States of Monomotapa. The inhab. cultivate rice and millet, and eat the flesh of elephants, large and small cattle, and fish. They also make a sort of beer of rice and millet; and other liquors of honey, palm, and fruits. Honey here is in such plenty, that a great part of it lies neglected. All the coasters are descended from the Arabians, yet are commonly black, there being but few tawny or brown among them. Many learned men affirm, that Solomon had his gold from the mines in this country, and that the country of Sofala is the Ophir of the ancients, the gold here being generally allowed to be the finest and purest in all Africa. It is governed by a king, tributary to the Portuguese, who built a fort at the principal town, which is of the same name, and of great importance for their trade to the E. Indies. It is seated in a small island, near the mouth of a river. Lat 20 20 S lon. 37 30 E.

SOFIA, or SOPHIA, a commercial, populous, and well-built city of Turkey, in Europe, capital of Bulgaria, originally built by the Emperor Justinian, on the ruins of the ancient Sardica. The streets, however, are narrow, uneven, and dirty. It is 164 m. WNW of Adrianople.

SOFROY, a town of Chaus, in Fez, noted for a handsome mosque: the principal commerce is in oil. It is 22 m. E of Fez.

SOGNO, a maritime province of Congo, in Africa, S of the river Zaire. It is a dry, sandy country, abounding in salt. The inhab. are mostly Christians, converted by the Portuguese. The capital, Banza Sogno, is a small place; the Capuchins, however, form a church here.

SOHAM, (formerly called MONK'S SOHAM, from its rich monastery) a town of Cambridges. celebrated for its cheese, seated on the river Cam, near Soham Meer, (which takes up 1000 acres of land) 5 m. SSE of Ely, and 70 N by E of London. Market on Sat.

Soham Earls, Suff. near Soham.

Soho, the extensive manufactory 2 m. from Birmingham, first established by Mr. Bolton, for different articles in the Birmingham trade, &c. particularly steam-engines on the most extensive and powerful plan; the buildings now cover many acres of ground.

SOIGNIES, a town of Hainault, seated on the Senne, near a forest, to which it gives name, 6 m. NNE of Mons.

Soilwell, Gloucesters. in Lidney parish.

SOISSONS, an ancient city in the depart. of Aisne, so named from the Suessiones, a people of ancient Gaul. It contains about 12,000 inhab. and was lately a bishop's see, and the capital of a district called the Soissonois. The environs are beautiful, but the streets are narrow, and the houses ill-built. Under the kings of the first race it was the capital of a kingdom of the same name. The castle, however, here, though ancient, is not that in which those princes resided. It is seated on the river Aisne, 30 m. W by N of Rheims, and 60 NE of Paris.

SOLANDER ISLAND, in the S. Pacific Ocean, near the S coast of New Zealand. It is about a m. in circuit, and was discovered by Captain Cook, in 1770. Lat. 46 31 S.

Solbe, Selby, or Selbe, a river in the Isle of Man.

SOLEBAY. See SOUTHWOLD.

Soley, Kent, in Barfriston parish. Solesby, Lincolns. N of Alford.

SOLEURE, or SOLOTHURNE, a town of Switzerland, capital of the canton of the same name, containing about 4000 inhab. It was a principal town in the kingdom of Burgundy, and frequently the residence of its kings. Among the most remarkable objects of curiosity in this town, is a new church which was begun in 1762, and finished in 1772. It is a grand and elegant building, of the Corinthian and Composite orders, and cost at least 80,000*l.* though the revenues of the republic scarcely exceed 12,000*l.* a year. Soleure is the usual residence of the French ambassador to the Cantons, and is seated on the Aar, which here expands into a noble river, 18 m. N of Bern. Lat. 47 15 N lon. 7 20 E.

SOLEURE, a canton of Switzerland, which holds the eleventh rank in the Helvetic confederacy, into which it was admitted in the year 1481. It is situated between the canton of Bern and the canton and bishopric of Basil, and contains about 50,000 inhab. It is 35 m. in length, and from 12 to 24 in breadth. The soil, for the most part, is exceedingly fertile in corn; and the districts within the Jura abound in excellent pastures. The inhab. export some corn, horses, cattle, and skins. The sovereign power resides in the great council, which, including the senate, or little council of 36, consists of 102 members. The government is a complete aristocracy, and the inhab. are almost all Roman Catholics.

Soley, Wilts, in Chilton-Foliot parish.

SOLFATARA or LAGO-DI-BAGNI, a lake of Italy, in the Campagna-di-Roma, near Tivoli, formerly called Lacus Albulus. In this lake are several floating islands, which, however, are nothing but bunches of matted sedge and herbage, adhering together by the bitumen which swims on the surface of the lake, and the sulphur with which its waters are impregnated. Some of these islands are 12 or 15 yards long; the soil is strong enough to bear five or six people, who, by a pole, may move to different parts of the lake, as if they were in a boat. The water is chalky and sulphureous; towards the surface scarcely lukewarm, but deeper, very hot, and continually boiling. Anciently the waters of this lake had a high medical reputation, and now, bathing in it, is recommended for a variety of cutaneous diseases.

SOLFATARA, a mountain S of the city of Naples in the Terra di Lavora, with a cavity above 1 m. in length and breadth, which constantly smokes in the day, and flames in the night. The king derives a considerable revenue from the manufactures of sulphur, alum, and vitriol, in this neighbourhood. The ground is almost everywhere full of sulphur, and in digging ever so little a way into it, the soil will smoke. If opened to a considerable depth, the earth will be insupportable from the heat and exhalations. Here is also a lake full of black, thick water, which seems always to be boiling.

SOLFWITZBURG, or SYLVISBORG, a seaport of Blekingen, in Sweden.

Solihull, Warwicks. 12 m. W of Coventry, and 107 NW of London. Market disused. It contains 510 houses.

SOLIMAN, a town of Tunis.

SOLINGEN, a town of Berg, in Westphalia.

SOLIKAMSK, a town of Perm, in Russia, famous for its salt-pits and good horses.

SOLMS, a principality of Germany, in the Wetterav. The counts are divided into several branches.

SOLMS, or BURG SOLMS, a town of Solms Braunfels, in the circle of the Upper Rhine.

SOLOMON ISLANDS, in the S. Pacific Ocean, said to be in lat. about 8 or 10 deg. S. lon. 160 W.

SOLOR, an island in the Indian Ocean, S of Celebes, governed by its own king. Lat. 9 0 S lon. 123 55 E.

SOLSONA. See SALSONA.

SOLTAU, a town of Lunenburgh-Zell.

Solvath, Pembrokes. a small harbour or cove, surrounded with high and barren rocks, near St. David's.

SOLWAY FRITH, a large arm of the sea, between Cumberl. and Kircudbrights. The narrow part of it, at Boulness, is safely forded at low-water, with a guide, although the current be extremely rapid.

SOLWAY MOSS, a large, black morass, in Cumberl. near the river Esk, on the borders of Scotland. It consists of 1600 acres of thin, peaty mud, with a crust too weak, in the driest summer, to support a man's weight. In December, 1769, being swoln by the heavy rains, it burst through the shell of turf which covered it, and spread a black stream, filled with masses of peat, over 400 acres of cultivated land in the neighbouring valley, which it entirely filled up. On this occasion, large horns of deer, and other substances were ejected.

Somborn, Upper, and Lower, Hants, near Stockbridge.

SOMBRERA, a small uninhabited island in the W. Indies. Lat. 18 40 N lon. 63 25 W.

SOMBRERE CHANNEL, a channel between the Nicobar Islands.

Somegill, a river in Radnors. which runs into the Lug, a little below Presteign. Somerby, Lincolns. between Horncastle and Alford. Somerby, Lincolns. near Grantham. Somerby, Lincolns. near Gainsborough. Somerby, Lincolns. near Glandford Bridge. Somercotes, N. and S. Lincolns. near Saltfleetby. Somerfield, or Somerville, Kent, near Selling. Somerford, Ches. near Congleton. Somerford, Hants, near Christ-Church. Somerford, Staffords. on the Penk, near Brewood. Somerford, Great, Wilts, SE of Malmsbury. Somerford, Little, Wilts, on the Isis, near Cricklade. Somerhill, Kent, in Tunbridge parish, 3 m. from Maidstone. Somer House, Durham, between Darlington and Staindrop. Somerley, Suff. on the Yare, near Leostoff. Somerley-Hall, or Somerleton, Suff. by Heringfleet. Somersall-Hall, Derbys. in Scarsdale. Somersall, Herbert, and St. Peter's, Derbys. near Boylston. Somerscale, Yorks. near Barden Tower and Chace.

SOMERSETSHIRE, a county of England, bounded on the NW by the Bristol Channel; on the N by Gloucesters. from which it is divided by the Avon; on the E by Wilts. on the SE by Dorsets. and on the SW by Devons. Its length from NE to SW is about 65 m. and its breadth from E to W between 30 and 40. It is divided into 40 hundreds, which contain 3 cities, 33 market-towns, 484 parishes, 52,662 houses, and 303,180 inhab. The air, in the lower grounds, is universally mild, and generally wholesome. The soil is various. The NE quarter is in general stony, and possesses a lofty tract, called the Mendip-Hills. Toward the centre of the county, where its principal rivers unite, are fens and marshy moors of great extent. On the W side is the ridge of the Quantock-Hills, with many downs and open heaths; and in the NW corner lies the black sterile region of Exmoor. The S part, towards Dorsets. is high, but well cultivated; and throughout the county, especially in its SW quarter, vales of the greatest fertility are interspersed. The principal rivers are the Parret, Ivel, Chew, Axe, Thone, Brent, Exe, Frome, and Avon. The Mendip-Hills afford abundance of coal and minerals. Chedder is celebrated for its cheeses. Cattle, nearly equal in size to the Lincolns. are fed in the fine meadows about the head of the Parret. The best goose feathers, for beds, come from the Somerset marshes; the unfeeling inhab. however, often pluck the poor birds while yet living. Red and yellow ochre are found here, and cyder is a common product of this country; it has also a considerable share in the manufacture of fine cloths, druggets, shalloons, knit stockings, &c.

Somersham, Huntingdons. among the fens, NE of St. Ives. Somersham, Suf. S of Needham.

SOMERTON, a town of Somersets. formerly a considerable place, from which the county took its name; seated on a branch of the Parret, 13 m. S by W of Wells, and 123 W by S of London. The West Saxon kings had a castle here, now demolished, the constableship of which appears to have been a considerable trust, for king John of France, who was removed from Hertford Castle, and prisoners of the highest rank, were committed to it. There is one county jail at Ilchester, and another at Somerton, and the assizes are held at Wells, although generally in the summer alternately with Taunton and Bridgewater. It contains 323 houses, and 1478 inhab. and is chiefly noted for its large markets, on Tues. for corn and cattle, and on every other Mond. for lean cattle. The markets for beasts are considerable. Fairs on Tues. in Passion Week, Tues. 3 weeks after ditto, Tues. 6 weeks after ditto, and Tues. 9 weeks after ditto.

Somerton, Suf. NW of Melford. Somerton-Castle, Lincolns. NE of Beckingham. Somerton, E. and W. Norf. near Winterton Ness.

SOMME, a depart. of France, bounded on the N by the depart. of the Straits of Calais, and on the E by the depart. of the Aisne. It is so named from a river that rises in the depart. of Aisne, and watering St. Quentin, Peronne, Amiens, Abbeville, &c. enters the English Channel, about 5 m. WNW from St. Valery. Amiens is the capital.

Sommercotes, N. and S. Lincolns. on each side of Saltfleet. Sommeris, Bedfords. 2 m. NE of Luton.

SOMMIERES, a town in the depart. of Gard, noted for a manufacture of thick serges, which bear its name. It is seated on the river Vidourle, 10 m. SSW of Nismes.

Sompting, Sussex, 2½ m. from Shoreham.

SONCINO, a town in the Cremonese.

SONDERSHAUSEN, a town of Schwartzburg, in Upper Saxony. In the armory of the ruling prince is an image of Pastrich, one of the old Wendish idols.

SONDRIO, or SONDERS, a town in the country of the Grisons, capital of the Valteline. It is said to resemble a deserted place, having little trade or animation. In 1620, here was a dreadful massacre of the Protestants, which lasted 3 days; it began at Tirano, and extended to all the towns of the Valteline. Sondrio is built in a romantic situation, at the extremity of a narrow valley, on both sides of the Malenco, a rapid torrent, which frequently overflows its banks, 15 m. SSE of Chiavenna.

SONERCON, or SUNNERGAUM, a village, once a large city of Hindostan, the provincial capital of the eastern division of Bengal; famous for a manufacture of fine cotton cloths, before Dacca was built. It is seated on a branch of the Burrampooter, 15 m. SE of Dacca.

SONNEBURG, a town in the archduchy of Austria, a citadel of which gives name to a country in the circle of Austria, vested in the house of Austria; and a town of Coburg, in Upper Saxony.

SONNENSTEIN, a fortress of Meissen, in Upper Saxony, near Pirna. Near this place a Saxon army, of 17,500 men, had encamped and entrenched in 1756, but being unable to pass the Elbe into Bohemia, were compelled by the Prussians, who had blocked up the river at Ebenheit, to surrender prisoners at discretion.

SONORA, a province of New Navarre, in N. America, situated on the coast of the Gulf of California. It is but little known.

SOOLOA, an island of the Eastern Ocean, situated to the SW of Mindanao, almost midway between that island and Borneo. It is about 30 m. long and 12 broad, and contains about 60,000 inhab. who are governed by a sultan. The natives are Malays. It is a great mart, and the English East-India Company have a resident here. Abundance of edible birds'-nests are found in the rocks of the neighbouring sea, but its principal production is sago.

SOORANGUR, a town of Hindostan, in the Orissa country, situated near the river Mahanada, 275 m. W of Calcutta.

SOUND, THE, or ORESOUND, a strait between Sweden and Denmark, through which ships usually sail between the ocean and the Baltic. It is about 4 m. broad, and here the Danes take toll of the merchant-ships that pass. See ELSINORE.

SOUR, or SUR, a sea-port of Syria, in the pachalic of Saida, or Acre, near the remains of the ancient and celebrated Tyre. It is now a village, situated on a peninsula, which projects from the shore into the sea. This head of land is a solid rock, covered, however, with a brown cultivable earth, and forming a plain about 800 paces long by 400 broad. The isthmus joining the plain to the continent is of pure sea-sand; this difference of soil renders the insular state of the plain, before Alexander joined it to the shore by a mole, very visible. On this isthmus the village of Sour is situated. In one point of the peninsula is a bason, which was evidently a port formed by art, but is now so choked up, that children pass it without being wet above the middle. Just without the walls of the ancient city, on the eastern side, is an ancient tower, which contains several wells of excellent water; they are about 15 cubits deep; and though the water does not rise in them above 8 inches, they are never dry. About the beginning of October, this water always becomes so muddy, as to be unfit for use; but by throwing a few pitchers of sea water into the well, it soon recovers its transparency; this operation, which the inhab. call the marriage of the sea and land waters, gives occasion to an annual festival, which is celebrated with music and dancing. The purple dye, so highly celebrated by the ancients, is now no longer known here; but a modern voyager, the Abbé Mariti, informs us, that when he visited Tyre, walking on the sea-shore, his guide shewed him a species of murex, which emitted a beautiful purple fluid; but the use of it, as a colour, is unknown to the Arabs. Here are only 50 or 60 poor families, who live on the produce of their little grounds and gardens, and a trifling fishery. At the SE corner are the ruins of a Christian church. It is 18 m. S of Saida, and 80 NNW of Jerusalem.

SOURE, or SURE, a river which runs from E to W through Luxemberg, and falls into the Moselle, a little above Treves.

SOURNIA, a town in the depart. of the Eastern Pyrenees, 21 m. W of Perpignan.

SOUSE, or SUSA, a town of Tunis, one of the best in the country, capital of a province of the same name. It is a place of some trade for oil and linen, and has a good harbour. It is 54 m. S of Tunis.

SOUTCHEOU, a city of the first rank, in the province of Kiangnan, in China, beautifully and agreeably situated on a river which communicates with the lake Tai. It is extolled by the Chinese as an earthly paradise, for the delightfulness of the adjacent country, &c. The brocades and embroidery made here are highly esteemed.

Soutern-Castle, near York.

SOUTERRAINE, a town in the depart. of Creuse, 12 m. W of Gueret.

South, Sussex, near Beachy-Head. South-Acre, Norf. near Castle-Acre.

SOUTHAM, a town of Warwicks. with a considerable market for cattle. It is seated in a fertile soil, 8 m. SE of Warwick, and 83 NW of London. Market on Mond. Fair on July 10.

Southam, Gloucesters. in Bishop's-Cleve parish, rendered remarkable for the antique house belonging to this tithing, which is a low building, in the style of the age of Henry IV. The hall floor is of painted brick, brought from Hales Abbey, in high preservation, on which are many curious devices.

SOUTHAMPTON, formerly called HANTUN, a town of Hamps. situated on a fine inlet of the sea, called Trissanton Bay, or Southampton Water, deep enough for ships of 1500 tons' burden, or rather for the largest ships. The two principal rivers that flow into it (the Itchen and the Teste, Tese, or Anton) admit small craft some way up the country. The town is situated between these two rivers, and contains 6 parishes, 1,573 houses, and 9,617 inhab. It was formerly a port of great commerce, and still possesses a respectable trade in French and Port wines, and in the Newfoundland fishery; having a particular connection, moreover, with Guernsey and Jersey. The vessels employed in foreign commerce are about 30; and in the coasting-trade upwards of 100. Here are also manufactures of silk and carpets. The new church here is much admired, being chiefly designed by Mr. Reevely, from various ancient temples in Italy and Greece, and much above the general character of English buildings. The roof is said to be the most masterly performance of the kind in the world. It is a fashionable place of resort for sea-bathing; and it was on this beach that the Danish king Canute gave that striking reproof to his parasitical courtiers, when the disobedient tide washed his feet and wetted his robes. Two miles from this town is Woodmills, where there is a curious manufactory of ship-blocks, from which the royal dockyards are supplied. Southampton is 12 m. SSW of Winchester, and 75 WSW of London. Markets on Tues. Thurs. and Sat.

SOUTHAMPTON, THE COUNTY OF. See HAMPSHIRE.

SOUTHAMPTON, a county of Virginia.

South-Ash, Kent, by Wrotham. Southaven-Point, Dorsets. in Pool Harbour. Southbrent, Somersets. Southbridge, Norf. Southwaite, Cumberl. near Keswick.

SOUTHWARK, a town of Surry, which may be considered as part of the metropolis, being seated on the opposite side of the Thames, and under the jurisdiction of the lord mayor, who is its bailiff, with a steward and deputy bailiff under him. It is also one of the city wards, named Bridge Ward Without, and an alderman is chosen to govern it. It is called the Borough, by way of distinction, and is a large and populous place, participating considerably in the commerce of London. The bishop of Winchester had formerly a palace here, with a park; when there were 18 brothels along the Bankside, licensed by that prelate, under certain regulations confirmed by parliament. The prostitutes kept here were commonly called Winchester geese. It is divided into two parts, the Borough Liberty, governed by the lord mayor; and the Clink, or Manor of Southwark, under the jurisdiction of the bishop of Winchester, who, by his steward, keeps a court leet and a court of record on the Bankside. A court of conscience is established here, as well as in London. Southwark contains 6 parishes, containing 11,802 houses, and 72,119 inhab. a new Romish chapel, many places of worship for the dissenters of various denominations; several charitable foundations, particularly those two noble endowments, St. Thomas's Hospital, and Guy's Hospital; together with the Magdalen Hospital, the Asylum for Female Orphans; the Freemasons' School, a lately erected building, for the same purpose; the Philanthropic Reform, &c. Beside the King's Bench and Marshalsea prisons, and the county Bridewell, a new county-gaol, with a session-house adjoining, has been lately built. The court-house at St. Margaret's Hill has been also rebuilt.

Southwate, Lanc. on the Dudden, W of Fourness Fells. Southwater, Sussex. Southweald, Essex, to which Brentwood is a hamlet, is situated on an eminence that commands an extensive prospect, 16 m. ENE of London. Southweek, Gloucesters. in Tewkesbury parish. Southweek, Hants, 5 m. N of Portsmouth; it commands a fine view of the harbour, dock, Isle of Wight, &c. as also of an extensive vale on the land side, well planted and cultivated, bounded with hills, spread with woods; and of the S. Downs, covered with sheep.

SOUTHWELL, a town in Nottinghams. noted for a church, both parochial and collegiate, called a minster, the middle of the western part of which is of Saxon architecture. There belong to it 16 prebends, or canons, 6 vicars choral, an organist, 6 singing-men, 6 choristers, 6 boys, who attend as probationers, a registrary, treasurer, an auditor, and a verger. The chapter has a peculiar civil jurisdiction over 28 parishes, to most of which it has the right of presentation, besides others in Yorks. and Lincoln. It is situated on the Greet, a branch of the Trent, 14 m. NE of Nottingham, and 139 NW by N of London. Market on Sat.

Southwick, Hants. Southwick, Sussex.

SOUTHWOLD, a populous sea-port of Suff. seated on a cliff, or point of land, near a fine bay, at the mouth of the river Blythe. Here a much esteemed salt is made, and it trades largely in herrings, sprats, corn, &c. It is almost surrounded by water, especially at very high tide. It is commonly called SOWLE, or SOLE, and its bay, named SOLEBAY, is remarkable for two famous sea-fights; one in 1666, between the English fleet, of 114 men of war and frigates, and the Dutch fleet of 103 men of war, when the latter were defeated, with the loss of near 30 ships, 2 admirals, and 6000 men, while the English lost only one ship. The fight of 1672 was between the combined fleets of England and France, consisting of 101 men of war, and the Dutch fleet of 91. The issue of the day was rather uncertain; the English lost four ships and the Dutch three. Southwold is 20 m. S of Yarmouth, and 104 NE of London. Market on Thurs.

Southwood, Hants, between South-Sea Castle and Thorney Island. Southworth, Lancash. N of Warrington. Southy-Bank, Lincolns. in Lower Holland.

SOUTRA HILL, the most elevated hill in the mountainous ridge of Lammermuir, in the N part of Berwicks. in Scotland. In former times it was a noted sea-mark. In this dreary part of the country there is scarce a tree or a bush, and few houses or villages; some successful exertions, however, have been made to improve the southern side of this mountain, near the village of Channelkirk.

SOUVIGNY, a town in the depart. of Allier, seated on the river Quesne, 6 m. W of Moulins, and 107 S of Paris.

Sow, a river in Staffords. which runs into the Trent at Tixall, about 3 m. E of Stafford. Sow, a river in Warwicks. which runs into the Avon, above Stoneleigh Abbey, about 4 m. N of Warwick. Sowbarrow, Cumberl. near Penrith. Sowberthwate, Lancash. N of Dalton. Sowcam, Nottinghams. N of Mansfield. Sowe, Warwicks. on the river Sow, NW of Comb-Abbey. Sowerby, Cumberl. near Graystock Castle. Sowerby, Lancash. in Amounderness. Sowerby, Westmorel. Sowton, Devons. near Exeter. Sowton, Shrops. between Prees and Wem. Sowton, or Southeram, Sussex, near Lewes.

SPA, a town of Liege, in Westphalia, seated in a romantic valley, surrounded by woody mountains, 17 m. SE of Liege. It is situated on a small river that runs into the Ourte. It contains about 300 houses, and is famous for its mineral waters. That called the Old Spa, consists of miserable cottages, and is properly a suburb to the other. The houses of the New Spa are mostly of wood, old-fashioned, dark, and small, and yet, it is affirmed, they can make up 1200 beds for strangers. The inn, called the Court of London, is very large, the best, indeed, in the place, and most frequented. The chief springs are called Pouhon, Saviniere, Groisbeeck, and Geronster, to which Dr. Lucas has lately added the Pouhon Pia, and Barrisar. The inhab. are much employed in making toys for strangers, as the town partly resembles a fair, during the water-drinking season. There are beautiful, healthful, and romantic rides on every side, with a great variety of pleasant walks. There are public rooms for assemblies every night, and balls two or three times a week. The waters were first discovered in 1326.

Spade-Adam, Cumberl. near Beaucastle. Spadforth, Nottinghams. near Newark.

SPAIN, a considerable kingdom of Europe, bounded on the N by the Bay of Biscay; on the NE by the Pyrenean Mountains, which separate it from France; on the E, S and SE by the Mediterranean, and the Straits of Gibraltar; on the SW by the Atlantic; and on the W by Portugal and the Atlantic. It is about 700 m. in length, and 500 in breadth. It contains the provinces of Old and New Castile, Andalusia, Arragon, Estramadura, Galicia, Leon, Catalonia, Granada, Valencia, Biscay, the Asturias, Murcia and Upper Navarre; some of which have been separate kingdoms. The air of Spain is dry and serene, except during the equinoctial rains, but excessively hot in the southern provinces, in summer. The vast mountains, however, that run through Spain, are very beneficial to the inhab. by the refreshing breezes that come from them in the southernmost parts, though those in the N and NE are in the winter extremely cold. The soil is very fertile; but there are large tracts of uncultivated ground. The produce of the country is fine wheat, barley, saffron, exquisite honey, silk, saltpetre, salt, barillas, (a species of pot-ash) and even sugar canes. It produces the richest and most delicious fruits that are to be found in France and Italy, oranges, lemons, prunes, citrons, almonds, raisins, figs, dates, pomegranates, olives, &c. Their wines are deservedly in high esteem. Wolves are the chief beasts of prey that infest Spain. The wild bulls, which are caught in Andalusia, have so much ferocity, that their bull-fights were formerly the most magnificent spectacle the court of Spain could exhibit; this barbarous amusement, however, is now, in part, exploded. Their domestic animals are horses, that are remarkably swift; mules; horned cattle, which are but few; sheep, &c. The wool of the latter is superior to any in Europe; the best is that of Old Castile. Spain abounds in minerals and metals, cornelian, agate, jacinth, loadstones, turquois-stones, quicksilver, copper, lead, sulphur, alum, calamine, crystal, marbles of several kinds, porphyry, the finest jasper, and even diamonds, emeralds, and amethysts, are found here. Anciently it was celebrated for gold and silver mines, but since the discovery of America at least, no attention has been paid to them. The principal rivers are the Duero, Tajo, Guadiana, Guadalquivir, Ebro, Gualdalaviar, and Segura. Spain, which, in the times of the Goths and Moors, contained between 20 and 30 millions of people, is now but thinly inhabited, to which various causes have contributed; as the expulsion of the Moors, the emigrations to the colonies, the vast numbers and celibacy of the clergy, and the indolence of the natives. It is supposed to contain, at present, about 7,500,000 inhab. The greatest part of the necessary artisans are French, as the natives disdain to stoop to handicraft trades. The persons of the Spaniards, in general, are tall, their complexions swarthy, and their countenances expressive. The women are small and slender, and in general, possess little of that beauty which reigns in their novels and romances. The established religion of Spain is popery, and here the inquisition once reigned in all its horrors; but, although it still exists, it has been lately rendered, by the intervention of the royal authority, comparatively harmless. Spain has 44 episcopal sees, and 24 universities. It was once the most free, but is now one of the most despotic kingdoms in Europe. They had once their cortes, or parliaments, which had great privileges; but though not absolutely abolished, they have little or no part in the government. They are assembled indeed, occasionally, (as at the accession of the monarch) but merely as an appendage to the royal state, without power, or any other consequence than what results from their individual rank. Madrid is the capital.

SPAIN, NEW. See MEXICO.

SPAITLA, a town of Tunis, with Roman ruins of great extent and magnificence.

SPALATRO, a sea-port of the late Venetian Dalmatia. Here are grand and extensive ruins of a fabric of the emperor Diocleſian, of which the late Mr. Robert Adam published a splendid account, enriched with 71 folio plates. In 1784, Spalatro was nearly depopulated by the plague. It is seated on the Gulf of Venice, with a large, deep and well-frequented harbour, in lat. 44 4 N lon. 17 31 E.

Spaldick, Huntingdons.

SPALDING, a neat populous town of Lincolns. chiefly surrounded by gardeners' grounds, seated on the river Welland, 20 m. N by E of Peterborough, and 100 N of London. From its neatness, and the canals in the streets, it resembles a Dutch town, and vessels of 50 or 60 tons, carrying coals, corn, &c. come up here with the tide. Much hemp and flax is grown in the neighbourhood. Market on Tuesd.

Spittle in the Street, in Lincolns. between Gainsborough and Market-Raisin, 10 m. N of Lincoln. It was part of the Roman causeway, leading from London, by Lincoln, to the Humber, which the country people call the High-Street, it being thrown up to a great height, and in some places seven yards broad. Here are two springs, one called Julian's Well, and the other Castleton Well. Great numbers of Roman coins have been dug up in this village, and there are great foundations all around, whence it is conjectured, that some Roman town stood by the highway.

SPITZBERGEN, or EAST GREENLAND, the most northern country of Europe, consisting of an island, or islands, situated between Greenland to the W, and Nova Zembla to the E. The coast is beset with craggy mountains, and in the months of June, July, and August, the sun never sets; for the rest of the year it is hardly seen at all. In the valleys are large white bears, white foxes, and some curious birds and plants. The inland parts are uninhabited, and the coasts are only frequented for the purpose of catching whales. STAFFA, an island of Scotland, one of the Hebrides, a little to the W of Mull. It is a mile long, and half a mile broad. The whole SW end of this island is supported by stupendous ranges of basaltic pillars, mostly above 50 feet high, and standing in natural colonnades. Some of these columns are above 60 feet thick, and are formed almost into the shape of those used in architecture. Here is also a cavern, called Finma Coul, or Fingal's Cave, which extends about 250 feet under ground. Its entrance is a natural arch, more than 100 feet high. Hardly any thing can be conceived more magnificent than such a space, supported on each side by ranges of columns, and roofed by the bottoms of those which have been broken off in order to form it. The cavern is lighted from without, so that its farthest extremity may be seen. Indeed, this island is everywhere supported by basaltic rocks and pillars, much superior in beauty and grandeur to those which form the Giant's Causeway in Ireland.

STAFFORD, the county town of Staffords. containing 2 churches. It has a free-school, and a fine square market-place, in which is a handsome county hall, and under it the market-house. The streets are large, and many of the houses handsomely built. STATEN ISLAND, an island of N. America, which forms the county of Richmond, in the State of New York. It is about 18 m. in length, and 6 in its mean breadth, and contains upwards of 3100 inhab.; in general the land is rough, and the hills high. Richmond, the only town of note, is principally inhabited by Dutch and French families, and is 9 m. SSW of the city of New York.

STATEN LAND, a barren craggy island, about 36 m. in length, and 15 in breadth, lying on the SE side of Terra del Fuego, between which and this island are the Straits of Le Maire. Nothing can be imagined more savage, wild, gloomy, and horrible, than the aspect of some parts of this coast, according to the author of Anson's Voyage, being composed of inaccessible rocks, without the least mixture of earth or mould between them, spiring up to a prodigious height, and terminated in a vast number of ragged points, which points are themselves surrounded on every side with frightful precipices, and often overhang in a most astonishing manner. All of them are covered with everlasting snow, and are generally separated from each other by narrow clefts or chasms nearly perpendicular, which extend through the main substance of the rocks or hills which bear them, almost to their very bottoms, and appear as if the country had been rent by earthquakes. On the N side, however, (according to Capt. Cook, who passed the Straits of Le Maire, in Jan. 1769) are the appearances of bays or harbours, and the land is neither destitute of wood nor verdure. Lat. 54 40 S lon. 65 W.

Statfall Castle, Kent, on the descent of the hill, below Limme church; it inclosed about 10 acres, and its walls, though now much broken, were very thick. STAVANGER, a sea-port of Christiansand, in Norway, situated on a bay of the North Sea, 75 m. S of Bergen.

STAUBACH, a celebrated cataract near Lauterbrunnen, in Berne, Switzerland. It rushes down a precipice, 930 feet high, with such impetuosity as to resolve itself into a fine spray, which, when viewed in some particular directions, resembles a cloud of dust. The roaring noise it makes is accompanied by a tempest, occasioned by the violent agitation of the air, excited by the rapidity of the fall. The brook which forms this current is named the Kupfer Bachlein, or Rivulet of Copper.

Staveley, Derbys. E of Dronfield. Staveley, Westmorl. NW of Kendal.

STAVELO. See STABLO.

Staverdale, Somersets.

STAVERFN, an ancient town and sea-port in W. Friesland, formerly very rich, powerful, and populous, but now much reduced, the harbour being choked up with sand. It was anciently the residence of the kings of Staveren, or Friesland; the first king, Richolde, having built a palace here about the year 400, and after he had conquered all the country as far as Utrecht, called his conquests the kingdom of Staveren. The inhab. carry on some trade in fishing and in passage-boats, over the pools and moors of the neighbourhood. It is seated on the Zuyder Zee, 8 m. W of Slouton, and 40 N of Amsterdam.

Stenyborough, Isle of Wight, in E. Medina.

STEYNING, a poor, little borough of Sussex, with scarcely 200 families. It is chiefly noted for its church, which is a small but curious and most complete Norman built structure, in its first plan. The middle aile has on each side 4 Norman round arches, zigzagged, surmounted with as many round-headed, small windows. The two side ailes are much and disproportionably lower, as was the custom. The roof is of rafter, as stone vaulting was neither common, nor known at that time. A lofty Norman arch leads into the chancel. The tower is more modern. Steyning is situated in a very healthy air, on the road from Lewes, Brighthelmstone, and Shoreham, to Petworth, Midhurst, &c. 15 m. W of Lewes, and 51 S by W of London. Market on Wed, and one on the 2d Wed. in every month, for cattle. Fairs on June 9, Sept. 19, and October 10. The Michaelmas fair is very considerable, for Welsh and other cattle, sheep, horses, hogs, wheat, seed, &c.; the others are pretty large.

STIPEL, a town of Mark, in Westphalia.

Stiperden, Yorks. SW of Heptonstall. Stiperley Park, Chesh. near Limepark, is noted for sheep larger than the common size, the fleece of which is rather hair than wool; besides two sheeps' horns, they have two as erect as goats', and their flesh, though sufficiently agreeable, has more the taste of goat than mutton. Stipershill, Warwicks. near Polesworth. Stipperstone-Hill, Shrops. NE of Chirbury.

STIRIA, a duchy of Austria, N of Carniola, and E of Carinthia, divided into Upper and Lower. Upper Stiria is about 110 m. in length, and from 25 to 45 in breadth: Judenburg is the capital. Lower Stiria is about 80 m. in length, and 48 in breadth: Gratz is the capital. Though in general, a mountainous country, the inhabitants raise great quantities of fine wheat; they have also large breeds of cattle, with wild fowl, chamois, and other game. Here are mines of iron, which have been worked these thousand years, and still continue rich. The Stirian steel is held in high estimation. The language is rough; but the inhabitants of Cilley are mostly Wends, and speak the Wendish language.

STIRLING, an ancient town of Scotland, the capital of Stirlings. 30 m. NW of Edinburgh. It is seated on the S side of the Frith of Forth, on a hill, which, rising from the E, terminates abruptly in a steep rock. On this rock is an ancient castle, which was often the residence of the kings of Scotland. The outside of the palace, which is now converted into barracks, is richly and curiously adorned with various grotesque figures. From the castle is a fine view of the windings of the Forth, which are so numerous, that the distance from Stirling to Alloa is above 20 m. by water, although only 4 by land. The church of Stirling is a magnificent Gothic structure, which serves for two separate places of worship. In this town and its neighbourhood are flourishing manufactures of carpets, as also of coarse shalloons and cottons; but that of tartans is on the decline. Stirling is commodiously seated, being a pass between the N and S parts of Scotland, but with such a difficult navigation of its river, that only small vessels can come up to the town. It contains 727 houses and 5,820 inhab.

STIRLINGSHIRE, a county of Scotland, bounded on the N and NE by Perths. and Clackmannans. on the E by the Frith of Forth, and the county of Linlithgow, on the S by Lanerks. and on the W by Dumbartons. It is about 36 m. in length, 8 or 9 in its general breadth, and not more than 13 in its greatest, and contains 8,910 houses, and 58,174 inhab. The S parts are mountainous, but the parts about the Forth are fertile and abound in coals. The principal rivers are the Forth, (which receives a great number of smaller streams) Carron, and Avon; besides which, the new canal from Glasgow runs through this country to the Carron mouth. The principal towns are Stirling and Falkirk.

Stirrop, Nottinghams. W of Blithe. Stirthill, Upper, and Lower, Dorsets. in the chapelry of Shipton. Stirthill, Lower, has the ruins of a chapel, called Old St. Luke's. Stirthwith, Durham, on the Tees, N of Egglestone.

STOCKHOLM, the capital of Sweden, in a situation remarkable for its romantic scenery. It is very long and irregular, being built on 7 small rocky islands, from one of which the city takes its name, (between the Baltic and the Malar lake) besides which, it occupies two peninsulas. Between these several parts of the city a communication is formed by means of bridges. A variety of contrasted and beautiful views are formed by numerous rocks of granite, rising boldly from the surface of the water, partly bare and cragged, and partly dotted with houses, or feathered with wood. The harbour is an inlet of the Baltic; the water, of a blackish colour, is of such depth, that ships of the largest burden can approach the quay. At the extremity of the harbour, several streets rise one above another, in the form of an amphitheatre; and the palace, a magnificent building, crowns the summit. The arsenal contains many curiosities, among which are an immense number of standards, and other military trophies, taken from the Imperialists, Poles, Russians, and Danes. Except in the suburbs, where some houses are of wood, painted red, the buildings are mostly of stone, or brick, stuccoed white, and built on piles. A Royal Academy of Sciences was instituted here in 1741: here is also a Royal Academy of Painting and Sculpture. In Stockholm are manufactures of glass, china, woollen, silk, linen, &c. The inhab. are estimated at 92,000. The court formerly resided at Upsal, but removed here in the last century. It is 200 m. N of Copenhagen, 927 W by N of Moscow, 625 NE of Vienna, and 900 NE of London.

STONEHAVEN, or STONEHIVE, a fishing town of Kincardines. with a good harbour secured by a stone pier. Near it is a precipitous cliff, called Fowl's Cleugh, which is remarkable for the resort of the birds called kittiwake, the young of which are esteemed a great delicacy. To the S of it, the rocks rise to a considerable height. Here is a manufacture of canvas, and some trade in dried fish oil. This oil is obtained chiefly from the dog-fish, great quantities of which are caught on this coast. Stonehaven is 14 m. S by W of Aberdeen.

STONEHENGE, a remarkable monument of antiquity, situated in Salisbury Plain, 2 m. W of Amesbury, and 6 NNW of Salisbury. It has the river Avon and other streams on the E, and a brook that runs into the Willy on the W, which streams encompass it half round. It stands on the summit of a hill, which rises with a very gentle ascent. At the distance of about ½ m. it has a very stately and august appearance, and advancing nearer, especially up the avenue, on the NE side, where the remains of this wonderful structure are most perfect, it fills the eye in an astonishing measure. It is encompassed with a circular ditch; after this is passed, there is a space of exactly 108 feet to the work itself, which is also 108 feet in diameter. It consists of several stones of enormous size, placed upon one another in a circular form: many of them are really stupendous, and cannot fail of filling the beholder with surprise and admiration. The exterior circle, in its perfection, consisted of 60 stones, 30 uprights, and 30 imposts, of which only 17 uprights are left standing. About 8 feet from the inside of this outer circle is another of 40 smaller stones, without imposts, forming, as it were, a circular portico. Of these 19 are left, of which 11 only are standing. Besides this outer portico, which is 300 feet in circumf. there is an inner one, which originally composed two-thirds of an oval. On the inside of this oval, there is a lesser one of 19 stones, of a pyramidical form; these are 2 feet 6 inches in breadth, one foot and a half thick, and about 8 feet high, rising in height as they approach the upper end of the inclosure. The space within it has been called the Adytum, or Sanctum Sanctorum, where it is supposed the priests entered to offer their sacrifices on the altar at the upper end. This altar is composed of a kind of blue coarse marble, 20 inches thick, 4 feet broad, and 16 feet in length. All the stones added together, with which this whole temple was built, make just 140. One stone at the upper end, which is fallen down, and broken in half, measures, according to Dr. Hales, 25 feet in length, 7 in breadth, and at a medium, 3½ in thickness. The stones are supposed to have been brought from the Grey Weathers, upon Marlborough Downs, but the difficulty in bringing them hither, and especially in laying them one upon another, is inconceivable, as no mechanical powers now known are sufficient to raise those that lie across, to their present extraordinary situation.

Stone-Hill, Kent, in Wilmington parish. Stonehive, a sea-port of Kincardine, 15 m. from Aberdeen. Stone-Holm, Kent, in Dengy-Marsh. Stone-house, Gloucesters. 4 m. STOUR, a river which rises in Somersets. from three sources, the first near Wincaunton, the second near Pen, and the third near More Park. The second and third of these streams, unite soon after their entering Dorsets. in Gillingham Forest, where the Stour becomes a considerable river, and directs its course nearly towards the S where it is joined by the stream from Wincaunton, near Fifehead. About two miles and a half below this junction, it receives the waters of the Lyddon; and about half a mile farther, it is joined by the Dulish, flowing with a full stream to Sturminster Newton. Here it directs its course to the SE washing the town of Blandford, and receiving at Wimbourn Minster the waters of the Allen. About 4 m. below its junction with the Allen, it leaves Dorsets. and falls into the English Channel at Christ Church, in Hamps.

STOUR, a river which rises in Shrops. and running through Staffords. and Worcesters. falls into the Severn at Stourport, above Hartlebury Castle. Its course is about 20 m. and it has on it, in that space, upwards of 30 slitting-mills, forges, corn-mills, &c.

STOURBRIDGE, a well-built town of Worcesters. 22 m. N of Worcester, and 124 NW of London, noted for its considerable glass and iron works, (here being about 10 glass-houses, in which are made drinking-glasses, bottles, &c.) and has also a manufactory of cloth, and especially fine frieze. It contains 820 houses.

STOURBRIDGE, or STURBICH, the name of a common field, extending between Chesterton and Cambridge, near the little brook Sture, for about half a mile square, is noted for its fair, which is kept annually on September 19th, and continues a fortnight. It is surpassed by few fairs in Great Britain, or even in Europe, for traffic, though of late it is much lessened. The booths are placed in rows like streets, by the name of which they are called, as Cheapside, &c. and are filled with all sorts of trades. The Duddery, an area of 80 or 100 yards square, resembles Blackwell-Hall. Large commissions are negotiated here, for all parts of England, in cheese, woollen goods, wool, leather, hops, upholsterers' and ironmongers' ware, &c. &c. Sometimes 50 hackney coaches from London, ply morning and night, to and from Cambridge, as well as all the towns round, and the very barns and stables are turned into inns, for the accommodation of the poorer people. After the wholesale business is over, the country gentry generally flock in, laying out their money in stage-plays, taverns, music-houses, toys, puppet-shows, &c. and the whole concludes with a day for the sale of horses. This fair is under the jurisdiction of the University of Cambridge.

STROMA, a small island on the coast of Caithnesssh. in Scotland, 3 m. NW of Dungsbay Head, once used as a place of interment by the inhabitants of several of the neighbouring islands. In caverns of this island, entire uncorrupted human bodies, that had been dead 60 years, or more, were formerly to be found.

STROMBERG, a town of Munster; and a town in the palatinate of the Rhine.

STROMBOLO, or STRONGONI, one of the Lipari Islands, anciently STRONGYLE, about 12 m. in circumf. It consists of one large mountain, on which is a volcano, which rises in a conical form, to the height of above 500 fathoms. On the east side, it has three or four little craters ranged near each other, not at the summit, but on the declivity, nearly at two-thirds of its height. The common chimney is also on the declivity, although always in the centre of the whole base. It is inhabited, notwithstanding its fires; but care is taken by its few inhabitants (who are represented as unsocial in their manners) to avoid the proximity of the crater, which is yet much to be feared. "I was assured," says M. De Luc, "by an Englishman, that the fine weather having invited him and his company to land at Strombolo, they ascended a volcano whose craters at that time threw out nothing; but that while they were attentively viewing them, unapprehensive of any danger, they were suddenly saluted by such a furious discharge, as to be obliged to retreat with precipitation, and not without one of the company being wounded by a piece of the scoria. Of all the volcanoes recorded in history, Strombolo seems to be the only one that burns without ceasing. Etna and Vesuvius often lie quiet for many months, and even years, without the least appearance of fire; but Strombolo is ever at work, and for ages past, has been looked upon as the great lighthouse of these seas. The island is, notwithstanding, fertile, and produces a great deal of cotton. Lat. 38 50 N lon. 15 45 E.

STROMNESS, a town on the SW coast of the island of Orkney, or Pomona, with an excellent harbour for small vessels. It contains 222 houses, and 1,344 inhab. It is 10 m. W of Kirkwall.

STROMOE, the largest of the Faro islands in the North Sea, being about 27 m. in length, and 7 in breadth. Thorshavn the capital is the seat of government, and contains 100 houses built of wood; the roof of the church is covered with turf, and in summer has a curious appearance.

STRONGILO, a small island in the Grecian Archipelago, 6 m. SW of Paros.

STRONGOLI, a town of Calabria Citra, containing 4 churches. It is seated on a very high rock, surrounded by others, 3 m. from the sea, and 47 E of Cozenza.

STRONSA, one of the Orkney Isles, about 6 m. long, and almost as broad, so indented with bays, that there is no part of the island above 1 m. distant from the sea. This with the island of Papa, the extent of which, round the shores, is about 3 m. separated from Stronsa, by a narrow sound, over which two men can row in a small boat in five minutes, and, with the holms, or pasture islands, comprehends what is termed the parish of Stronsa. The sandy beeches, the skerries, (flat rocks, over which the sea constantly flows and ebbs) and the shores of the nesses, or promontories, produce great quantities of tang, or sea-weed, fit for the kelp manufacture, and is the chief and almost the only manure. The water is deep, nigh the shore, and the rocks abrupt. Number of inhab. is 930. There are two commodious harbours or roadsteads, safe for shipping at all seasons and in all weathers, viz. Ling, a sound on the W side, and Papa Sound on the NE side, sheltered by the island of Papa Stronsa. There are also other bays on the E, SW, and NW side, in which vessels may safely ride at anchor, if the wind does not blow too strong on shore. Lat. 58 59 N.

Stroud, Devons. near Modbury.

STROUD, a flourishing town of Gloucesters. containing 1064 houses, is 11 m. SE of Gloucester, and 103 W by N of London, situated on a gentle ascent, at the foot of which runs the Frome, here called Stroud Water, a small stream, which is very clear, and particularly celebrated as a menstruum for dying scarlet broad cloth, and all other grain colours. On this account the manufacture of white cloth was established here, and many clothiers, who live on the banks of this river, for near 20 m. together, have erected many fulling mills on it; some of whom are computed to make 3000 cloths a year to their own share. As this rivulet is in itself considerable, a navigable canal accompanies its progress to the Severn, into which it runs about 5 m. below Gloucester. This canal has been lately extended to join the Thames at Lechlade. Market on Frid.

Stroud, a village of Kent, adjoining to Rochester, from which it is only parted by the river Medway. Stroud, Surry, NW of St. Ann's Hill. Stroud-End, Gloucesters. in Painswick parish. Stroud-Green, Midd. in Hornsey parish. Stroud-Green, Surry, NE of Croydon. Stroway, a river in Monmouths. Stroxton, Lincolns. near Grantham. Strubby, Lincolns. between Saltfleetbay and Alford. Strumpshaw, Norf. S of Pool Bay, in the extremity of the NE part of the isle of Purbeck. On the common are many barrows, some of them large and oblong, but generally round. The most remarkable is Agglestone, or Stone Barrow, the bottom of which takes up half an acre and 12 perches of ground, the diameter on the top is 60 feet, and its perpendicular height 90 feet. It is supposed to have been a rock idol of the ancient Britons of the same kind as the Wring Cheese, in Cornwall. It is 18 feet high, 60 in girth at the bottom, 80 in the middle, 90 near the top, and is supposed to weigh 400 tons. Stutland Bay, Dorsets. E of Studland, is reckoned a safe harbour to anchor in, for any ship that does not require above 14 feet. Studley, Bucks, in Ockley parish; but part of it is in Oxfords. Studley, Devons. NW of Tiverton. Studley, Oxfords. NE of Wood Eaton. Studley, Warwicks. on the Arrow, SE of Ipsley. Studley, Wilts, near Calne. Studley, Yorks. 1 m. from Rippon. Stukeley, Great and Little, Huntingdons. on the Ermine Street, NW of Huntingdon. It was anciently called Stivecle, or Stiff Clay, from the nature of the soil. Stukeley, or Stivicle, Bucks, near Monks Risborough. Its church was built about the reign of Henry II. The solidity of this building, with its circular arches, and zigzag ornaments, evidently mark its great antiquity. Stukeswold, Lincolns. NW of Tattershall Chace.

STULINGEN, a town, capital of a landgraviate of Swabia, subject to the prince of Furstenburg, 22 m. N of Zurich.

STULWISSENBURG, a strong but decayed town of Lower Hungary, 24 m. SW of Buda.

SW of Otley. Sturton, Yorks. W of Skipton. Sturton, Great, Lincolns. W of Horncastle. Stutfall Castle, Kent, in Limne parish.

STUTGARD, a city of Suabia, capital of the duchy of Wirtemberg. The streets are narrow in the town, and the houses generally of wood; but there are fine houses, and wide straight streets, in one of the suburbs. Here are the duke's palace; an orphan house, with rich cabinets of curiosities, and handsome gardens; an academy of painting, sculpture, and architecture, established in 1701; and manufactures of stuffs, silk stockings, and ribbons. It is seated on the Nasenbech, near the river Neckar, 40 m. NW of Ulm.

Stuttesbury, Northamptons. NW of Brackley. Stutton, Lincolns. NE of Louth. Stutton, Suf. near Brantham.

SUABIA, a circle of Germany, bounded on the N by the circle of Franconia, and the palatinate of the Rhine; on the W by the circle of the Lower Rhine and Alsace; on the S by Switzerland and the Tyrolese; and on the E by Bavaria. It comprehends the duchies of Wirtemburg, the margraviate of Baden, the principalities of Hohen Zollern, Oetringen, and Mindelheim; the bishopricks of Augsburg, Constance, and Coire, with several abbeys and free towns. The duke of Wirtemberg is director.

SUABIA, AUSTRIAN, is composed of the ancient hereditary estates of the house of Habsburg, and the remains which have fallen to Austria, since it has been elected to the empire. These estates are composed of Burgau, Nellenburg, the prefectorate of Suabia, Hohenburg, the Ortenau, Brisgau, and some towns and convents.

SUANA. See SOANA.

SUANES, SUANI, or SUANETI, a poor and simple people of Asia, who inhabit one of the four divisions of the kingdom of Imeritia. They subsist by raising cattle, and by a little agriculture. Major Rennel supposes them to be the descendants of a people of the same name and country, who are mentioned by Strabo. They were, in his time, a formidable and numerous nation, governed by a king, with a national council of 300 persons. They are said to have collected a considerable quantity of gold, by means of fleeces, which they sunk in their torrents; a practice from which Strabo derives the fable of the Golden Fleece. It is reported, that this mode of collecting gold still subsisted, when the Turks were in possession of Mingrelia, and that the produce of a river, called the Zgenis skald, was farmed by certain Jews of Constantinople.

SUAQUEM, a small island in the Red Sea, near the coast of Nubia, with a sea-port of the same name, anciently called THEON SOTER. The island is situated in a bay, the entrance of which is narrow, and well secured from every wind, with five, six, and seven fathoms water. A Turkish bashaw resides here. Lat. 19 20 N.

SUDBURY, an ancient town of Suf. 14 m. SSE of St. Edmondsbury, and 56 NE of London, containing 3 large handsome churches. Its other buildings are pretty good, but the streets are remarkably dirty in bad weather. It was one of the first seats of the Flemings, who were brought over by Edward III. to teach the English the art of manufacturing their own wool. It became, in consequence, very populous and opulent. Its trade is now diverted, in great part, into other channels; however, many kinds of thin stuffs are still made here, such as says, perpetuanas, bunting for ships' colours, burial crapes, &c. The river was made navigable from this place to Maningtree many years ago. It is seated on the N side of the river Stour, by which it is almost surrounded, and over which it has a handsome bridge, leading into Essex. Market on Sat.

Sudbury Tenements, Gloucesters. in Winchcomb parish. Sudcote Steel, Yorks. near Hull. Sudden, Dorsets. 2 m. S of Owre Moigne. Suddington, Gloucesters. near Cirencester.

SUDERMÁNIA, or SUDERMAN LAND, a province of Sweden, S of Upland, and Westmanland, about 100 m. in length, and 60 in breadth. It is the most populous and best cultivated part of Sweden, having also a fertile soil, with woods, pastures, fine arable lands, lakes well stocked with fish, and mines of divers metals. Nicoping is the capital.

SUDEROE, one of the Ferro Islands, in the Northern Ocean, remarkable for a dangerous whirlpool near it, which is occasioned by a crater, 61 fathoms deep in the centre, and between 50 and 55 at the sides. The danger at most times is great, especially in storms, when ships are irresistibly drawn in; the rudder loses its power, and the waves beat as high as the masts, so that an escape is almost miraculous; yet, at the reflux, and in very still weather, the inhab. venture hither in boats, for the sake of fishing.

Sudgrove, or Southgrove, Gloucesters. Sudick, Durham, N of Monk-Wearmouth. Sudley, Gloucesters. 1 m. S of Winchcomb. Sudmead, near Gloucester.

SUENBORG, a sea-port town of Denmark, in the island of Funen, with manufactures of SUEVRE, a town of France, in the depart. of Loire and Cher, 9 m. NE of Blois.

SUEZ, anciently BERENICE, a town of Egypt, seated at the N end of the W gulf of the Red Sea, called the Gulf of Suez, with a harbour. This gulf is separated from the Mediterranean by an isthmus, 120 m. over, which joins Asia to Africa. The town is without water, which comes from the wells of Naba (carried by Arabians) on the other side of the gulf, and without almost all the other necessaries of life. Fish is the only article of provisions plentiful here. It is very much crowded with people, when the Turkish gallies arrive there. However, at other times, it is very thinly inhabited, and the harbour is too shallow to admit ships of great burden. The commerce of Suez with Cairo is carried on only by means of caravans, but several vessels sail annually between this port and Jidda. It is situated in a sandy country, the ground around being all one bed of rock, slightly covered with sand (plants, trees, gardens, and fields being entirely unknown), 60 m. ESE of Cairo. Lat. 30 2 N lon. 32 45 E.

SUFFIELD, a town of Massachusetts, 8 m. S of Springfield.

Suffield, Norf. NW of N. Walsham. Suffield, Yorks. NW of Scarborough.

SUFFOLK, a county of England, bounded on the W by Cambridges. on the N by Norf. on the S by Essex, and on the E by the German Ocean. It extends 58 m. from E to W, and 28 from N to S. It is divided into 22 hundreds, which contain 31 towns, 575 parishes, 1550 villages, 37,227 houses, and 234,211 inhab. The air is very clear and healthy, even near the sea-coast. The soil is of various qualities, but the country in general level. That near the shore is sandy and full of heaths, yet abounds in rye, pease, turnips, carrots, and hemp, with numerous flocks of sheep. Copious beds of petrified shells, called shell-marl, which are found in various parts between Woodbridge and Orford, have for many years been made use of for improving light sand, and have liberally rewarded the agricultural labours in those parts. High Suffolk, or the Woodlands, which is the inland part of the county, has a rich deep clay and marl, that yields good pasture-grounds, on which feed abundance of cattle. That part which lies on the confines of Essex and Cambridges. affords also excellent pasture; and about Bury St. Edmund's, and to the N and NW it is fruitful in corn, except towards Newmarket. Its principal produce is butter and cheese; but as the latter is only supplementary to the former, it has gained, almost proverbially, the character of the worst in England. Grain of all sorts, beans, and hemp, are grown in this county, and a few hops not far from Sudbury. They have an excellent breed of draught horses: the cows are in great repute for the quantity of milk they give (they are not of a large size, and universally without horns): the farmers are skilful; and on the whole, this county, with respect to agriculture, is one of the most thriving in England. The principal rivers are the Stour, the Waveney, Little Ouse, Lark, Deben, Blythe, Alde, and Orwell, in one part of it called the Gipping. Ipswich is the principal town, but the assizes are held at Bury St. Edmund's.

SUFFOLK, a county of Massachusetts, a county of New York, and a town of Virginia.

Sufton, E of Hereford.

SUGARLOAF-HILL, GREAT and LITTLE, two high conical mountains, in Wicklow, Leinster. They are situated near Bray, between Wicklow and Dublin, about 12 m. from each of these ports.

SUGELMESSA, or SIGELMESSA, a town of Morocco, 72 m. NNE of Tafilet, capital of a district about 100 m. in length. It abounds in corn, dates, and other fruits; and has mines of iron, lead, and antimony.

Sugnel, Great and Little, Staffords. NW of Eccleshall. Sugwas, near Hereford.

SULMONA, anciently SULMO, the birth-place of the poet Ovid, a town of Abruzzo

Citra, containing 11 churches, and 12 convents.

SULPHUR ISLAND, in the N. Pacific Ocean, about 5 m. long, in a NNE and SSW direction. A considerable part of it is conjectured to be sulphur, both from its appearance to the eye, and the strong sulphuric smell which it emits. The surface exhibits various colours, and when seen from the WSW it presents an evident volcanic crater. It was discovered by Captain Gore, in 1797. Lat. 24 48 N lon. 141 12 E.

SULTANIA, a town in Irac-Agemi, 250 m. NNW of Ispahan, built in the 13th century, on the ruins of the ancient Tigranocerta. Many kings of Persia made it their residence, and it was at one time one of the largest cities of Asia. The streets are now deserted, and the inhab. scarcely amount to 6000.

Sulton, Sussex, N of Arundel Forest.

SULTSBACH, a town in the palatinate of Bavaria, subject to the duke of Newburg Sultzbach. It is 10 m. NW of Amberg. Also a town in the depart. of the Upper Rhine, 6 m. SW of Colmar.

SULTZBURG, a town of Baden Dourlach, celebrated for its wine.

SUMATRA, an island of Asia, the most western of the Sunda Islands, about 720 m. in length, and 180 in its greatest breadth. On the SE it is separated from Java by the Straits of Sunda. Its general direction is nearly NW and SE. The equator divides it into almost equal parts, the one extremity being in 5 33 N, and the other in 5 50 S lat. From this country, the greatest part of the cassia that is sent to Europe is procured. It abounds also with the camphire trees, which constitute the common timber in use; and in these trees the camphire is found native, in a concrete form. It is remarkable, that in this state it is sold to the Chinese, at the price of 250l. or 300l. per cwt. but these dexterous artists contrive to furnish the Europeans with it, at about a quarter of that price. In 1783, Mr. Marsden, who had been secretary to the president and council of Fort Marlborough, published a history of Sumatra, with very copious particulars of the island. He represents it as surpassed by few in the beautiful indulgencies of nature. A chain of high mountains, in some of which are volcanoes, run through their whole extent; their altitude, though great, is not sufficient to occasion their being covered with snow during any part of the year. Between these ridges are extensive plains, considerably elevated above the surface of the maritime lands. In these, the air is cool; and, from this advantage, they are esteemed the most eligible portion of the country, are the best inhabited, and the most cleared from woods, which elsewhere, in general, throughout Sumatra, cover both hills and valleys with an eternal shade. Here too are found many large lakes, that facilitate much the communication between the different parts. The heat of the air is far from being so intense as might be expected from a country occupying the middle of the torrid zone; and it is more temperate than many regions without the tropics, the thermometer, at the most sultry hour, about two in the afternoon, generally fluctuating between 82 and 85 degrees. Mr. Marsden divides the inhab. into Malays, Achanese, Battas, Lampoons, and Rejangs; and he takes the latter as the standard of description, with respect to the persons, manners, and customs of the inhab. They are rather below the middle stature; their bulk in proportion; their limbs, for the most part, slight, and particularly small at the wrists and ankles; and, upon the whole, they are accounted gracefully formed. Their hair is strong, and of a shining black. The men are beardless; great pains being taken to render them so, when boys, by rubbing their chins with a kind of quick-lime. Their complexion is properly yellow, wanting the red tinge that constitutes a copper or tawney colour. They are, in general, lighter than the Mestees, or half-breed, of the rest of India; those of the wealthier class, who are not exposed to the rays of the sun, and particularly their women, approaching to a degree of fairness. Some of the inhab. of the hilly parts are observed to have the swelled neck, or goitre; but they attempt no remedy for it, as these wens are consistent with the highest health. The rites of marriage among the Sumatrans, consist simply in joining the hands of the parties, and pronouncing them man and wife, without much ceremony, excepting the entertainment which is given upon the occasion. But little apparent courtship precedes their marriages. Their manners do not admit of it; the young people of each sex being carefully kept asunder, and the girls being seldom trusted from under the wing of their mothers. The opportunities which the young people have of seeing and conversing with each other, are at the public festivals. On these occasions, the persons who are unmarried meet together, and dance and sing in company. The men, when determined in their regards, generally employ an old woman as their agent, by whom they make known their sentiments, and send presents to the female of their choice. The parents then interfere, and the preliminaries being settled, a feast takes place. At these festivals, a goat, a buffalo, or several, according to the rank of the parties, are killed to entertain, not only the relations and invited guests, but all the inhab. of the neighbouring country, who choose to repair to them. The greater the concourse, the more is the credit of the host, who is, generally on these occasions, the father of the girl. The customs of the Sumatrans permit their having as many wives as they can purchase, or afford to maintain; but it is extremely rare, that an instance occurs of their having more than one, and that only among a few of the chiefs. The children are nursed but little, not confined by any swathing or bandages; and being suffered to roll about the floor, soon learn to walk and shift for themselves. When cradles are used, they swing suspended from the ceilings of the rooms. The Sumatrans are fond of the barbarous diversion of cock-fighting, taking great pains in rearing and feeding cocks, and never matching the same colours; but a grey against a pile, a yellow against a red, and the like. It rarely happens that both cocks survive the combat. The wild beasts of Sumatra are tigers, numerous elephants of a superior size, rhinoceroses, bears, monkeys, and even cats. The tigers prove to the inhab. both in their journeys, and even their domestic occupations, most destructive enemies. The number of people annually slain by these rapacious tyrants of the woods, is almost incredible. Whole villages have been depopulated by them. Yet from a superstitious prejudice, it is with difficulty they are prevailed upon, by a large reward which the India Company offers, to use methods of destroying them, till they have sustained some particular injury in their own family or kindred. Their traps, of which they can make variety, are very ingeniously contrived. Sometimes they are in the nature of strong cages, with falling doors, into which the beast is enticed by a goat or dog inclosed as a bait; sometimes they manage that a large timber shall fall in a grove across his back; sometimes he is noosed about the loins with strong rattans; sometimes he is led to ascend a plank, nearly balanced, which turning when he is past the centre, lets him fall upon sharp stakes prepared below. Instances have occurred of a tiger being caught by one of the former modes, which had many marks in his body of the partial success of this last expedient. The size and strength of the species which prevails on this island is prodigious. They are said to break, with a stroke of their fore-paw, the leg of a horse or a buffalo, and the largest prey they kill is without difficulty dragged into the woods by them. This they usually perform on the second night, being supposed, on the first, to gratify themselves with sucking the blood only. Time is by this delay afforded to prepare for their destruction; and to the methods already enumerated, beside shooting them, may be added that of placing a vessel of water, strongly impregnated with arsenic, near the carcass. The tiger having satiated itself with the flesh, is prompted to assuage his thirst with the tempting liquor at hand, and perishes in the indulgence. Their chief subsistence is most probably the monkeys with which the woods abound. They are described to allure them to their fate by a fascinating power, similar to what has been supposed of the snake; and, says Mr. Marsden, "I am not incredulous enough to treat the idea with contempt, having myself observed that when an alligator or crocodile, in a river, comes under an overhanging bough of a tree, the monkeys, in a state of alarm and distraction, crowd to the extremity, and chattering and trembling, approach nearer and nearer to the amphibious monster that awaits to devour them as they drop, which their fright renders almost unavoidable." These alligators likewise occasion the loss of many inhab. frequently destroying the people as they bathe in the river, according to their regular custom, and which the perpetual evidence of the risk attending it, cannot deter them from. A superstitious idea of their sanctity, also preserves them from molestation, although with a hook of sufficient strength, they may be taken without much difficulty. The other animals of Sumatra are buffaloes, civet cats, a small but numerous kind of horses, goats, hogs, which run wild in the mountains, deer, few hares, but plenty of other game, bullocks, and hog-deer. This last is an animal somewhat larger than a rabbit, the head resembling that of a hog, and its shanks and feet like those of the deer. The sheep which have been hitherto carried to the island, decay and come to nothing. The bezoar stone found on this animal has been valued at ten times its weight in gold; it is of a dark brown colour, smooth on the outside, and the coat being taken off, it appears still darker, with strings running underneath the coat; it will swim on the top of the water. If it be infused in any liquid, it makes it extremely bitter; the virtues usually attributed to this stone are cleansing the stomach, creating an appetite, and sweetening the blood. Of birds they have a greater variety than of beasts. The Sumatran pheasant is a bird of uncommon beauty. They have storks of prodigious size, parrots, dunghill fowls, and ducks (the eggs of which are in the greatest plenty, and form a considerable article of commerce), the largest cocks in the world, wood-pigeons, doves, and a great variety of small birds different from ours, and distinguished by the beauty of their colours. Of their reptiles, they have serpents, lizards, flying-lizards, and cameleons. The island swarms with insects, and their varieties are no less extraordinary than their numbers. The principal seeds sown are rice and millet. They have sugar canes, beans, peas, radishes, yams, potatoes, pumpkins, and several kinds of pot-herbs unknown to Europe; and here are found most of the fruits to be met in other parts of the E. Indies, in the greatest perfection. Indigo, Brazilwood, two species of the bread-fruit tree, the best pepper in the E. Indies, except that of Cochin China, and which forms the most important article of commerce here, 20 vessels being annually loaded with this spice; benjamin, coffee, and cotton, are likewise the produce of this island. Here also is the cabbage tree and silk cotton tree; and the forest contains a great variety of valuable species of wood, as ebony, pine, sandal, eagle, or aloes, teek, manchineel, iron-wood, the banyan tree, and the most precious balsams and odoriferous gums. Gold, silver, tin, iron, copper, lead, agaric, sapphires, sulphur, arsenic, and saltpetre, are also produced at Sumatra. Bees' wax is a commodity of great importance here; and they have likewise edible birds'-nests. It is well watered by a great number of rivers, in which there is plenty of fish. The English and Dutch have factories on this island; the principal one of the former being Fort Marlborough, on the SW coast. Sumatra is divided into many petty kingdoms. The original natives of Sumatra are Pagans; but it is to be observed, that when the Sumatrans, or any of the natives of the eastern islands, learn to read the Arabic character, and submit to circumcision, they are said to become Malays; the term Malay, being understood to mean Mussulman.

SUMBI, a province of Angola, in Africa, lying in about 11 deg. S lat. and but little known.

Sumbridge, Devons. near Barnstaple.

SUMENE, a town of France, in the depart. of Gard. 4 m. E of Levigan.

Summerby, Leicesters. near Cold-Orton.

Summer Court, Cornw.

SUMMER-HILL, a town of Meath, in Leinster, 20 m. from Dublin.

Summerley, Sussex, S of Burdham. Summers, Bedfords. E of Luton. Summerton, Oxfords. on the Charwell, near Fritwell. Summerton, Suff.

SUMNER, a county of N. Carolina.

SUNART, a district of Argyles. remarkable for numerous veins of lead, which, however, are not very productive.

SUNART LOCH, an inlet of the sea, in Argyles. which separates the island of Mull from the district of Morven.

Sunbingen, Westmorl. S of Crosby-Ravensworth, at the foot of Beacon-Hill. At a little distance is Sunbiggin Tarn, or Lake, which abounds with eels, and in which are bred vast quantities of a red trout, like char. The adjoining moors abound with grouse and moor-game. Sunbrick, Lancas. W of Ken Sands. Sunbury, Midd. on the Thames, between Hampton Court and Shepperton.

SUNBERY, a town of Georgia, in N. America, with a safe and commodious harbour, 25 m. SSW of Savannah. Several small islands intervening, partly obstruct a direct view of the ocean, and interlocking with each other, render the passage to sea winding, but not difficult. It is a pleasant, healthy town, and is the resort of the planters from the adjacent places of Midway and Newport, during the sickly months. Also a town of Pennsylvania, 92 m. NW of Philadelphia.

SUNDA ISLANDS, in the Indian Ocean, near the Straits of Sunda. The chief of them are Borneo, Java, and Sumatra.

SUNDA, STRAITS OF, a strait or passage in the Eastern Indian Ocean, between the islands of Sumatra and Java.

SUNDAL, a town of Drontheim, in Norway, situated on the Driva, 66 m. SSW of Drontheim.

SUNDERBUNDS, a tract of country in Hindostan, consisting of that part of the Delta of the Ganges, in the S part of Bengal, which borders on the sea. It is composed of a labyrinth of rivers and creeks, all of which are salt, except those that immediately communicate with the principal arm of the Ganges. In extent it is about equal to the principality of Wales. "It is so completely enveloped in woods, and infested with tigers," says Major Rennel, "that all attempts to clear it have hitherto miscarried." Here salt, in quantities equal to the whole consumption of Bengal and its dependencies, is made and transported with equal facility; and here also is found an almost inexhaustible store of timber for boat-building. The distance to which the Ganges expands its various branches, at its junction with the sea, is about 200 m.

SUNDERBURG, a sea-port of the Isle of Alsen, in Denmark. It is seated on a strait, called Sunderburg Sound, 12 m. E of Flensburg.

SUNDEROO, a small island and sea-port of Hindostan, on the Concan coast, about 36 m. NNW of Goa. It was reduced by Commodore James, in 1756.

SUNDERLAND, a large, populous, thriving, and well-built sea-port town in the county of Durham, containing a handsome church, a large and elegant chapel of ease, a neat and large chapel for the Methodists, five Dissenters' meeting-houses, an hospital for old seamen or their widows, another for eight poor women, a dispensary and other public buildings. It contains 1662 houses and 12,290 inhab. Coal is the staple commodity, of which about 280,000 chaldrons, Newcastle measure, are exported annually. This coal is brought down the Wear, from numerous pits near its banks. In one year, not less than 4905 vessels cleared coastways, and 703 over sea; in all 5608. This town, together with that of Bishop Wearmouth, bordering on its western extremity, and to which it is immediately attached, comprehend a space of about $1\frac{1}{2}$ m. in length, and a $\frac{1}{4}$ of a m. in breadth. The main street, and particularly the central part of it, rising in a considerable ascent, which connects the two towns, is spacious and tolerably handsome, but most of the other streets, which branch off from it, are narrow and dirty. Glass bottles and salt are manufactured here, and there is an exportation of lime, grind-stones, copperas, pottery-ware, and other articles. For a long time the navigation of this port was considerably impeded, from the want of a sufficient depth of water, to admit ships of any considerable burden to put to sea with their whole lading; to remedy which, such vessels were obliged to take part of their cargo in the open road; by which the keel-men, who bring down the coals, were often exposed, in sudden storms, to danger, by venturing out to sea with the remainder of their lading; to obviate which inconvenience, and the danger to which the vessels are there often exposed, many of the largest ships belonging to this port were obliged to take in their lading at Shields. But this inconvenience is now very much remedied, by recent improvements in the harbour, and particularly the addition of a north pier, by which the ebbing tide gains greater force to scour the sand which forms a bar at the entrance of the harbour; the tide now flows 16 feet, and admits vessels of 300 and 400 tons burden. A bridge has been erected across the river Wear, thought to be the greatest curiosity of its kind in the world. It is not less remarkable for its prodigious height and extreme span, than for the peculiarity of its construction, being formed of small segments of cast iron, joined in such a manner as to form a complete arch, the span of which is 236 feet, and will admit of vessels sailing under it of 400 tons burden, by only striking their top-gallant masts. The seamen of this port are reckoned among the colliers, the best in the kingdom. Sunderland is a member of Newcastle, and is situated on the S side of the river Wear (by which, at high-water, it is almost surrounded), 13 m. NE of Durham, and 204 N by W of London.

SUNDERLAND, a town of Massachusetts, situated on the E side of the Connecticut, opposite Deerfield, and 69 m. W of Boston.

Sunderland, Cumberl. 4 m. NE of Cockermouth. Sunderland, Durham, by Branspeth Castle. Sunderland, Northumberl. by the sea, N of Dunstaburgh Castle. Sunderland, High, Yorks. near Halifax. Sunderland Point, Lancas. on the coast, SW of Lancaster. Sunderland Wick, Yorks. near Great and Little Driffield.

SUNDGAW, formerly a district of Germany, on the left side of the Rhine, but now forming the southern part of the depart. of Lower Rhine.

SUNDI, a province of Africa, in Congo, which lies along the river Zaire. Its rivers render it extremely fertile, and in the mountains are mines of several metals. The capital is of the same name. Lat. 4 50 S lon. 17 55 E.

Sundon, Upper and Lower, Bedfords. SW of Stretley. Sundridge, Kent, 2½ m. NE of Westram. Sundridge, Kent, in Bromley parish.

SUNDSWALL, a sea-port of Medelpadia, Sweden. Lat. 62 47 N lon. 17 5 E.

Sungar, Warwicks. S of Claverdon. Sunger, Wilts, near Clarendon. Sunk Island, Yorks. in the Humber, about 2 m. long, and one and a half broad. It is about 10 m. NW of Spurn Head, and 14 SE of Hull. Sunning, Berks, on the Thames, 2 m. NE of Reading. At the E end of the church, Leland says, there stood a chapel, formerly much resorted to in pilgrimage, for the cure of madness. According to the same author, 9 bishops sat here, till Hermanus, the last of them, translated the see to Sarum. Sunning-Eye, Oxfords. near Sunning. Sunning-Hill, Berks, in Windsor-Forest, near Bagshot: its medicinal wells are efficacious in paralytic cases. Sunning-Well, Berks, SE of Oxford.

SUPERIOR, so called from its magnitude, the largest lake of N. America, and supposed to be the largest body of fresh water on the globe. It may be justly termed the Caspian Sea of America, being, according to the French charts, not less than 1500 m. in circumf. There are many islands in this lake, two of them are very large, especially Isle Royale, which is computed to be 100 m. long, and in some places 40 broad. The surrounding coast is rocky and uneven. Upwards of 30 rivers enter this lake, some of which are of considerable size. It abounds with fish, particularly trout and sturgeon; the former generally weighing from 12 to 50 pounds. Storms affect this lake as much as they do the Atlantic Ocean. It discharges its waters from the SE corner, through the Straits of St. Marie, into Lake Huron.

SUPINO, a town of Moliso, in Naples.

SUR. See SOUR.

SURAT, a sea-port of Hindostan, encompassed on the land side with two brick walls, which divide it into the Inner and the Outer Town. Within the inner walls stand the citadel, on the shore of the river, divided by trenches from the town. The Europeans residing here, estimate the population of the city at a million of inhab. but M. Niebuhr thinks this calculation above the truth by, at least, two thirds. The larger houses are flat-roofed here, as through the rest of the East, with courts before them, but the houses of the common people are mostly high-roofed. Its trade is very considerable, it being the great storehouse of the most precious productions of India; and in the city are as many different professions of religion as in Amsterdam; for there are Mahometans of several sects, and many sorts of Gentoos. Mr. Niebuhr says, that the Mahometans at Surat, are not, by far, so strict as they are in Arabia, or in other Turkish countries, nor are the distinctions of tribes among the Hindoos who reside here, strictly observed. "These Hindoos," he continues, "are a set of industrious, sober people, and of such surprising honesty, that no Europeans have ever had cause to repent the intrusting, even their whole fortune, to the Banians, who being born to trade, are employed here as brokers, as the Jews are in Turkey. The Hindoo women assist their husbands in earning their bread, and keep themselves so clean, that the European women, who come to India, are obliged to follow their example, or run the risk of losing their husbands' affections. When a child is born, a Bramin is to declare, by astrological rules, whether the child is come into the world in a lucky hour or not. This done, he hangs a thin string over the shoulder of a boy, who wears this distinctive mark of his nation all his lifetime. The Bramins fix the time for the celebration of weddings; and also order and announce the holy-days. Every Banian is obliged, every morning, after washing and bathing himself, to have a kind of seal impressed on his forehead by a Bramin; though this is the office of inferior Bramins only. I saw, one morning, a great number of them sit on the river side, under the castle, where a number of girls and women resorted to bathe, and to say their morning prayers. Every one of them gave the clean clothes, which they intended to wear for that day, to one of these priests, and then went into the river. They afterward exchange their wet clothes for the dry ones, publicly on shore, but with such a dexterity, that the most curious observer could see nothing inconsistent with decency." Besides the Mahometans and Gentoos, there are Jew and Christians of various denominations, at Surat. Persons of distinction, both here and through the rest of India, speak and write the Persian language, which has been received at the courts, and the knowledge of which is very useful for business. In trade, however, a corrupt Portuguese is used; and this is in India, what the Lingua Franca is in the Levant. The surrounding country is fertile, except towards the sea, which is sandy and barren. Surat is remarkable for an hospital, or asylum, for all kinds of animals, as well as poultry and pigeons. It is an extensive building, with numerous wards, having several dependent endowments without the city walls for such patients and convalescents as require pasturage and country air. It is situated in a large plain, on the S bank of the Tapty, about 20 m. from its mouth, on the confines of Guzerat, and 177 N of Bombay. Lat. 21 10 N lon. 72 48 E.

Surbiton, Surry, 1 m. S of Kingston, in the road to Epsom. Surfleet, Essex, at the mouth of the Coln, NW of Gunfleet. Surfleet, Lincolns. on Boston Dike, near the Wash.

Surgowny, in Armagh, Ulster.

SURGUT, a town of Tobolsk, in Siberia, 284 m. NNE of Tobolsk.

Suridlington, Lincolns. SW of Market-Raisin.

SURINAM, a country of S. America, in Guiana, bounded on the N by the Atlantic Ocean, on the E by the river Marawina, on the S by a country of Indians, and on the W by the river Corentyn. It is about 150 m. in length, and 60 in breadth, and abounds in fruits, fish, game, and singular animals of different kinds. The soil is, in general, extremely fertile, particularly in those parts which are cultivated by European industry, producing sugar, cotton, tobacco, indigo, cocoa, gums, wood for dyeing, &c. The woods are full of monkeys, and there are likewise tigers, with parrots, scorpions, serpents of an amazing size, and a great variety of insects. The rivers abound with alligators, and in Surinam is found that wonderful fish, the torpedo. Besides this, which gives name to the colony, the other principal rivers are, the Corentyn, the Copename, the Seramica, and the Marawina; of these, the Surinam only is navigable; the rest, though very long and broad, are so shallow, and so extremely crowded with rocks and small islands, that they are of little consequence to Europeans; nor are their banks inhabited, except by the Indians, or natives of the country. Into all these rivers are discharged a number of very large creeks, or rivulets, the banks of which are inhabited by Europeans, and cultivated with various plantations, which exhibit the most delightful prospects imaginable to those who travel by water, the universal mode of journeying in this country, as the soil is, in general, ill adapted for the construction of roads, and in some places the woods are absolutely impenetrable. The whites, or Europeans, in Surinam, who reside principally in Paramaribo, the chief town, are computed at about 5000, including the garrison, and the negroes at about 75,000. In 1674, this settlement, which had been partly planted by the English, was ceded to the Dutch by King Charles II. in exchange for the province of New York. Lat. 4 45 to 6 N lon. 53 40 to 56 25 W.

SURINAM, a river of S. America, which rises in the government of Terra Firma, and after a winding course of about 150 m. from S to N falls into the Atlantic Ocean, in lat. 6 25 N and lon. 55 40 W. This river is navigable for large vessels more than 90 m. up the country.

SURINGIA, or SUISJU, a sea-port of Niphon, in Japan, capital of a province of the same name, with a castle, where the emperors formerly resided. It is 170 m. SSE of Meaco.

Surlby, Nottinghams. N of Blythe. Surlingham, St. Mary's and St. Saviour's, SE of Norwich. Surrendon, Kent, NW of Ashford.

SURRY, a county of England, bounded on the N by Middlesex and a point of Bucks, on the E by Kent, on the S by Sussex, and on the W by Hants and Berks. Its greatest length is about 39 m. and its breadth 26. It is divided into 13 hundreds, which contain 11 market towns (including Southwark) 140 parishes, 650 villages and hamlets, 55,400 houses, and 323,851 inhab. It is a healthy, pleasant county, and the value of estates in it has advanced, of late years, beyond any other part of England. The soil is very different in the extreme parts from that in the middle, whence it has been compared to a coarse cloth with a fine border: for the edge of the county on all sides has a rich soil, extremely fruitful in corn and grass, particularly in Holmesdale, and on the N and W parts toward the Thames; but it is far otherwise in the heart of the county, where are wide tracts of sandy ground and barren heath, and in some places are long ridges of hills, with warrens of rabbits, and parks for deer. However, we meet here and there with some pleasant spots interspersed in the middle of Surry, and it is not to be doubted, that a great deal of the waste ground might, by proper management, be greatly improved. This county produces corn, box-wood, walnuts, hops, and fullers' earth; and near Darking grows a wild black cherry, of which a very pleasant wine is made, little inferior to French claret. The manufactures in starch, tobacco, gunpowder, paper, vinegar, calico printing, wax bleaching, &c. are considerable. The principal rivers, beside the Thames (which is the boundary of this county on the N) are the Mole, Wey, Wandle, and Loddon. The Lent assizes are held at Kingston, and the Summer assizes at Guildford and Croydon alternately.

SURRY, a county of Virginia, and a town of New Hampshire.

SURSEE, a town of Lucerne, in Switzerland, seated on the Lake of Sempach, 13 m. NW of Lucerne.

SUS, a river of Africa, which rises from Mount Atlas, in Morocco, and runs into the Atlantic, near Santa Cruz. It gives name to the province, which it bounds on the south.

SUS, SOUS, or SUEZ, a district of Morocco, bounded on the W by the Ocean, on the N by Mount Atlas, on the E by Darah, and on the S by Nun. It is a flat country, most of which produces corn, sugar-canes, dates, indigo, alum, calamine, and red copper; and also abounds with cattle and camels. In the mountainous part the inhabitants are entirely free, and are governed by their own scheiks. The principal towns are Tarudant, Aguadir, Toma, Tecent, and Messa.

SUSA, anciently SEGUSIUM, an ancient and strong town of Piedmont, capital of the marquisate of Susa. Here is a rich convent, called the Abbey of St. Just, and a triumphal arch erected to the honour of Augustus Cæsar. It has been called the key of Italy, because it is the principal passage out of France into Italy. It is at present small and poor, and is seated on the river Dora Riparia, in a valley to which it gives name, 25 m. WNW of Turin.

SUSA, SUSTER, or SCHOUSTER, a town of Chusistan, in Persia, with some manufactures of silk stuffs and rich cloth. It is 150 m. W of Ispahan, and is supposed by some to be the ancient Susa, where the kings of Persia had a magnificent palace for their winter residence; also a town of Chorasan, in Persia, 60 m. NNW of Herat.

SUSA. See SOUSE.

SUSDAL, a town of Volodomir, in Russia, capital of a duchy of the same name. It is built of wood, as are most towns in these parts, and is 90 m. NE of Moscow.

SUSQUEHANNAH, a river of N. America, which rises in two branches, the easternmost in the Mohawk's country, New York; and the westernmost in the N part of Pennsylvania. These branches unite at Sunbury; after which it runs in a SE direction, passes by Harrisburg, crosses the Blue Mountains, enters Maryland, and being joined by several other rivers, forms the Chesapeak.

SUSSEX, a county of England, bounded on the N by Surry, on the NE and E by Kent, on the S by the English channel, and on the W by Hamps. It is about 75 m. in length, and 20 in its mean breadth. It is divided into 6 rapes, and these are subdivided into 61 hundreds, which contain 1 city, 20 market towns, 312 parishes, 1060 villages, 29,591 houses, and 190,093 inhab. The air of this country is very various: along the sea-shore it is thought aguish; but it has a much greater effect on strangers than on the natives, who are generally very healthful. In the Weald, which is a rich deep soil, it is apt to be foggy, yet not unwholesome; but upon the Downs the air is extremely sweet and healthy. The soil is likewise various; that of the Downs, and thence to the sea, is very fertile, both in corn and grass, the latter feeding large flocks of sheep, whose wool is remarkably fine. The middle of the county abounds with meadows and rich arable ground, and the N side is shaded with extensive woods, that used to supply fuel for the iron works when they were in a flourishing state. This plentiful county, therefore, supplies numerous commodities, the chief of which are corn, malt, cattle, wool, wood, iron, chalk, glass, fish, and fowl. It is particularly famous for its wheatears, a small bird, of the size of a lark, not much inferior to an ortolan, which is taken on the SE Downs in the following manner: a turf is cut up, about a foot long, and half a foot broad; in the cavity is placed a snare of horse-hair, and the turf turned with the grass downward to cover the greatest part of the hole. These birds are naturally so timorous, that the shadow of a cloud, or any thing that moves on the ground, makes them fly into these little pits for shelter, where they are taken. With respect to manufactures, Sussex is not distinguished for any but that of gunpowder at Battel, and of needles and coarse cloths at Chichester. The principal rivers are the Arun, Adur, Ouse, Rother, Rye, and Cockmere. Chichester is the capital.

SUSSEX, a town of New Jersey, and a county of Virginia.

SUSTEREN, a town of Juliers.

Suston, E of Hereford. Sutcomb, Devons. Sutham, Berks, between Theal and Pangburn. Suthbury Hill, Wilts, between Everley Warren and Luggershall. It is the highest in the county, and has the traces of a vast fortification, supposed to have been Danish.

SUTHERLANDSHIRE, a county of Scotland, bounded on the N and W by the N. Sea, on the E by Caithnesss. and the German Ocean, and on the S and SW by the Frith of Dornoch and Rosssh. Its greatest extent from E to W is about 46 m. and from N to S somewhat more. It is usually divided into Strathnavern and Sutherland Proper, the former comprehending the northern, the latter the southern part. Some parts of this county, still called forests, were anciently covered with wood, but are now trackless deserts, destitute of trees; or bleak mountains, abounding with wild roses.

In these parts there are few inhabitants and no villages; but to the SE along the Frith of Dornoch, the country is populous and well cultivated. Dornoch is the county town.

SUTHERLAND POINT, the S point of entrance into Botany Bay, so called from Forby Sutherland, one of Captain Cook's seamen, who was buried there, in 1770.

W of Gravesend, near the remains of 3 small camps and forts, supposed to be Danish. Here, it is said, the Kentishmen, with boughs in their hands, like a moving wood, surprised William the Conqueror, and throwing down their boughs, threatened battle, if they had not their ancient customs and franchises granted to them, to which he immediately consented. But the fact is doubted, as it is first mentioned by Thomas Spot, a monk, who lived two centuries after William's arrival. It is certain, however, that many peculiar customs are to be found in Kent; one of which is that of gavelkind, or the equal distribution of landed property among all the sons of a family.

SWANSEA, or ABERTAW, a large, clean, well-built, and populous town of Glamorgans. containing an old castle, 2 churches, and 1590 houses, with broad paved streets. It exports great quantities of coals to Ireland and the southern coast of England; it has also a great correspondence with Bristol and Worcester for grocery and other shop goods. Here are potteries, and considerable works for the smelting of copper and lead ore. Many ships have been built here, and it is resorted to for sea bathing. It is situated on a bay of the Bristol Channel, to which it gives name, at the mouth of the river Tawy, which here forms a good harbour, 24 m. WNW of Cowbridge, and 205 W of London. SWEDEN, a large kingdom, in the N part of Europe; bounded on the N by Norway and Lapland; on the E by Russia; on the S by the Baltic and the Gulf of Finland; and on the W by Norway, the Sound, and the Cattegat. It is the largest state in Europe, next to Russia, though geographers are not agreed respecting its superficial contents. The whole kingdom is divided into five general parts; namely, Sweden Proper, Gothland, Norland, Lapland, and Finland; and each of these is subdivided into several provinces. Sweden Proper contains Upland, Sudermania, Nericia, Westmania, and Dalecarlia. Gothland contains Ostrogothia, or E. Gothland, Smoland, Westrogothia, or W. Gothland, the Isles of Gothland and Œland, Wermland, Bohus, Dalia, Scania, or Schonen, Halland, and Blekingen. Norland includes Gestrike, or Gestrikeland, Helsingland, Medelpadia, Jemtland, Herjedalia, Angermania, and W. Bothnia. Swedish Lapland comprises Asela, Hiemtland, Umeo, Pitheo, Luleo, Torneo, and Kemi. Finland contains Finland Proper, E. Bothnia, Tavasteland, Nyland, Savolax, and that part of Kymene and Carelia which Sweden has preserved. In the S, the longest day is 18 hours 30 minutes; but toward the N there is continual day in summer, and continual night in winter, for several weeks successively. In the province in which Stockholm is seated, the spring and autumn are scarcely to be perceived; for the winter continues 9 months, and the summer only 3. In winter the cold is excessive, and in summer the heat is almost insupportable, the air being generally serene all that time. Notwithstanding this, the Swedes live to a great age, as the pure and sharp air which they breathe probably preserves them from epidemical diseases. Thunder is seldom heard in this country; it produces no venomous reptiles; and earthquakes never spread terror and consternation among its inhab. Those places that are fit for cultivation have scarce a foot of good earth, for below it is all gravel; for which reason they till the ground with a single ox, and one person may readily manage the plough. All their rocks are quite covered with flowers in the summer time, and their gardens have plenty of fruits. The trees are early in blossoming, because the soil is fat and sulphureous, which contributes greatly to the vegetation of plants; but the apples, pears, cherries, apricots, melons, and grapes, have not so good a taste as in the more southern countries. The pine and fir are the principal forest trees. Their domestic animals are horses, cows, hogs, goats, and sheep. The wild beasts are bears, wolves, foxes, wild cats, and squirrels. There are also elks and rein-deer, does, sables, beavers, and pole-cats. Linnæus reckons 1400 species of animals in Sweden, and about 1300 species of plants, of which 200 are used in medicine. They have several sorts of fowls; and partridges, woodcocks, and falcons, in great plenty. They have rich silver, copper, and iron mines. They export boards, gunpowder, leather, iron, copper, tallow, skins, flax, hemp, pitch, rosin, and masts; and import salt, brandy, wine, linen cloth, stuffs, tobacco, sugar, spice, and paper. The inhab. are of a robust constitution, and able to sustain the hardest labour; and they have several public schools and colleges, where arts and sciences are taught. Their houses are generally of wood, with very little art in their construction, and their roofs covered with turf, on which their goats often feed. There is scarcely any country in the world where the women do so much work; for they till the ground, thrash the corn, and row the boats on the sea. Amongst the more respectable circles, the women are seldom seen in the streets; and the most wealthy are not ashamed to be employed in cooking, and other domestic offices. Sweden was formerly an elective monarchy, and afterwards the most limited one in Europe, till the year 1772, when the late king gained the most essential royal prerogatives, without, however, being an absolute monarch. This prince was assassinated March 16th, 1792, leaving his son Gustavus heir, and his brother, the Duke of Sudermania, regent of the kingdom, who assumed the crown on the abdication of his nephew, but he also resigned the crown in 1810, and has been succeeded by the Prince de Ponte Corvo, the French general Bernadotte. The inhab. are computed at 3,000,000. The religion is the Lutheran, and it is said they will not tolerate any other in the kingdom. They have 1 archbishop and 7 bishops, besides 6 superintendants. The capital is Stockholm.

SWITZERLAND, or HELVETIAN REPUBLIC, a large and populous country of Europe, bounded on the E by the Tyrol and Austrian Swabia; on the W by France; on the N by the Black Forest, and a part of Swabia; and on the S by Savoy and Italy. Its greatest extent from E to W is about 180 m. and from N to S 140. Here are many lakes and rivers, and some very fertile plains, which plentifully afford the necessaries of life, although the greatest part of it may justly be considered as the most elevated land in Europe. Switzerland is divided into 13 cantons, exclusively of their allies; their names are Lucern, Uri, Schweitz, Underwalden, Zug, Friburg, Soleure, which are Romanists. The Protestant cantons are Zurich, Bern, Basle, and Schaffhausen. Glarus and Appenzel contain both professions of religion. The mountains of Switzerland are commonly called the Alps, over which there are four passages to go into Italy from Switzerland. The principal lakes are those of Constance, Geneva, Lucern, Zurich, Neufchatel, and Bienne. The most considerable rivers are the Rhine, the Rhone, the Aar, the Rouss, and the Inn. The principal riches of Switzerland consist of excellent pastures, in which they breed and fatten their cattle. As they leave out their cattle night and day on the mountains, a stranger might be induced to think they would be devoured by the wild beasts, and yet it is quite otherwise; for, when the beeves perceive a bear or a wolf, at a distance, they form themselves into a circle, and are ready to receive the enemy with their horns. As for the goats and chamois, they feed in flocks on the mountains and in the woods, and they place centinels on all sides; and when any dangerous animal draws near, a signal is given, and they all get into a place of refuge, where the savage beasts dare not come. The inhab. are strong robust men, and form excellent mercenary troops, for which reason they are hired by several nations for the military service; and even the pope has his Swiss guards. The women are tolerably handsome, have many good qualities, and are, in general, very industrious. The peasants retain their old manner of dress, and are content to live upon roots, herbs, milk, butter, and cheese; and there are some of the mountaineers who never have any bread. The manufactures of Switzerland are considerable in linen, silk, cotton, and woollen, leather, hats, gloves, paper, pottery, clocks, watches, hardware, toys, &c. besides which they export butter, cheese, cattle, sheep, horses, and some wine, conveyed by pack-horses, as the roads are often impracticable for carriages. The imports are principally grain, hemp, flax, wine, salt, and some manufactures. The inhab. are estimated at 2,000,000. See the cantons under their respective names, and also GLACIERS and SCHWEITZ.

SYDNEY BAY, a bay on the S side of Norfolk Island, in the S. Pacific Ocean, formed by Point Hunter and Point Ross, which are a m. and three quarters distant from each other. On this bay is formed a settlement of English convicts.

SYDNEY COVE, the town or settlement of convicts, begun to be erected in Port Jackson, on the coast of New S. Wales, in 1788. The ground about it was then covered with a thick forest; but in 1790, some good buildings had been erected. The governor, lieutenant-governor, judge-advocate, and greatest part of the civil and military officers were comfortably lodged. The governor's house is built of stone, and has a very good appearance, being 70 feet in front. The lieutenant-governor's house is of brick, as are also those belonging to the judge and the commissary. The rest of the houses are built with logs, and plastered, and all the roofs are either covered by shingles, or thatched. The hospital is a good temporary building. The soldiers were in barracks, and the officers had comfortable huts, with gardens adjoining to them. The cove lies open to the NE, and is continued in a SW direction for near 1000 yards, gradually decreasing from the breadth of 1400 feet, till it terminates in a point, where it receives a small stream of fresh water. It is perfectly secure from all winds, with anchorage extending 2000 feet up the cove, and soundings, in general, of 4, 5, 6, and 7 fathoms, so that ships can lie close to the shore for a considerable way on both sides. Metals of various kinds abound in the neighbouring soil. Lat. 35 50 S lon. 151 28 E.

SYENE, a miserable town of Egypt, situated on the E side of the Nile, 375 m. S of Cairo. Here are columns and pillars of granite, with other remains of the ancient town, on an eminence to the S. Among these is a building, supposed by some to be an observatory of the ancient Egyptians.

TANGIER, a sea-port of Fez, in Africa, at the W end of the Straits of Gibraltar. It was taken from the Moors by the Portuguese in 1471, and given as a dower to the princess Catharine of Portugal, who married Charles II. of England; but that impolitic monarch did not think it worth the expence of keeping, and therefore, in 1684, caused the works to be blown up, and withdrew the garrison. At present, there are some batteries facing the bay, in tolerable condition, but it is incapable of defence against a powerful attack. The Bay of Tangier is not very safe, when the wind is in the W, having been encumbered by the ruins of the mole and fortifications: the best anchorage for larger vessels is at the eastern point, whence they may easily set out, whichever way the wind blows; and the bay is only dangerous during the winter. The English obtain from hence, fowls, vegetables, and other supplies, for the garrison at Gibraltar. It is 108 m. NNW of Fez, and 38 SW of Gibraltar.

TARRAGONA, a town of Catalonia, with a university; under the Romans the capital of a district called Tarraconensis. It was built originally by the Phœnicians, and was very considerable in the time of the Romans. There are several inscriptions, coins, ruins, and other monuments of antiquity here. It is neither so large nor so populous at present; for, though there is room for 2000 houses within the walls, which were built by the Moors, there are not above 500, which are all built with large square stones. Its cathedral is well worthy of attention, for its vast dimensions, and the elegance of its Gothic architecture. The archbishop is metropolitan of Catalonia, and disputes the primacy of Spain with Toledo. It has but little trade (the harbour being dangerous, tho' much frequented), and is seated on the Mediterranean, at the mouth of the river Francoli, 38 m. WSW of Barcelona, and 240 E by N of Madrid.

TARTARY, a country of Asia, which, taken in its utmost limits, reaches from the Eastern Ocean to the Caspian Sea, and from Corea, China, Hindostan and Persia, to Russia and Siberia. It is generally considered under three grand divisions; namely, Eastern, Western, and Independent Tartary. The different tribes which inhabit Eastern Tartary were formerly called Mongul Tartars, a warlike nation, who, on one hand, conquered Hindostan, under Jenghis Khan, and on the other, subdued China, in the 13th century, and reigned there for 100 years, till they were expelled in the year 1368. Chinese Tartary is divided into two parts, Eastern and Western. The greatest part of this country either belongs to the emperor of China, is tributary to him, or is under his protection. The Chinese empire has been lately extended in Tartary, by the celebrated conquest of the kingdom of the Eluths, made in 1759, by the arms of the Emperor Kien Long. Independent Tartary includes all the country between Chinese Tartary and the Caspian Sea, and contains Turcestan, Great and Little Buckharia, Turcomania, Charasm, Thibet, and some countries inhabited by the Usbecs and Kalmucks. Western Tartary includes the remainder; most or all of which has been conquered by the Russians. For various interesting particulars concerning them, see, in their respective places, the articles Abkas, Circassia, Crimea, Cossacks, Georgia, Imeritia, Kalmucks, Kisti, Lesguis, Mingrelia Monguls, Ossi, Samoyedes, Turcomans, and Usbecs. Tartar, or Tatar, is, in fact, a general name, which includes a great variety of nations, but with a particular one often applied from their local situation.

TATE'S ISLAND, an island in the S Pacific Ocean, first discovered June 29th, 1793, by captains Bampton and Holt, of the Hormazier and Chesterfield, vessels employed in the service of the East India Company, and so named in honour of Mr. Tate, of Bombay. The inhab. are stout, well made, and woolly headed, and resemble the people of New Guinea in stature and complexion. A party from the ships having landed, for the sake of procuring water, and to make observations on the soil, produce, inhab. &c. was at first received very kindly, to all appearance, but afterwards the natives, watching their opportunity, murdered captain Hill, of the New South Wales corps, and some of the seamen, cutting their throats from ear to ear, and mangling their bodies in a shocking manner. It was with difficulty that the survivors made a shift to get on board their boat, by frequently discharging their muskets, at the report of which the natives always fled into the woods. Those voracious cannibals were afterward seen dragging the dead bodies towards large fires prepared on the occasion, yelling and howling hideously at the same time. Lat. 9 28 S lon. 146 57 E.

Tatenham, Wilts, 4 m. from Marlborough. Taternal, or Tatternhoe, Bedfords. NW of Dunstable. Tatesfield, Surry, SE of Chelsham. Tatham, E of Lancaster. Tathwell, Lincolns. near Louth.

TATTA, or SINDE, a town of Hindostan Proper, capital of the province of Sindy; supposed to be built on the site of the ancient Patala. In the last century, it was very extensive and populous, and was a place of considerable trade, possessing manufactures of silk, Carmania wool, and cotton; it was also celebrated for its cabinet ware. Little of these, however, now remain, and the limits of the city are very much circumscribed. On the shores of the Indus, above the Delta, considerable quantities of saltpetre are made; and within 3 m. of it, on the NW are mines of iron and salt. The Indus, and its branches, admit of an uninterrupted navigation from Tatta to Moultan, Lahore, and Cashmere, for vessels of near 200 tons; and a very extensive trade was carried on between those places in the time of Aurungzebe; but, at present, very little of this trade remains, owing, it is said, to a bad government in Sindy, and probably to a hostile disposition of the Seiks, the present possessors of Moultan and Lahore. Tatta is seated on a branch of the river Sinde, or Indus, called the Ritchel river, 156 m. WNW of Amedabad, and 340 SSW of Moultan. Lat. 24 50 N lon. 67 37 E.

TAVASTLAND, a very fertile province in the middle of Finland, about 150 m. in length and 100 in breadth. It consists of fine plains, watered by a great number of rivers and lakes, which abound in fish, and it is plentifully stored with cattle and all sorts of game. It is far, however, from being well cultivated, and the inhab. are very poor. The northern part is rather mountainous and woody.

TAVASTUS, or KRONEBORG, a town of Finland, capital of the province of Tavastland. The castle is well fortified, and serves for an arsenal and royal magazine. It is seated on a river, which falls into Lake Wana, 80 m. NE of Abo.

TAUBER, SEE, a lake of Berchetesgaden, in Bavaria.

TAUCAEL, TAUCHEL, or TUCHEL, a town of Prussian Pomerelia, seated on the river Verd, 44 m. SSW of Dantzic.

TAUCHA, a town of Leipsic, in Upper Saxony, 6 m. NE of Leipsic.

Taud, a river in Lancash. which runs into the Dowles, not far from Lathom Park. Tave, a river in Carmarthens. which runs into the Severn at St. Clear, near Llaugharn.

TAVE, or TAFF, a river of Wales, which rises in two streams, in the southern part of Brecknocks. and runs into the Bristol Channel, opposite Pennarth Point, below Cardiff, in Glamorgans.

Taverham, Norf. by the Yare, NW of Norwich.

TAVERNA, a town of Naples, 15 m. N of Squillace.

TAVERNES, a town of France, in the depart. of Var, 3 m. N of Barjols.

TAVIRA, or TAVILA, a considerable town of Portugal, in Algarve, containing 2 churches, an hospital, 5 convents, and about 5000 inhab. It has a commodious harbour, protected by two forts, and is seated in a pleasant, fertile country, near the mouth of the river Gilaon, 100 m. W by N of Cadiz.

TAVISTOCK, an ancient, large, and well built borough town of Devons. containing 495 houses and 4,723 inhab. It was once a flourishing place, famous for its stately, mitred abbey, where books were formerly printed in the Saxon language, and a school erected to teach it; it is now divided into tenements. It is a stannary town, has a chalybeate mineral water, and is situated on the river Tavy, or Tave, 32 m. W by S of Exeter, and 206 W by S of London. Market on Sat.

Taukin, Cumberl. SE of Brampton.

TAUMAGO, an island in the S. Pacific Ocean, discovered by Quiros, in the year 1606. He found wood, water, potatoes, cocoas, palmettos, sugar-canes, and other plants and fruits. The inhabitants appear to be active, robust, and warlike, but not ferocious. Lat. 13 S lon. 120 E of Ferro.

Taume, a river which rises in Yorks. and runs into the Mersey at Stopford, in Lancas. opposite Stockport.

TAUNTON, a town of Massachusetts, seated on a river of the same name, which runs into the sea at Rhode Island, 29 m. S of Boston.

TAUNTON, an ancient borough town of Somersets. which, in point of size, buildings, and respectability of inhab. may vie with many cities. It consists of 4 principal streets, which are wide and very well built, besides a number of others, and contains 2 parish churches, a noble and spacious market-place, a commodious market-house, with a handsome town-hall over it, a well-endowed grammar-school, an hospital, 1306 houses, and 6997 inhab. It has long been the principal seat of the manufacture of coarse woollen goods, such as serges, corduroys, sagathies, druggets, shalloons, &c. though somewhat decayed of late years, or translated, perhaps, to the neighbouring town of Wellington. A silk manufacture was introduced here in 1780. Large quantities of malt liquor are also sent from this town to Bristol for exportation. The corporation are said to have neither lands, houses, nor joint stock; their last charter precluding them from any such possessions. The election of members of parliament here is very singular; every pot-walloper, i. e. inhabitant that dresses his own victuals, is entitled to vote; so that the inmates, or lodgers, to qualify themselves, a little before the election comes on, make a fire in the street, and there boil their victuals. It is seated on the river Tone, which is navigable hence to the Parret, and so to Bridgewater, 31 m. NE of Exeter, and 140 W by S of London. Large markets on Wed. and Sat.

TAUNTON-DEAN, or the VALE OF TAUNTON, in Somersets. extending about 30 m. in length, is of such remarkable fertility and produce, that, to use the vulgar phrase, with the sun and soil alone, it needs no manure. Coals from Wales, after being brought by sea from Swansea to Bridgewater, are brought from the latter places by barges to Taunton, as are heavy goods and merchandise from Bristol, and so are transported over all these parts.

TAVORA, a town of Beira, in Portugal, 6 m. E of Lamego. It is situated on or near a river of the same name, which runs into the Douro, 5 m. NE of Lamego.

TAUREAU, an island of France, in the depart. of Finisterre, lying at the mouth of the river Morlaix. Lat. 48 40 N.

TAURICA, or TAURIDA. See CRIMEA.

TAURIS, or TABRIS, a city of Persia, capital of Aderbeitzan, the most considerable in the empire, next to Ispahan. It carries on a prodigious trade over many parts of Asia, in cotton, cloths, silks, gold and silver brocades, the finest turbans, and shagreen leather. It contains many large and extensive bayars, covered with beautiful domes, and filled with vast quantities of merchandise, 3 hospitals, in which provisions are given twice a day to all who come, a square much larger and more spacious than that at Ispahan, (and in which the Turks, when in possession of this city, have frequently drawn up 30,000 men in order of battle), 250 mosques, 300 caravanseras, which are so spacious, that 300 persons, it is said, may lodge in each, besides baths, and other public buildings, equally noble and magnificent. Sir John Chardin estimates the inhab. at 550,000, besides strangers. It is seated in a plain, surrounded by mountains, whence a stream proceeds, which runs through the city. It is 180 m. SSE of Erivan, and 360 NNW of Ispahan. Lat. 38 18 N lon. 47 10 E.

TAURUS, or ARARAT, a great chain of mountains in Asia, which begin near the western part of Natolia, and extend to India. In different places they have different names.

Tauton, N. Devons. NW of Barnstaple. Tauton, S. Devons. E of Okehampton. Tavy, Mary's, Devons. on the river Tavy. Tavy, Peter's, Devons. NE of Tavistock. Tavy, a river of Devons. which rises near the centre of the county, about 3 m. SE of Okehampton, flows to Barnstaple, and then turns westerly and joins the Towridge, at its mouth, in the Bristol Channel. Tawton, Bishop's, Devons. on the Taw, SW and S of Barnstaple. Bishop's Tawton was the first bishop's see in this county, from whence, after only two bishops had resided in it, it was removed to Crediton, and then to Exeter. Tawy, a river of Brecknocks. and Glamorgans. which enters the Bristol Channel at Swansea. Taxhall, Chesh. N of Macclesfield Forest.

TAY, a fine river of Scotland, the two sources of which are near Tyndrum, in the W part of Perthshire. Flowing through Loch Tay, it afterwards waters Dunkeld and Perth, and, joining the river Earn, falls into the Frith of Tay.

TAY, a river of Waterford, in Munster, which runs into the Atlantic, about 7 m. WNW from Dungarvan Bay.

TAY, FRITH OF, a noble estuary, or arm of the sea, which divides Fifes. from the counties of Perth and Angus. It becomes narrow towards its mouth, and at the Ferry-Town, in Fifes. called Parton Craigs, it is not above a mile broad.

TAY, LOCH, a lake of Perths. in Scotland, through which flows the majestic river of the same name. It is about 15 m. long, and in many parts above one broad. On the 12th of September, 1784, this lake was seen to ebb and flow several times in a quarter of an hour, when all at once, the waters rushed from the E and W in opposite currents, so as to form a ridge, leaving the channel dry to the distance of almost 100 yards from its usual boundary. When the opposing waves met, they burst with a clashing noise, and much foam: the waters then flowed out at least five yards beyond their ordinary limits. The flux and reflux continued, gradually decreasing for about two hours. A similar motion was observed for several days, but not to the same degree as on the first day. The banks of this lake are finely wooded; and it has a small tufted island, on which are the ruins of a priory, built by Alexander I.

TAYLI, or TALI, a city of China, of the first rank, in the province of Yunnan, 1205 m. SW of Peking. It is the principal place where they make curious tables, and other ornaments of fine marble, naturally beautified with different colours, in the form of mountains, flowers, trees, and rivers. Tayli has under its jurisdiction, 4 cities of the second rank, and 3 of the third.

Taynton, Gloucesters. SE of Newent. Taynton, Upper and Lower, Lincolns. near Horncastle. Taynton, Oxfords. 2 m. from Burford.

TAYOAN. See TAIOUAN.

TAYTONG, or TAITONG, a city of China, of the first rank in the province of Chansi, with a very large jurisdiction, extending over 4 great cities of the second rank, and 7 of the third. Lapis Lazuli is obtained in great plenty here; and there is a kind of jasper which is transparent, and as white as agate. Porphyry, marble, and jasper of all colours are very plentiful, and here is also a great commerce in skins. The neighbouring mountains abound with a variety of simples and medicinal herbs, which the botanists gather with great care. Taytong is very well fortified, according to the manner of the Chinese, and has, generally, a very strong garrison. It is situated in a mountainous country, exposed to the incursions of the Tartars, and surrounded, in a manner, by the great wall, which has forts from place to place. 155 m. W of Peking.

TCHANGTCHA, a city of China, of the first rank, in the province of Houquang. It is situated on the Heng river, 742 m. S of Peking.

TCHANGTCHEOU, a city of China, of the first rank, in the province of Fokien, 950 m. S of Peking.

TEFESAD, a town of Algiers, supposed to have been the ancient Tipsa, noted for its mines of iron. It is 32 m. SW of the city of Algiers.

TEFFLIS, a town of Asia, capital of Georgia. It is called by the inhab. Thilis-Cabar, (warm town) from the warm baths in its neighbourhood. Though its circumf. does not exceed two English m. it contains 20,000 inhab.: Armenians, Georgians, and Tartars. All the houses are of stone, with flat roofs, which serve, according to the custom of the East, as walks for the women. They are neatly built; the rooms are wainscoted, and the floors spread with carpets. The streets seldom exceed seven feet in breadth; and some are so narrow as scarcely to allow room for a man on horseback; they are consequently very filthy. The Armenians have established in this town all the manufactures carried on by their countrymen in Persia: the most flourishing is that of printed linens. Here are 1 Roman Catholic, 13 Greek, and 7 Armenian churches. Tefflis is seated on the river Kur, at the foot of a mountain, 300 m. SSW of Astracan. Lat. 41 59 N lon. 47 6 E.

It is a place of some resort for sea-bathing, and is situated on the declivity of a hill, affording a picturesque view of it from the bay, but deficient of trees, 7 m. E of Pembroke, and 233 W of London. Markets on Wed. and Sat.

TENCH'S ISLANDS, a well-inhabited island, in the S. Pacific Ocean, discovered by Lieutenant Ball, in 1790. It is about 2 m. in circumf. : it is low, but entirely covered with trees, many of which are the cocoa-nut. The natives observed in the canoes that ventured to come somewhat near the ship, were remarkably stout and healthy-looking men ; their skin perfectly smooth, and free from any disorder. They were quite naked, and of a copper colour: their hair resembling that of the New Hollanders. Some of their beards reached as low as the navel, and there was the appear-ice of much art having been used to form them into long ringlets, so that it seemed to be the prevailing fashion on this island to keep the beard well combed, curled, and oiled. Two or three of the men had something like a bead or bone, suspended to a string, which was fastened round the neck. The largest of their canoes appeared to be about 28 feet long, and made out of a large tree, with a long outrigger. Lat. 1 39 S lon. 151 31 E.

TENDA, a town of Piedmont, capital of a county of the same name, S of the district of Coni, and N of Nice, affording good pasturage and timber. TENERIFF, formerly called NIVARIA, one of the Canary Islands, the second in dignity, but the first in point of extent, wealth, and fertility. It lies to the W of the Grand Canary, and is about 45 m. in length, and 20 in breadth. Its form is triangular, extending itself into 3 capes, the nearest about 80 leagues or more from the coast of Africa. It abounds in wine, different sorts of fruits, cattle, and game. One part of this island is surrounded by inaccessible mountains, and there is one in particular called the Pike of Teneriff, which, according to Sir Thomas Herbert, may be seen 120 m. off, in a clear day. Dr. Heberden estimates the height at 15,396 feet (nearly 3m.) above the level of the sea. The vertex, which appears sharp, and the exact resemblance to a cone, is flat for the extent of an acre of ground, in the centre of which is a dreadful volcano. Though it frequently breaks out into flames, and smoke constantly issues from it, there has been no eruption from this mountain since the year 1704, when the port of Garrachica was destroyed, and the harbour filled up by the lava. Ten parts of this island consist of rocks and woody and inaccessible mountains and vineyards, and yet, from the small portion of arable ground remaining, 250,000 hanackes of wheat, besides immense quantities of rye and barley, are annually produced here. Nothing can be more delicately rich than the soil, if the Spaniards would take the trouble to cultivate it properly, communicating to grains, fruits, roots, &c. a peculiar elegance of flavour, unknown in other countries. Wine is the only considerable article of foreign commerce, about 40,000 pipes being annually made here. There are two sorts of it, the vidonia and malvesia, or malmsey. The first is extracted from a long grape, and is a dull, heavy wine, greatly inferior to the other, which is drawn from a large, round grape, in such quantities as to be exported to all the corners of the world. The Spanish custom of dressing in black continues amongst the inhab. The laborious works in this island are chiefly performed by mules, horses being scarce. Oxen are also much employed here, to drag their casks along upon pieces of wood. Hawks and parrots are natives of the island, as also swallows, sea-gulls, partridges, black-birds, and large flocks of canary-birds. There are also lizards, locusts, and three or four sorts of dragon-flies. The air and climate are remarkably healthful, and particularly adapted to afford relief in phthisical complaints. Lat. of the Peak, 28 18 N lon. 17 W.

There are also a great number of birds of paradise. It is a mountainous country, and there are a great number of woods, which furnish great plenty of game. But it is of the greatest note for being a spice-island, which produces cloves, and is in the possession of the Dutch. The inhab. are Mahometans, and very indolent. It lies a little to the W of Gilolo, and 100 m. E of Celebes. Lat. 0 15 N lon. 127 4 E.

Tere, Yorks. W of Skipton.

TERNEUSE, a town of Flanders, 10 m. from Sas-van-Ghent, and 12 SE of Flushing.

TERNI, an ancient and considerable town of Spoleto, in Italy. The cathedral is a magnificent structure, and the place contains about 12,000 inhab.; but it was much more considerable formerly than it is now. The famous cataract of the river Velino is about 1 m. from this place, which is seated in an island formed by the river Nera, on which account it was anciently called Interamna. It is 15 m. S by W of Spoleto, and 40 N of Rome.

TERNOVA, an ancient, but thinly inhabited town of Bulgaria (formerly the residence of the despots, or princes, and now of an ecclesiastic, who is called the archbishop of Bulgaria), 95 m. E of Sophia, and 200 NW of Constantinople. Also a large and commercial town of Thessaly, situated on the Peneus, 5 m. WNW of Larissa.

TERRACINA, an ancient town of Italy, in the Campagna-di-Roma. It is greatly decayed on account of its unwholesome air. It was formerly called Anxur, was the capital of the warlike Volsci, and the principal church was originally a temple of Jupiter. It is seated near the sea, on the side of a mountain, 46 m. SE of Rome.

TERRA DEL FUEGO. See TIERRA DEL FUEGO.

TERRA FIRMA, NEW CASTILE, or CASTILE DEL ORO, a vast extent of country in S. America, extending almost from the equator to 12 18 N lat. and from 16 20 to 80 W lon. It is divided into the following large districts, which are subdivided into smaller jurisdictions. Terra Firma Proper, or Darien; Carthagena, St. Martha, Rio de la Hacha, Venezuela, Caraccas, New Granada, Paria, Popayan, Quito, and Comana. It is subject to Spain.

TET, a river of France, which rises in the Pyrenees, a little above Mount Louis, and runs into the Mediterranean, about 7 m. E of Perpignan.

TETBURY, a populous town of Gloucesters. with a considerable trade, and a manufactory of woollen cloth. The market on Wednesday is large for corn, cattle, cheese, malt, yarn, wool, and provisions. It is situated near the source of the river Avon, in a healthy air, on a rising ground, 25 m. ENE of Bristol, and 99 W of London.

Tetcote, Devons. near Launceston, where the Claw joins the Tamar. Tetherington, Gloucesters. SE of Thornbury. Tetherton, E. and W. Wilts. NE of Chippenham, and NW of Calne.

TETICATO, a large lake of Peru, in Calloa, above 200 m. in circumf.

Tetsworth, Oxfords. between Thame and Easington.

Tettenhall, Clericorum, and Regis, Staffords. NW of Wolverhampton. Tetton, Chesh. near Sandbach and Middlewich.

TETUAN, a town of Fez in Africa. The houses have no windows toward the streets, except little holes to look out at; for the windows are on the inside toward the courtyard, which is surrounded by galleries; and in the middle is generally a fountain. They are two stories high, flat at the top, and the streets very narrow. The dress of both sexes is much alike; but nothing of the women is to be seen in the streets, except their eyes and naked legs, which are never covered in this country. When they are at home, they visit each other from the tops of their houses. They wear bracelets on their arms and legs, and large ear-rings in their ears. The shops in the city are very small, being without-doors; and the owner, when he has opened the shutters, jumps in, and sits cross-legged on a counter, the goods being disposed in drawers round about him, and all the customers stand in the street. It is seated on the river Cus, 3 m. from the sea, and has a castle which commands the town. Ships from Gibraltar come to victual here, when the wind is in the W, and does not permit them to make Tangiers. It is 108 m. N by W of Fez, and 28 SE of Tangiers.

Tetworth, Huntingdons. W of Gransden.

TEVERONE, a river of Italy, which rises in the Apennines, 50 m. above Tivoli, glides through a plain till it comes near that town, when it is confined, for a short space, between two hills, covered with groves. These were supposed to be the residence of the Sibyl Albunea, to whom a temple here was dedicated. The river moving with augmented rapidity, as its channel is confined, at last rushes at once over a lofty precipice; the noise of its fall resounds through the hills and groves of Tivoli; a liquid cloud arises from the foaming water, which afterwards divides into numberless small cascades, waters several orchards, and, having gained the plain, flows quietly on till it loses itself in the Tyber. The elegant form of the Sibyl's Temple indicates its having been built when the arts were in the highest state of perfection at Rome. It is seated on a point of the mountain, fronting the grand cascade.

Teversall, Nottinghams. near Mansfield. Teversham, Cambridges. near Fen-Ditton.

TEVIOT, a river which rises in the mountains in the SW of Roxburghshire, and passing almost through the centre of that county, meanders beautifully through wide and fertile valleys, and unites with the Tweed, near Kelso.

TEVIOTDALE. See ROXBURGHSHIRE.

TEURART, an ancient town of Fez.

TEUZAR, an ancient and considerable town of Africa, in Biledulgerid, divided into two parts by a river. It carries on a good trade, and is seated in a country abounding in dates.

Tew-Dunce, Oxfords. N of Steeple-Aston. Tew, Great and Little, Oxfords. E of Chapel-on-the-Heath. Tewing, Hertfords. NW of Hertingfordbury, on the river Maran, or Minerum.

TEWKESBURY, a large, beautiful, and populous town of Gloucesters. containing 960 houses, and 4820 inhab. has been long celebrated for its mustard; but, at present, its principal manufacture is that of cotton stockings. It is pleasantly seated at the confluence of the Severn and Avon, 10 m. N of Gloucester, and 102 WNW of London.

Tewkshill, Shrops. NE of N. Clebury.

TEXEL, a town of the United Provinces in N. Holland, at the mouth of the Zuyder-Zee, with a good harbour. It is seated on an island which is separated from the continent of Holland, by a narrow channel, through which most of the ships pass that are bound to Amsterdam. Lat. 53 8 N lon. 4 51 E.

Tey, They, or Teise, a river in Sussex and Kent, running into the Beala. Tey, Great and Little, Essex, W and NW of Tey-Marks. Tey-Marks, Essex, between Coggeshall and Colchester.

TEYN, a town of Bohemia, 51 m. SW of Prague.

Teynton, Oxfords. NW of Burford. Teynton-Drew, Devons. NE of Chegford, where is a considerable Druidical temple.

TEZA, an ancient, and once populous, but now decayed, town of Fez capital of the province of Cuzi. It is still, however, the residence of a governor and garrison, and the Jews carry on some trade here. There is a very large mosque here, about ½ m. in circumf. It is seated on a small river, 60 m. NNE of Fez, and 72 SE of Tetuan.

TEZUCO, a town of Mexico, (capital of a government or district) containing about 400 inhab. Spaniards and Indians. It is seated on the Lake of Mexico, 15 m. from the city of that name.

Thackerington, Northumberl. SW of Kirk-Whelpington. Thafriston, Northumberl. in Eland manor. Thakam, Sussex, NW of Stening. Thakthwaite, Cumberl. in the parish of Castle Sowerby.

THAME, or TAME, a town of Oxfords. which gives name to the hundred. It is situated on the river Thame (which is navigable here by barges), 13 m. E of Oxford, and 45 NW of London. A market well furnished with live cattle, and all necessaries, on Tuesd.

THAMES, the finest river in Great Britain, which takes its source, according to Dr. Campbell, from 4 rivulets, which rise in the Cotswold Hills, and connecting together form one stream, near Lechlade, which there becomes navigable for barges. But the chief spring, or what is called Thames-Head, rises about 4 m. SW from Cirencester, in Gloucesters. It has been erroneously said, that its name is Isis, till it arrives at Dorchester, 15 m. below Oxford, which, being joined by the Thame, or Tame, it assumes the name of the Thames, which, it has been observed, is formed from a combination of the words Thame and Isis. What was the origin of this vulgar error cannot now be traced, but poetical fiction has perpetuated it. "It plainly appears," says Camden, "that the river was always called Thames, or Tems, before it came near the Thame; and in several ancient charters granted to the abbey of Malmesbury, as well as that of Ensham, and in the old deeds, relating to Cricklade, it is never considered under any other name than that of Thames." He likewise says, that it occurs no where under the name of Isis. All the historians, who mention the incursions of Ethelwold into Wilts. in the year 905, or of Canute, in 1016, concur likewise in the same opinion, by declaring that they passed over the Thames at Cricklade, in Wilts. It is not probable, moreover, that Thames-Head, an appellation by which the source has usually been distinguished, should give rise to a river of the name of Isis; which river, after having run half its course, should reassume the name of Thames, the appellation of its parent spring. About a m. below the source of the river, is the first corn-mill, which is called Kemble-Mill. Here the river may properly be said to form a constant current; which, though not more than 9 feet wide in the summer, yet, in the winter, becomes such a torrent, as to overflow the meadows for many m. round. But, in the summer, the Thames-Head is so dry, as to appear nothing but a large dell, interspersed with stones and weeds. From Somerford, the stream winds to Cricklade, where it unites with many other rivulets. Approaching Kemsford, it again enters its native county, dividing it from Berks. at Inglesham. It widens considerably in its way to Lechlade; and being there joined by the Lech and Coln, at the distance of 138 m. from London, it becomes navigable for vessels of 90 tons. At Ensham, in its course NE to Oxford, is the first bridge of stone; a handsome one of three arches. Passing by the ruins of Godstow nunnery, the river reaches Oxford, in whose academic groves, its poetical name of Isis has been so often invoked. Being there joined by the Charwell, it proceeds SE to Abingdon, and thence to Dorchester, where it receives the Tame. Continuing its course SE by Wallingford to Reading, and forming a boundary to the counties of Berks, Bucks, Surry, Middlesex, Essex, and Kent, it washes the towns of Henley, Marlow, Maidenhead, Windsor, Eton, Egham, Staines, Laleham, Chertsey, Weybridge, Shepperton, Walton, Sunbury, E. and W. Moulsey, Hampton, Thames-Ditton, Kingston, Teddington, Twickenham, Richmond, Isleworth, Brentford, Kew, Mortlake, Barnes, Chiswick, Hammersmith, Putney, Fulham, Wandsworth, Battersea, Chelsea, and Lambeth. Then, on the N bank of the river, are Westminster and London; and, on the opposite side, Southwark; forming, together, one continued city, extending to Limehouse and Deptford; and hence the river proceeds to Greenwich, Erith, Greenhithe, Gray's-Thurrock, Gravesend, and Leigh, into the ocean. It receives, in its course from Dorchester, the rivers Kennet, Loddon, Coln, Wey, Mole, Wandle, Lea, Roding, Darent, and Medway. Though the Thames is said to be navigable 138 m. above bridge, yet there are so many flats, that in summer, the navigation westward would be entirely stopped, when the springs are low, were it not for a number of locks. But these are attended with considerable expence; for a barge from Lechlade to London pays for passing through them, 13l. 15s. 6d. and from Oxford to London 12l. 18s. This charge, however, is in summer only, when the water is low; and there is no lock from London Bridge to Batter's Lock; that is, for 51 m. above bridge. The plan of new cuts has been adopted, in some places, to shorten and facilitate the navigation. There is one near Lechlade, which runs nearly parallel to the old river, and contiguous to St. John's Bridge; and there is another, a m. from Abingdon, which has rendered the old stream, towards Culham Bridge, useless. But a much more important undertaking has lately been accomplished, namely, the junction of this river with the Severn. A canal had been made, by virtue of an act of parliament, in 1730, from the Severn to Wall-Bridge, near Stroud. A new canal now ascends by Stroud, through the Vale of Chalford, to the height of 343 feet, by means of 28 locks, and thence to the entrance of a tunnel near Sapperton, a distance of near 8 m. This canal is 42 feet in width at top, and 30 at the bottom. The tunnel (which is extended under Sapperton Hill and Haley Wood, making a distance of 2 m. and 3 furlongs) is near 15 feet in width, and can navigate barges of 70 tons. The canal, descending hence 134 feet, by 14 locks, joins the Thames at Lechlade, a distance of about 20 m. In the course of this undertaking, the canal from the Severn, at Froomlade, to Ingleshan, where it joins the Thames, is a distance of more than 30 m. The expence of it exceeded the sum of 200,000l. of which 3000l. is said to have been expended in gunpowder alone, used for the blowing up of the rock. This new canal was completed in 1789, in less than seven years from its commencement. Several canals are made, opening a communication between this river and other parts of the kingdom; from London to Hertford and Biggleswade; from Brentford, by Uxbridge, Rickmansworth, &c. to join the Oxford canal at Braunston; from Weybridge, by Guildford, Godalmin, Petersfield, &c. to the sea, between Gosport and Southampton; to Basingstoke, and from thence to Southampton-Water; by the Kennet, to Hungerford, from Abingdon to Lechlade; from Oxford to Coventry; from Lechlade to Stratford-upon-Avon; and from Lechlade to the Severn, below Gloucester. The tide flows up the Thames as high as Richmond, which, following the winding of the river, is 70 m. from the ocean; a greater distance than the tide is carried by any other river in Europe. The water is esteemed extremely wholesome, and fit for use in very long voyages, in which it will work itself perfectly fine.

THAMES, a river of the NE coast of New Zealand, in the S. Pacific Ocean.

THAMES, a river of N. America, which runs into Lake St. Clair, in lat. 42 45 N lon. 82 10 W.

THAMES, a river of Connecticut. It is composed of two principal branches, the Shetucket on the E, and the Norwich, or Little River, on the W. This last, about a m. before its junction with the Shetucket river at Norwich, has a remarkably romantic cataract. From Norwich, the Thames is navigable 12 m. to Long Island, which it enters about 4 m. below New London.

Thames-Ditton, Surry, between Kingston and Esher.

THAMSBRUCK, a town of Thuringia, Saxony, 16 m. WNW of Erfurt.

Thandiston, alias Francion, Suffolk.

THANET, an island of Kent, formed by the two branches of the Stour, which cut off the NE angle from the rest of the county. Its extent is about 9 m. from E to W, and 8 from N to S. The soil is fertile, producing much barley and other grain, of which above 20,000 quarters are sent annually to London, besides what is sold to other places, and also madder. The S and W parts contain rich tracts of marsh land. The husbandry of this isle, and of E. Kent in general, has long been famous. The alga marina, or sea-weed (what they call sea-ore), is their chief manure. This they also dry on the shore and burn, in order to make kelp of it. It contains the sea-ports of Margate and Ramsgate, and 8 other parishes.

Thanington, Kent, by the Stour, a m. SW of Canterbury.

THANNHAUSEN, a town of Swabia, capital of a lordship of the same name, situated on the river Mindel, 22 m. E of Ulm.

Tharleby, Lincolns. S of Bourn.

Tharston, Norf. SE of Windham.

THASOS, an island of the Archipelago, anciently called ÆRIA, or ÆTHRIA, and famous, even to a proverb, for its rich gold mines. It is about 12 m. in length, and 8 in breadth, produces very delicate wines and fruits, and abounds in all necessaries, and has quarries of very fine marble. It is situated at the entrance of the Gulf of Contessa, with a town of the same name, and a harbour, frequented by merchants, in lat. 40 59 N and lon. 24 32 E.

Thatcham, Berks. 2 m. NE of Newbury.

THAXTED, a town of Essex, chiefly noted for its regular, stately church, which was built by John of Gaunt, duke of Lancaster; Lionel, duke of Clarence; Lady Clare, and William de Burgh; its chancel, by Edward III. and its tower and lofty spire, by Edmund, last earl of March. It is seated on the Chelmer, near its source, 20 m. NW of Chelmsford, and 43 NE of London. Market on Frid.

Theale, Berks, on the Kennet, 4 m. W of Reading.

THEBAID, or SAID, a large country of Upper Egypt, bordering on Nubia. It is the least fertile, and the thinnest of people of any province in Egypt, being full of deserts, and celebrated formerly for the retreat of a great number of Christians, who lived here in a solitary manner. It is now chiefly inhabited by Arabs.

Thebarton, Suf. SW of Dunwich.

THEBES, the ancient name of a city of Upper Egypt, now called Luxor. It was formerly celebrated for having 100 gates; and there are now a great many magnificent remains of the ancient city.

Therverton, Devons. NE of Crediton. Therverton, or Thaverton, Devons. N of Exeter, and on the same river, is a great thoroughfare.

THESSALY. See JANNA.

THETFORD, a borough town in Norfolk, containing several streets and 513 well-built houses, but the streets are not paved. It was formerly the metropolis of the kingdom of the East Angles; and in the 12th century, the see of a bishop, and a place of a great note, when it had 20 churches, of which only two now remain, 5 markets, 24 streets, besides lanes, 6 hospitals, and 8 monasteries, several ruins of which are yet visible. The town then lay wholly on the Suffolk side of the river, which now contains but a few houses. It had formerly also a mint, which has produced a great number of Anglo-Saxon and English coins, from the time of Athelstan. The chief magistrate found here at the Norman conquest, was styled a consul; from whence some suppose it to have been a Roman town. The lent assizes for the county are held in its Guildhall, a fine old building of black flint. The chief manufacture is in wool-combing, woollen cloth, and paper. It is situated in a pleasant, open country, on two navigable rivers, the Thet and Lesser Ouse, (the former of which runs through the town, and divides Suff. from Norf. and the latter was rendered navigable to Lynn, by an act of parliament, in the reign of Charles II.) 29 m. SW of Norwich, 30 m. SSE of King's Lynn, and 80 NNE of London. Market on Satur.

Thetford, Cambridges. SE of Ely. Theydon Bois, Garnon, and Mont, Essex, three villages in Epping Forest, W of the Rodings.

THIANCOURT, a town in the depart. of the Meurthe, 15 m. SW of Metz.

THIBERVILLE, a town in the depart. of the Eure, 9 m. E of Lisieux.

THIBET, or GREAT THIBET, a large country of Asia, considered by most geographers as part of Tartary, and extending from the source of the Indus to the borders of China, and from Hindostan to the deserts of Cobio. The length from E. to W. is about 1500 m. and the breadth unequal and not known. This country is one of the highest in Asia; it being a part of that elevated tract which gives rise not only to the rivers of India and China, but also to those of Siberia and Tartary. It is divided into three parts, Upper, Middle, and Lower Thibet. The Upper lies toward the sources of the Ganges and Burrampooter; the middle is that in which Lassa, the capital, is situated; and the lower, that which borders on China. Little Thibet is situated between Upper Thibet and Cashgur, and is rather a dependency of the latter than of Great Thibet. Considering the exceedingly rough and steril state of the country of Thibet, and the severity of its climate, from its wonderful elevation; it is astonishing, Major Rennel observes, to find its inhab. in a high state of civilization; their houses lofty and built of stone; and the useful manufactures in some degree of improvement. All these advantages they probably owe to their vicinity to the Chinese. The Thibetians are governed by the grand lama, or delai lama, who is not only submitted to by them, but is also the sovereign pontiff of numberless tribes of Tartars, in Chinese and Independent Tartary. Princes, as well as the meanest of the people, are assiduous in paying their court to the great lama, and submit to the same debasing, servile ceremonies. He never returns any salute; never pulls off his hat; nor ever stirs from his seat; (a large and magnificent cushion, placed on a kind of altar, on which he sits cross-legged) he only lays his hands upon the heads of his superstitious adorers, who thereby fancy they obtain the remission of all their sins. They are persuaded that Fo lives in him; that he knows, sees, and understands all things, without asking any questions, or receiving any information; and that if at any time he does so, it is merely for form's sake, and in order to leave the infidel and ill-designing no room to complain. In a word, they believe him to be immortal, and endowed with all knowledge and virtue. Every year they come from different parts to worship, and make rich offerings at his shrine. Even the emperor of China, who is of a Tartar race, does not fail to acknowledge the lama, in his religious capacity, although, as a temporal sovereign, the lama himself is, in some respects, tributary to that emperor. The opinion of the most orthodox Thibetians is, that when the grand lama seems to die, either of old age or infirmity, his soul, in reality, only quits a crazy habitation, to look for another younger or better; and it is discovered again in the body of some child, by certain tokens known only to the lamas or priests, in which order he always appears. In 1774, the grand lama was an infant, who had been discovered some time before by the tayoshoo lama, who, in authority and sanctity of character, is next to the grand lama, and, during his minority, acts as chief. These lamas, who form the most numerous, as well as the most powerful body in the state, appear to have the priesthood entirely in their hands; and moreover they fill up many monastic orders, which are held in great veneration among them. The residence of the grand lama is at Pateli, or Putala, a vast palace, on a mountain, near the banks of the Burrampooter, about 7 m. from Lassa. Besides the great lama, who is the head of their religion, and sovereign of Thibet, there are other princes in the country, who have cities and many subjects under them; these wear the lama habit, and are called officers of the great lama, though they are only subject to him as far as they themselves please. In many places are large pagodas, in which the lamas of distinction reside. The religion of Thibet has, in some respects, a great affinity to that of the Indian Bramins. The Thibetians have a great veneration for the cow, and highly respect also the waters of the Ganges, the source of which they believe to be in heaven. The Sunniasses, or Indian pilgrims, often visit Thibet as a holy place; and the lama always maintains a body of 2 or 300 of them in his pay. The temporal government of Thibet, however, has not been always possessed by the great lama. At the beginning of the last century, Thibet was ruled by a king, and the territories subject to the great lama were not very large. The fort of Dellamacolla, which commands the principal pass through the Bootan Mountains, being taken by storm by captain Jones, in 1773; the fame of this exploit induced the Thibetians to send an embassy to the Bengal government, and in 1774, the English East India Company made a treaty with the lama.

Thirston, E. and W. Northumberl. near the river Coquet, SW of Warkworth.

Thirwall-Castle, Northumberl. NE of Brampton, on the Picts' Wall, where it crosses the Tippil, near the Nothing, on the borders of Cumberl. Here the Scots made gaps in the wall to force their passage into England, from which gaps, this part of it was called Thirlwall; the Saxon signifying the same as the words murus perforatus, in Latin. The castle which stands close by the N side of the wall, is about 20 yards long and 12 broad, with walls 9 feet thick; it has been curiously vaulted underneath, and on the top are 6 little turrets. The floor of one of the apartments was lately cleared, and discovered to be of singular construction, consisting of 3 tiers of flags, laid upon sand. The only light admitted, is through apertures as narrow as those in the stair-case of ancient castles. The whole structure, indeed, carries the appearance of a horrid, gloomy dungeon.

Thisselton, Rutland, in the road from York to Stamford. Thistendale, Yorks. SW of York-Woulds. Thistleton, Lancas. NW of Kirkham. Thistleworth; see Isleworth.

THIVA, or STIBES, anciently THEBES, an ancient and celebrated town of Greece, in Livadia, with a bishop's see. It was formerly very large, and yet is 3 m. in circumf. but full of ruins. The present walls appear very ancient, and have square towers at convenient distances, built of hewn stone, with great regularity and exactness. The houses are higher, and better built, than is usual in other towns of Greece. It contains 4 or 5000 inhab. who are half Turks and half Christians. It is now famous for a fine sort of white clay, of which they make bowls for pipes after the Turkish fashion. They are never burnt, but dry naturally, and become as hard as a stone. Here are two mosques, and several Greek churches. The air of the country about Thebes is thick and foggy, whence the inhab. of ancient Bœotia were accounted dull and phlegmatic. It is situated on a rising ground, between two small rivers, supposed to be the Ismenus and Dirce of the ancients, 28 m. WNW of Athens, and 290 SW of Constantinople.

Thoby, Essex, in Mountnaising parish.

THOISSEY, a town in the depart. of Aisne, with a handsome college. It is situated in a fertile country, near the rivers Saone and Chalerone, 20 m. W of Bourg, and 200 SE of Paris.

Tholthorp, Rutlands. NW of Stamford.

THOMAS, ST. an island of Africa, lying under the equator in 8 deg. E lon. It was discovered in 1460, and belongs to the Portuguese. It is almost round, and is about 30 m. in circumf. The climate is hot, moist, and unwholesome for Europeans, although the natural inhab. often complete a full century. The soil is well watered with fresh rivers and rivulets, and amazingly fertile, producing the fruits of every denomination of the warm climates, in the utmost perfection, with little labour or expense. It abounds also with a variety of animals, tame and wild. The rivers, as well as the surrounding sea, are stocked with an incredible variety of fish, from the whale down to the smallest fish that swims. It consists chiefly of hills intermixed with valleys, which in their rainy, or rather foggy seasons, are constantly filled with a thick fœtid, sultry fog, intolerable to Europeans. However, it agrees perfectly well with the cattle, which are larger and finer here than on the Gold Coast of Guinea. In a word, the island might equal any spot on the globe, did the temperature correspond with the abundance of its trees, plants, shrubs, fruits, and animals, as well as the diversity and beauty of the landscapes.

Thomas, St. Cornw. near Launceston. Thomas, St. Devons. SW of Exeter. Thomas, St. Herts, 2 m. from Ickland. Thomas, St. neat Stafford.

THOMAS. See TOMAR.

THOMAS, ST. a stately town or city of Hindostan, on the coast of Coromandel, erected by the Portuguese, partly on the ruins, and partly in the neighbourhood of Meliapour, or Mailabour, once a powerful city. It was formerly, and is still inhabited by weavers and dyers, and is noted for making the best coloured stuffs in India. The excellence of the dye is attributed to the peculiar quality of the water, which arises out of springs, in white, sandy ground, without any intermixture of clay. St. Thomas the Apostle was buried, it is said, here; the Portuguese pretend to show his sepulchre on the top of a neighbouring mountain, over which they have built a chapel that serves as a landmark to vessels at sea. The city had 2 gates, and was naturally very strong; yet the Moors took it after a long siege, and are still in possession. The road is very safe from April to September, when the S and SE winds blow, but not in the other season. It is about 3 m. S of Madras.

THOMAS, ST. an island of the W. Indies, the principal of the Virgin Islands, about 18 m. in circumf. It abounds with millet, manioc, potatoes, and most sorts of fruits and herbage, especially sugar and tobacco. Here are excellent kids, and a great variety of wild fowl, but from the number of people, and great plenty of money here, provisions are usually dear. Here is a safe and commodious harbour, with two natural mounds upon it, forming batteries for the defence of its entrance. Nearly in the centre of the harbour is a small fort, without ditch or outworks. About 50 or 60 paces W of it the town begins, which consists chiefly of one street, with the factory at the end, a large building, with convenient warehouses for the stowage of goods and the reception of slaves, in which article they trade with the Spaniards. On the right side of this factory is the Brandenburgh quarter, as it is called, consisting of two little streets, full of French refugees from Europe and the other islands, under the protection of the Danes. Most of the houses are of brick, being built and tiled in the Dutch fashion, yet but of one story, on account of the foundation, where, before they dig to the depth of 3 feet, they meet with water and quicksands. The trade of this island, particularly in time of peace, is very considerable, it being the staple for such traffic as the French, English, Dutch, and Spaniards dare not carry on publicly in their own islands; and in war the privateers commonly bring their prizes hither for sale. In 1688, the Danish factory here was attacked and plundered by the French buccaneers. It is now in the possession of the English. Lat. 18 22 N lon. 64 50 W.

THOMAS, ST. a town of Cumana, in S.

THULE, SOUTHERN, a part of Sandwich Land, in the S. Atlantic Ocean, discovered by Capt. Cook, in 1775. It is high and mountainous, and was entirely covered with snow in the beginning of February, which answers to August in the northern hemisphere. It lies in lat. 59 54 S lon. 27 40 W, which being the most southerly land yet discovered, gave occasion for its name.

THUN, a pretty large town of Bern, in Switzerland, with a castle, where the avoyer resides. This is the place where they embark on the river Aar for Bern. It contains about 1200 inhab. who are chiefly employed in spinning and carding silk for the manufactures at Basle, and is seated at the NW extremity of the lake of the same name, partly in a small island and partly on a hill, 20 m. SE of Bern.

THUN, a lake in Bern, Switzerland, about 12 m. long, and 2½ broad. To judge by the steepness of the lofty mountains by which it is bounded, it must be very deep. The borders are richly variegated, and present several fine points of view, greatly heightened by many ragged rocks rising boldly from the edge of the water. It abounds with different kinds of fish, and the river Aar passes through it.

THUNDER BAY, a bay about 9 m. broad, at the NW corner of Lake Huron in N. America; so called from the frequent thunder that is heard there.

THURGAU, a very ancient landgraviate of Switzerland, which lies along the river Thur, bounded on the E by the Lake of Constance, on the N by Swabia and the same lake, on the S by St. Gall, and on the W by the cantons of Zurich and Schaffhausen. It is the largest balliwick in Switzerland, as well as the most pleasant. The country is extremely populous and well cultivated, containing 6 towns, with several handsome burghs, a great number of chateaux, and more than 170 villages. About one-third of the inhab. are catholics, subject in ecclesiastical affairs, to the bishop of Constance. The territorial sovereignty belongs to the eight ancient cantons of Zurich, Bern, Lucerne, Schweitz, Underwalden, Lug, and Glaris, who send a bailiff here alternately; and since the year 1449, the cantons of Freyburg and Soleure have also obtained a seat in its criminal court. Frauenfield is the capital.

Thurgoland, Yorks. SW of Barnesley.

THURINGIA, a circle of Upper Saxony, forming the N part of the landgraviate of the same name. It is about 73 m. in length, and 75 in breadth, containing 60 towns, and 674 villages. It is well watered by several rivers, and exports a great part of its natural productions, which are excellent wheat, fine timber-wood, wines, fennel, anise, saflor, horses, horned cattle, and sheep. The modern Thuringia lies nearly between the rivers Swale and Werra, but the ancient country extended to the Elbe, and comprised a large share of Franconia, Hesse, &c. In the 6th century, it was subjected by the Franks and Saxons, who divided it into N and S. North Thuringia was at length annexed to Eastphalia, or the eastern part of the county of Saxony. Since the 13th century, the margraves of Meissen, who afterwards became electors of Saxony, have been in possession of the landgraviate. In the 11th century it had dukes, counts, &c.

TIBER, a river in Italy, which rises in the Apennine mountains, in the Florentino. It passes into the pope's territory, washes Borgo de St. Sepulchro, Citta-di-Castello, Perugia, Todi, Rome, &c. 10 m. below which last city, it falls into the Mediterranean Sea, at Ostia. Tivere is its modern name.

Tibertbwate, Lancas. N of Fourness-Fells. Tiberton, Herefords. N of the Golden Vale. Tibshelf, Derbys. NE of Alfreton. Tibthorp, Yorks. N of Bainton. Tichburn, Hants, SW of Alresford. Tichfield, a river in Hants, which runs into the English Channel, E of Hamble.

Tickwell, Norf. W of Burnham-Market.

TICKELL, an ancient town in the W. Riding of Yorks. 5 m. S of Doncaster, and 155 N by W of London. It gives name to an honour or distinct liberty of very extensive jurisdiction, and to which many manors owe suit and service. Market on Sat.

Tickencote, Rutlands. 2½ m. from Stamford, within a ¼ m. of the great N. road. It has one of the most ancient Saxon churches in the kingdom, and the arch between the chancel and nave is remarkably so. The E end of it is decaying. Dr. Stukeley styles it the entire oratory of Prince Peada, the founder of the first church at Peterborough abbey. Tickenhall, Derbys. SW of Kegworth. Tickenhall, Worcesters. near Bewdley. Tickham, Yorks. near Sheriff-Hutton. Tickmarsh, Northamptons. NE of Thrapston. Tickham, Somersets. near Clevedon. Tickton, Yorks. NE of Beverley. Tiddenham, Gloucesters. near Chepstow. Tiddington, Warwicks. by Stratford-upon-Avon. Tide, or Tidi, a river in Cornw. which rises near Leskard, and becomes navigable at Tideford. About 2 m. lower, it washes St. Germains, and uniting with the Lynher, they both pass into the Tama, below Saltash. Tiderington, Ches. in Macclesfield Forest. Tid, St. Giles, in the Isle of Ely, Cambridges. Tid, St. Mary's, Lincolns. 7 m. from Holbeach.

TIDESWELL, a town of Derbys. consisting, in general, of 280 meanly built houses, but with a large, handsome church, and a free-school. It is noted for a spring that ebbs and flows at uncertain times, twice or thrice an hour, after great rains; but in dry summers it entirely ceases. This well is reckoned one of the wonders of the Peak. It is about a yard deep, and the same in breadth; the water rises and falls about three quarters of a yard, and gushes from several cavities at once, for the space of five minutes. It is situated on a small, clear stream, which runs through the town 22 m. NW of Derby, 5 m. from Buxton, and 158 NNW of London. Market on Wed.

Tidmarsh, Berks, 5 m. from Theale and the Thames. Tidminton, Worcesters. S of Shipston on Stour.

TIDORE, called TADURA, or DACO, by the natives, an island in the Eastern Indian Ocean, one of the Moluccas, 15 m. SE of Ternate, and W of Gilolo. It is about 30 m. in circumf. produces flax, and abounds in spices, particularly cloves. The air is reckoned more wholesome here than at Ternate, from which island it lies about 15 m. SE, and W of Gilolo. The woods and rocks that surround it, render it a place of defence. The Dutch have several forts on the island, though it has a king of its own, who possesses, likewise, some territory on the island of Gilolo. Lat. 1 6 N l n. 126 0 E.

Tidwell, Devons. in Budley parish. Here is a pool fed by springs that are continually bubbling up, and so warm, that when all the neighbouring springs are frozen, these are not.

TIEL, a town of Dutch Guelderland.

TIEN CHAN, a town of Asia, in Corea.

Tierkelly, in Down, Ulster, 2 m. NE of Rathfryland, where there is a good chalybeate spring.

TIERRA-DEL-ESPIRITU-SANTO, the most western and largest island of the New Hebrides, in the S. Pacific Ocean, about 60 m. in length, and 30 in breadth. It was discovered by Quiros, and visited by Captain Cook, in 1774. The land is exceedingly high and mountainous, and in many places the hills rise directly from the sea. Except the cliffs and beaches, every part is covered with wood, or laid out in plantations. Beside the Bay of St. Philip and St. Jago, on the N side of it, the isles which lie along the S and E coast, form several good bays and harbours. Lat. 16 0 S lon. 166 0 E.

TIERRA-DEL-FUEGO, several islands at the southern extremity of America, separated from the main land by the Straits of Magellan. They take their name from a volcano on the largest of them. They are all very barren and mountainous; but from what Mr. Forster says in his Voyage to the South Sea, the climate does not appear to be, at all times, so rigorous and tempestuous as it is represented in Anson's Voyage. Upon the lower grounds and islands, that were sheltered by the high mountains, he found several sorts of trees and plants, and a variety of birds. Among the trees was Winter's bark-tree, and a species of arbutus, loaded with red fruit of the size of small cherries, which were very well tasted. In some places there is also plenty of celery. Among the birds was a species of duck, of the size of a goose, which ran along the sea with amazing velocity, beating the water with its wings and feet. It had a grey plumage, with a yellow bill and feet, and a few white quill feathers. At the Falkland Islands, it is called a loggerhead-duck. Among the birds are also plenty of geese and falcons. The rocks of some of the islands are covered with large muscle-shells, the fish of which is well-flavoured. The natives of this country are short in their persons, not exceeding 5 feet 6 inches at most; their heads large, their faces broad, their cheek-bones prominent, and their noses flat. They have little brown eyes; their hair is black and lank, hanging about their heads in disorder, and besmeared with train-oil. On the chin they have a few straggling short hairs. Those whom Mr. Forster saw, had no other clothing than a small piece of seal-skin, which hung from their shoulders to the middle of the back, being fastened round the neck with a string: the rest of their body was perfectly naked. Their natural colour seems to be an olive brown, with a kind of gloss, resembling that of copper: but many of them disguise themselves with streaks of red paint, and sometimes, though seldom, with white. Their whole character is a strange compound of stupidity, indifference, and inactivity. Their instruments for fishing are a kind of fish-gigs. They live chiefly on seal's flesh, and like the fat, oily part most. There is no appearance of any subordination among them; and from their indifference and inactivity, they seem rather content than very happy.

Tiffield, Northampton, NE of Towcester.

TIGAON, an island in the Eastern Indian Ocean, near the NW coast of the island of Borneo. Lat. 6 10 N lon. 128 42 E.

TIGENHAGEN, a town of Prussian Pomerania, 12 m. N of Marienburg.

Tigbe, Rutland, W of Market-Overton.

TIGRE, a province in Abyssinia, about 200 m. in length, and 120 in breadth. It lies nearest to the market, that is, Arabia; and as all the merchandise destined to cross the Red Sea must pass through this province, the governor has the choice of all commodities, the strongest male, the most beautiful female, the purest gold, the largest teeth of ivory, &c. wherewith to make his market.

TIGRIS, a river of Asia, which rises in the mountains of Armenia, and passing by Diarbekir, Mosul, and many other cities and towns, unites with the Euphrates, when both together fall into the Persian Gulf below Bassora.

TIGY, a town of France, 12 m. SE of Orleans.

Tikeford, Bucks, near Newport.

TIKIOH, a town of Denmark, in Zealand, 4 m. SW of Helsingoer.

TILBORG, a town of Brabant, 10 m. S of Bois-le-Duc. It is noted for a manufacture of cloth.

Tilbrook, Bedfords. NW of Kimbolton. Tilbury, Essex, near Clare-Hall and the Yealdams. Tilbury, Wilts, near Wardour-Castle. Tilbury, East, Essex, by the Thames, to the E of Tilbury Fort. It is supposed to be the place where the emperor Claudius crossed the Thames, in pursuit of the Britons. In this parish is a field, called Cave Field, in which is a horizontal passage to one of the spacious caverns in the neighbouring parish of Chadwell. Of these Camden has given a sketch in his Britannia; and he describes them as in a chalk cliff, built very artificially of stone, to the height of ten fathoms. Devham measured three of the most considerable of them, and found the depth of one of them to be 50 feet, of another 70 feet, and of a third 80 feet. Their origin is too remote for investigation. Tilbury Fort lies more west, opposite Gravesend. It is a regular fortification, planned by Sir Martin Beckman, chief engineer to Charles II. with bastions, the largest of any in England. It has a double moat, the innermost of which is 180 feet broad, with a counterscarp, covered way, ravelins, and tenailles. On the platform are mounted 106 cannon, from 24 to 46 pounders each, besides smaller ones planted between them; the bastions and curtains are also planted with guns. Here is also a high tower, called the Block House, which is said to have been built in the reign of Queen Elizabeth. On the land side are two redoubts of brick; and here it is able to lay the whole country under water. The foundation of this fort is laid upon piles driven down in two ranges, one above the other, which reach below the channel of the river, and the lowermost being pointed with iron, enters the solid chalk rock, which extends under the Thames to the chalk hills in Kent. Tilbury, W. Essex, on the Thames, N of Tilbury Fort: here the four Roman proconsular ways crossed each other. In 630, this was the see of bishop Ceadda, or St. Chad, who converted the East Saxons. It is situated by the marshes, which are generally stocked with Lincolns. and Leicesters. wethers, which are sent hither in autumn, and feed here till Christmas; and this is what the butchers call right March mutton. In this parish is a celebrated spring of alterative water, discovered in 1727. Tileburst, Berks. W of Reading. Tilesworth, Bedfords. near Chalgrave. Tiley, Dorsets. in Great Mintern parish. Tiley, Dorsets. near Cosmore-Common. Tilford, Surry, SE of Farnham. Tilgate, and its Forest, Sussex, between Crawley and Slaugham.

Till, a river of Northumberl. which runs into the Tweed, about 2 m. NE of Coldstream.

TILLEMONT, or TIRLEMONT, a village of Austrian Brabant, anciently a considerable flourishing city, which made one-fourth quarter of the assembly of the states; but it has suffered greatly by the calamities of war and by fire. It is seated on the river Geet, 9 m. SSE of Louvain.

Tillicoultry, Clackmannan, Scotland, 12 m. from Stirling; here is the Dovan Iron Company.

TILLING, a town of Sweden, 23 m. SE of Upsal.

TIMERYCOTTA, a town and fortress of Golconda, 64 m. SE of Hydrabad.

TIMOAN, an island in the Eastern Indian Ocean, with good anchorage almost all round it. It is inhabited by Malays, from whom ships may obtain wood and water. Lat. 2 58 N lon. 104 35 E.

TIMOLEAGUE, a decayed town of Cork, in Munster, seated on an arm of the sea, which formerly was navigable, but now is choked up with sand.

Timolin, in Kildare, Leinster.

TIMOR. See MOTIR.

TIMOR, an island of Asia, in the Indian Ocean, in the S of the Moluccas, and to the E of the Island of Java; about 120 m. in length, and 37 in breadth. The principal productions are sanders, or sandal wood, wax, and honey, which the Dutch receive in exchange for coarse linens, &c. They have a settlement at Copan, a town and fortress at the W end of the Island, erected originally by the Portuguese, but who were driven out by their implacable enemies the Dutch in the year 1613.

On the whole, the profits arising from this commerce, little more than defray the expences, and the settlement, in all probability, is continued, merely to keep out other nations. Lat. 10 24 S lon. 124 E.

TIMOR LAUT, an island in the Eastern Indian Ocean. Lat. 1 15 S lon. 131 50 E.

TIMOU, a town of Asia, in the country of Thibet, 225 m. ESE of Lassa.

TIMOURKENG, or FORTRESS OF IRON, a town of Thibet, 60 m. WNW of Latat.

TINCO, a town of Spain, 20 m. NW of Oviedo.

Tinedale, orthumberl. a valley, watered by the North Tyne, which separates it from Redesdale on the N. It was made a barony by Henry I. Several battles have been fought here, whereof memorials remain, both British and Pictish.

TINEH, a town of Egypt, 65 m. N of Suez.

TINEHALY, a town of Wicklow in Leinster, 38 m. from Dublin

Tinebinch, or Tinnebinch, in Queen's County, Leinster. Tinbinch, in Carlow, Leinster.

TINEVELLY. See PALAMCOTTA.

TING, a city of the second rank of Pecheli, in China, seated near the river Tam, 107 m. SSW of Peking.

Tinglaw, Yorks. NW of Wakefield. Tingrase, Devons. near Newton Bushel. Tingrave, Bedfords. SW of Ampthill. Tingtweezle, or Tinchtill, Chesh. SE of Micklehurst. Tingwall, a parish of the Shetland Isles: here are the ruins of Scallaway Castle. Tingwick, SW of Buckingham. Tinham, E. and W. Dorsets. SW of Corfe-Castle. Tinhead, Wilts. NE of Westbury.

TINIAN, one of the Marian islands in the Indian Ocean, about 12 m. in length, and 6 in breadth. The soil is everywhere dry and healthy; and, being somewhat sandy, is the less disposed to rank and over luxuriant vegetation. The land rises in gentle slopes from the shore to the middle of the island, intermixed with valleys of an easy descent, and beautifully diversified with woods and meadows. The woods consist of tall and well-spread trees, and the lawns are covered with clean, uniform turf, producing fine trefoil, and a variety of flowers. There are, at least, 10,000 cattle here, that are all milk-white, except their ears, which are brown or black. It abounds with fowls, which are easily caught, and the flesh of both are exceedingly good, beside plenty of large, wild hogs, whose flesh is delicate food. In the woods are prodigious quantities of cocoa nuts, cabbage trees, as also guavoes, limes, sweet and sour oranges, water-melons, and bread-fruit. It grows on all parts of the branches, is more long than round, being covered with a rough rind. It is about 7 or 8 inches long, and is fittest for use when full grown, but not quite ripe. There are also vegetables proper for the scurvy; such as water-melon, dandelion, creeping purslain, mint, scurvy-grass, and sorrel. This island produces also cotton and indigo. There are now no inhab. but there were 30,000 who were taken away by the Spaniards to other islands, and particularly Guam, a little before the arrival of commodore Anson, in 1742. The climate is extremely healthful, according to the author of Anson's Voyage, by whom a very pleasing description is given of the island; but according to commodore Byron, who visited it in 1765, it is unhealthful in the rainy season, and its delightful lawns and meadows were, by that time, covered with trees and underwood so thick, that in endeavouring to force a passage through, they were entangled and cut, as if with whip-cord. There are no streams, but the water of the wells and springs is extremely good. The principal inconvenience arises from the number of mosquitoes, and other kinds of flies; and there are likewise insects called ticks, which fasten upon the limbs and bodies of men, and bury their heads under their skin; with large, black ants, whose bite is very malignant, as well as other venemous reptiles and insects without number. But the worst of all is, that the road is inconvenient, and, in some seasons, there is little security for a ship at anchor. Lat. 15 0 N lon. 146 0 E.

Tinkleton, Dorsets. SW of Bere. Tinkley, Gloucesters. in Nympsfield parish. Tinmore, Staffords. on the Tame, NW of Tamworth.

TINMOUTH, a sea port of Northumberl. seated at the mouth of the river Tyne, 9 m. E of Newcastle, and 286 from London. It has a large and stately castle, seated on a very high rock, inaccessible on the sea side, and well mounted with cannon. In this castle was formerly a monastery, of which many fine arches are yet standing, as is the gateway, tower, and the western gate; also several spacious apartments, one of which, from its large chimney, is termed the kitchen; the eastern part of the church is of most excellent workmanship, with carved ornaments on the walls and windows, all which present, on the whole, a crowded appearance of august ruins strikingly noble and picturesque. There is a bar across the mouth of the river, which is not above seven feet deep at low water. There are dangerous rocks about it, called the Black Middins; but, to guide the ships by night, there are light-houses set up, and maintained by the Trinity-House. Here are several salt-works, but the principal article of trade is coals. The place is now much resorted to as a watering-place, during the summer months.

TINO, anciently TENOS, an island of the Archipelago, about 17 m. long, and 8 broad, to the S of Andros. It is mountainous, but well cultivated; the fruits are excellent, particularly melons, figs, and grapes, of which last the inhab. make good wine: but the principal riches of this island consist in silk, of which it furnishes to the yearly amount of about 16,000 pounds; and the silk stockings and knit gloves for the ladies, which they make of it, are remarkably neat. It was lately subject to the Venetians. Tino, which contains 500 houses, and has a fortress on a rock, and St. Nicolo, are the principal towns; besides which, there are upwards of 50 villages.

TINTA, a town of Canas y Canches, (which is sometimes called Tinta) of Cusco, in S. America.

TINTENIAC, a town in the depart. of Ille and Vilaine, 19 m. S of St. Maloes.

Tintern, in Wexford, Leinster.

Tintern Abbey and Little, Monmouths. on each side of a stream that runs into the Wye, between Monmouth and Chepstow. Tintinhull, Somersets. S of Ilchester.

TINTO, a remarkable river of Seville, in Andalusia, whose waters are of a yellow colour, and petrifying quality. They indurate the sand, and if a stone happens to fall in and rest upon another, they both become, in the space of a year, perfectly united and conglutinated. This river withers all the plants on its banks, as well as the roots of trees, which it tinges with the same colour as its waters. No kind of verdure will come up where it reaches, nor will any fish live in its stream. It kills worms in cattle, when administered as a drink; but, in general, no animals will drink out of this river except goats, whose flesh has, notwithstanding, an exquisite flavour. It empties itself into the Atlantic, about 18 m. lower down, at the town of Huelva, where it is two leagues broad, and admits of large vessels, which may come up the river as high as San Juan del Puerto, 9 m. above Huelva.

Tinwald, Dumfries, Scotland, 3 m. from Dumfries; here is Amisfield House, the seat of the Earl of Wemyss.

Tinwell, Rutland, on the Welland, SW of Stamford.

TINZEDA, a town of Darah, in Africa. Lat. 27 30 N lon. 6 W.

TIOGA, a county of New York, between the Delaware and Pennsylvania.

TIORN, an island in the N. Sea, near the W. coast of Sweden, 25 m. in circumf. and contains 3 parishes.

TIPERA, or TIPRA, a country E of Bengal, and bordering on Meckley; partly independent, and partly subject to Aracan. The inhab. are said to be subject to goitres, or wens in the throat, a disease generally attributed to the water drunk. A town of the same name is laid down in the maps, as situated on the river Tipera, in lat. 24 20 N and lon. 92 E.

TIPING, a town of Corea.

TIPPERARY, a county of Ireland, in the province of Munster, about 52 m. in length, and from 12 to 31 in breadth; bounded on the NE and NW by King's County and Galway; on the E by Queen's County and Kilkenny; on the S by Waterford and a part of Limerick; and on the W by Galway, Clare, and Limerick. The S parts are exceedingly fertile, and well furnished with good buildings; but the N, though to no great extent, is inclinable to be barren, and terminates in a row of 12 mountains, the highest in Ireland, and called Phelemdhe Madina. It contains 147 parishes, 30,700 houses, and about 169,000 inhab. The river Suir runs through all the length of it, from N to S, besides which, there are abundance of small rivers and brooks, on which near 50 boulting mills are counted, a much greater number than is found in any other country. The principal productions are cattle, sheep, butter, and flour. The most considerable places are Clonmell, which is the county town, Cashel, and Carrick.

TIPPERARY, the county town, 9 m. SSW of Cashel.

TIPSA, a town of Algiers, on the borders of Tunis, formerly a very extensive city; it is 85 m. SE of Constantina.

Tipton, Staffords. N of Dudley-Castle, on a little river, where it runs into the Tame.

TIR, a town of Chorasan, in Persia, 21 m. NW of Herat; and a town of Farsistan, in Persia, 60 m. NE of Schiras.

TIRANO, a town of the Grisons, in the Valteline, capital of the Upper Terzero, and residence of the Podesta. From the narrowness of the streets, and number of ruinous houses, its general appearance is desolate. The chief trade is in wine and silk. It is situated on the river Adda, which divides it into two parts, 17 m. SW of Bormio.

Tirawley, in Mayo, Connaught.

TIREE, a small but fertile island of Scotland, one of the Hebrides, lying to the SSW of the Isle of Col, and noted for its marble quarry, and for a handsome breed of little horses. The number of inhab. who annually make about 245 tons of kelp, is estimated at 2416. Here are 24 lakes, great and small, which cover about 600 acres.

TIREH, a town of Turkey, in Natolia, 32 m. SSE of Smyrna.

TIRLEMONT. See TILLEMONT.

TIRNAU, a town of Upper Hungary, containing 9 churches, and as many convents. It is situated on the river Tirnau, 20 m. ENE of Presburg.

TIROL, or UPPER AUSTRIA, a country of Germany, in the circle of Austria, and part of the hereditary dominions of that house. It is about 150 m. in length, and 120 in breadth, and contains 12 towns and 10 villages, which have markets. There are a great many mountains in this country, and yet it produces as much corn and wine as the inhab. have occasion for. They have rich mines of gold, silver, lead, and several species of precious stones. The hunting of the chamois here is somewhat dangerous, on account of the rocks which they take to. In this country are included the country of Tirol Proper, the bishopric of Trent, and the bishopric of Brixen. Here are also profitable salt-pits, and medicinal springs and hot baths. It is bounded on the N by Bavaria, on the E by Carinthia and Saltzburg, on the S by part of the late territory of Venice, and on the W by Swisserland and the country of the Grisons. Inspruck is the capital.

TIROL, a town and citadel of Germany, which gives name to the county, 40 m. N of Trent.

Tirringham, Bucks, on the Ouse, NW of Newport. Tirthington, Northumberl. in Bothall manor. Tiseburst, Sussex, N of Echingham. Tissington, Derbys. N of Ashborn. Tisted, E. and W. Hants, between Alresford and Selborn.

TITAN, or LEVANT, an island of France, in the Mediterranean, the most eastern of the Hieres.

TITCHFIELD, a town of Hants, E of Southampton, containing 560 houses; has a bridge over the river Alre, and a good road below, called Titchfield Bay. On the site of its ancient abbey is Titchfield-House, (or rather some handsome remains of it) erected in the reign of Henry VIII. Here King Charles I. was concealed in his flight from Hampton Court, in 1647; it was then one of the seats of the Earl of Southampton, where his mother lived with a small family. Market on Sat.

Titching, Surry, near Frimley and Horsill. Titcomb, Wilts, N of Chute-Forest.

TITCRUD, a town of Aggerhuys, Norway, 38 m. N of Christiana.

Titbby, Nottinghamshire, S of Bingham. Titherington, Gloucesters. near Thornbury. Titherington, Wilts, E of the Deverels. Titherley, E. and W. Hants, NW of Rumsey. Titherley, Dorsets. near Chardstock.

TITICATA, or CHUCUITO, a very large island in the bishopric of Cusco, and viceroyalty of Buenos Ayres. It lies in a muddy lake of the same name, which is upwards of 60 leagues in circumf. and contains several other smaller islands. Its waters are so nauseous as not to be drunk. This island was the residence of the first ynca, Mancho Capac, and is held sacred by the Indians.

Titley, Herefords. on the Arrow, NW of Pembridge. Titley, Northumberl. in the barony of Wark. Titlington, Northumberl. NW of Alnwick.

TITMANING, a town of Saltzburg, in Bavaria, seated on the river Saltza, 20 m. NNW of Saltzburg. It was almost rendered desolate by the plague in 1310, and was reduced to ashes by lightning in 1571; but it has been since rebuilt.

Titon, Northampt. near Ravensthorp. Titseys, Surry, N of Limpsfield. Titsball, Margaret and Mary, Norf. NE of New Buckenham. Tittenhanger, Herts, 3 m. SE of St. Albans. Tittenley, Chesh. SE of Combermere. Tittensor, Staffords. in the parish of Trentham. Titting, Surry, SE of Guildford. Tittleball, Norf. between Rainham-Hall and Mileham.

TITUL, a town of Hungary.

TIVERTON, an ancient, rich, and populous town of Devons. containing 1260 houses, and 6732 inhab. noted for its great woollen manufactory, particularly of kerseys, the greatest in the county, next to that of Exeter. It was formerly called Twyford's Town, from two fords then over the Ex and Leman, where are now stone bridges. It has suffered greatly by fire, having been almost burnt down several times, particularly in June 1731, when 200 of the best houses were destroyed. It is now built in a more elegant taste; and they have a new church erected by subscription. The four principal streets form a commodious quadrangle, inclosing an area of gardens. The two rivers afford plenty of fish, and not only drive a great number of corn-mills, but also greatly assist in conducting the several branches of the woollen trade. It has a noble large free-school, which maintains eight scholars at Oxford and Cambridge, and is situated on a little hill, or slope, triangularly formed by the courses of the streams above-mentioned, 14 m. N of Exeter, and 161 W by S of London. Markets on Tues. and Sat. also one on Mond. for kerseys.

TIVERTON, a town of the United States, in Rhode Island, situated on the river Taunton, 15 m. SE of Providence.

Tiverton, Chesh. near Beeston Castle. Tivinton, Chesh. W of Congleton. Tiviot, or Cheviot Mountains, on the borders of England and Scotland.

TIUMEN, a town of Siberia, in the government of Tobolskoi, chiefly inhabited by Russians, Mahometans, Tartars, and Bucharians. It is situated at the confluence of the rivers Pischma and Tura, 112 m. WSW of Tobolsk.

TIVIOT. See TEVIOT.

TIVOLI, a town of Italy, in the Campagna di Roma. It is now wretchedly poor: it is, however, of greater antiquity than Rome itself, being the ancient Tibur, or Tobur, which Horace says was founded by a Grecian colony. It was the favourite country residence of the ancient Romans, as Frescati is of the moderns. Near the bottom of the eminence on which Tivoli stands, are the ruins of the vast and magnificent villa built by the Emperor Adrian. Horace is thought to have composed great part of his works in this favourite retreat. In the market-place are two images of oriental granite, representing Isis, an Egyptian deity. Near Tivoli is a celebrated cascade, a Sibyl's temple, a magnificent villa belonging to the duke of Modena, and the remarkable Lake of Solfatara. Tivoli is seated on the river Teverone, 17 m. N by E of Rome, and 10 NE of Frescati.

TIVY, a river of Cardigans. which rises about 5 m. from Tregaron, and runs into the Irish Channel, about 3 m. below Cardigan.

Tixall, with its Heath, 2 m. E of Stafford. Tixondale, in the parish of Wharram Piercey, Yorks. 20 m. from York. Tixover, Rutland, in Ketton parish.

TLASCALA, a town of Mexico, formerly capital of a province of the same name. When the Spaniards first arrived here, it contained, according to Acosta, 300,000 inhab. with a market-place large enough to hold 30,000 buyers and sellers; but Gemelli, who was here in 1698, says, it was then become an ordinary village. It is situated on a river that runs into the Pacific Ocean, 62 m. SE of Mexico, and 140 NW of Vera Cruz. See ANGELOS.

TLASCALA, a province in the government of Mexico, bounded on the N by Guasteca, on the NE and E by the Gulf of Mexico and Guaxaca, on the S by the Pacific Ocean, and on the W by Mexico Proper. Its towns and villages swarm with Indians; and it is by far the most populous country of Spanish America, the inhab. being exempted from all services and duties to the crown, (only paying a handful of maize for each head, as an acknowledgment,) in consequence of having been originally allies to Cortez, in the conquest of Mexico. The climate, soil, and produce, resemble those of Mexico Proper.

TOAHOUTA, one of the smaller Society Isles.

TOBAGO, the most southward of the Caribee Islands in the West Indies, and the most eastward except Barbadoes. It is about 32 m. long from SW to NE, and about 9 broad. The climate is far more temperate than could be expected from its situation so near the equator; nor does it lie in the tract of those dreadful hurricanes which frequently desolate the other islands. It is agreeably diversified with hills and vales, and is equal in richness of soil and produce to any of the islands in these seas. The mould is rich and black; there is abundance of springs upon the island, and its bays and creeks are so disposed as to be very commodious for shipping. Wild hogs, peccaros, resembling swine, armadilloes, guanoes, Indian rabbits, and badgers, are found here. Horses, cows, asses, sheep, deer, goats, and rabbits, were probably introduced by the Dutch, and have multiplied exceedingly. The sea is stored with excellent fish, particularly turtle of every kind, and mullets of a most delicious taste, with other kinds unknown in England. This valuable island was ceded to the English by the treaty of 1763, and to the French by that of 1783; but it was taken by the English, April 13th, 1793. Lat. 11 10 N lon. 60 30 W.

TOBAGO, LITTLE, an island near the NE extremity of Tobago, about 2 m. long, and a m. broad.

Tobbercorry, or Tubbercorr, in Sligo, Connaught. Tober, in Clare, Munster.

TOBERMOREY, in the Isle of Mull, Argyle, much increased of late from the establishment of its fishery.

Tobberbunny, in Dublin, Leinster.

TOBOL, a river of Russia, which rises on the E borders of the government of Upha, and runs into the Irtisch, at Tobolsk.

TOBOLSK, a considerable and populous city of Russia, formerly capital of Siberia, and at present of the government of Tobolskoi. It is divided into the Upper Town, which is properly the city, and stands very high, with a fort built with stone, in which are the governor's court, the governor's house, the archbishop's palace, the exchange, and two of the principal churches, all built of stone, and the Lower Town; both taken together, of a very large circumference; but the houses are all built with wood. It is mostly inhabited by Mahometan Tartars and Bucharians, who drive a great trade on that river. The houses are low: the Tartars that live round this town for several miles are all Mahometans, and their mufti is an Arabian; in general they behave very quietly, and carry on some commerce, but practise no mechanic trades. There are also a great number of Calmuck Tartars, who serve as slaves. All the Chinese caravans pass through this town, and all the furs furnished by Siberia, are brought here, and thence forwarded to Moscow. The Russians commonly send their state-prisoners hither. It is seated at the confluence of the rivers Tobol and Irtisch, 800 m. E of Moscow. Lat. 57 30 N lon. 68 18 E.

TOBOLSKOI, a government of Russia, which comprehends a considerable part of Siberia, extending from lon. 76 30 to 125 30 E, and from lat. 55 to 78 N. Tobolsk is the capital.

TOBOSO, EL, a town of New Castile, 37 m. S of Hueta, or Gueta.

Tobridge, Somersets. W of Taunton.

TOCANTINS, a large river of Brasil, which rises in about lat. 18 S, and runs into the Atlantic, in lat. 1 8. For about the last 100 miles before it falls into the sea, it is called PARA.

TOCAT, a considerable city of Caramania, the residence of a cadi, a waywode, and an aga, who commands a thousand janizaries, and some spahis. The houses are handsomely built, but generally stand on uneven ground. The streets are pretty well paved, which is an uncommon thing in these parts. There are so many streams, that each house has a fountain. It contains about 20,000 Turkish families, 4000 Armenian families, who have 7 churches, and 400 families of Greeks, who have only one. Beside the silk of this country, they manufacture eight or ten loads of that of Persia, and make it into sewing silk. Their chief trade is in copper vessels, such as kettles, drinking cups, lanterns, and candlesticks. They also prepare a great deal of yellow Turkey leather. Tocat is the centre of trade in Natolia, for here the caravans arrive from Diarbekir in 18 days, from Sinop in 6, from Bursa in 20, from Smyrna in 25, &c. Its territory abounds in fruit and excellent wine, and it is 180 m. NW of Erzerum, and 250 E of Constantinople.

TOCAYMA, a town of Terra Firma, in New Grenada, seated on the river Para, in a country abounding in fruit and sugar-canes. Lat. 4 3 N lon. 73 50 W.

Toccotes, Yorks. N of Gisborough. Tocholes, Lancash. S of Blackburn.

TOCKAY, a town of Hungary, in the country of Zimplin, celebrated for its wine, which, for strength and flavour, is preferred to all the wines of Hungary. At some distance from it are large salt-works. It is seated at the confluence of the rivers Bodrog and Teisse, 90 m. NE of Buda.

Tocklington, Gloucesters. in Olveston parish. Tockwith, Yorks. in Bolton parish. Todbere, Dorsets. N of Stourminster. Toddlewood, Northumb. E of Fetherstonhaugh. Toddington, Bedford, 3 m. from Dunstable. Todenham, Glouces. 8 m. N of Stow-on-the-Would, and 6 from Camden. Todgmore Bottom, Gloucesters. in Bisley parish.

TODI, a town of Spoleto, in Italy, 50 m. N of Rome, containing several churches and convents.

Todington, Gloucesters. 5 m. NE of Winchcombe. Tod Law, Northumb. near Elsden, is a mount on which are three stone columns, placed in a triangular form, 12 feet distant from each other. Each column is near 12 feet in diameter. It is supposed to have been the sepulchral monument of some eminent Danes. Todmerden, Lancash. N of Rochdale.

TODS, a town of Virginia.

Todwick, Yorks. 10 m. E of Sheffield.

Toe-Head, a high promontory in Cork, Munster, a little to the W of Castlehaven.

TOELING HOTIEN, a town of Chinese Tartary, 375 m. ENE of Peking.

W of Bourn. Toft, Lincolns. on the Ankem, SW of Market-Raisin. Toft, Lincolns. on the Dun, SW of Burton-upon-Trent. Toft, Norf. SE of Watton. Toft, Warwicks. near Dunchurch. Toft Monachorum, Norf. 8 m. SW of Yarmouth. Toftrees, Norf. near Rainham Hall. Toft, West, Norf. N of Thetford.

TOGDA, or TODGA, a town and district of Africa, in the country of Segilmessa.

TOKAY, a town of Hungary, 98 m. NW of Colosvar, celebrated for the flavour of its wine.

TOKENBURG, or TOGGIENBURG, a county of Switzerland, depending on the abbot of St. Gall, as territorial lord, yet with a reservation of their rights and liberties. It lies among high mountains between Zurich on the E and Appenzel on the W, is fertile in corn and fruits, abounds in numerous herds of cattle, and is divided into the Upper and Lower.

Tokenham, Wilts, SW of Wotton-Basset.

TOLEDO, a considerable city of Spain, in New Castile, of which it was formerly the capital. It is seated on a mountain near the river Tajo, and has an ancient wall built by a Gothic king, flanked with 100 towers. Its situation renders the streets uneven; they are also narrow, but the houses are fine, and there are a great number of superb structures, besides 17 public squares, where the markets are kept. The finest buildings are the royal castle, and the cathedral, which last is the richest and most considerable in Spain. It is seated in the middle of the city, joining to a handsome street, with a fine square before it. Several of the gates are very large, and of bronze. There is also a superb steeple, extremely high, whence there is a very extensive prospect. The Sagrario, or principal chapel, is a real treasury, in which are 15 large cabinets let into the wall, full of prodigious quantities of gold and silver vessels, and other works. There are two mitres of silver, gilt, set all over with pearls and precious stones, with three collars of massy gold, enriched in like manner. There are two bracelets and an imperial crown dedicated to Mary the mother of Jesus, consisting of large diamonds and other jewels. The weight of gold in the crown is 15 pounds. The vessel which contains the consecrated water is of silver, gilt, as high as a man, and so heavy, that it requires, at least, 30 men to carry it; within it is another of pure gold, enriched with jewels. Here are 38 religious houses, with a great number of churches belonging to 27 parishes, and some hospitals. Without the town are the remains of an amphitheatre, and other antiquities. It has an archbishop's see, a famous university, and several manufactories of silk and wool. The secret of hardening sword blades, for which Toledo was formerly so famous, has been lost, but is said to be again recovered. When one of these underwent the operation of tempering, if it was in the least notched by striking with it several violent blows on an iron headpiece, it was rejected. Two centuries ago, the inhab. were about 200,000, but now they scarcely amount to 30,000, and it is said to be rapidly declining. Toledo is situated among rocks, eminences, and precipices, which present the image of sterility, yet several fertile and charming situations are seen about it, impenetrable to the rays of the sun. It is 32 m. SSW of Madrid. Lat. 39 50 N. lon. 3 45 W.

TOLEN, a well-built town in Dutch Zealand, in an island of the same name, partly formed by the E branch of the Scheldt, near Brabant, from which it is separated by a canal, about 10 m. in length, and 4 in breadth. It is 5 m. NW of Bergen-op-Zoom.

TOLENTINO, a town of Ancona, famous for being the depository of the body of St. Nicholas, whose arm is said to bleed afresh when any calamity is to befall Italy.

Tolesbury, Essex, near Malden. Tolesby, Yorks. NW of Stokesley. Tolesbunt, Darcy, Major, or Beckingham and Militis, or Knight's, Essex, near Tolesbury.

TOLOSA, a town of Spain in the province of Biscay, and capital of Guipuscoa. It is not large, but is celebrated for its steel manufactures, particularly of sword blades. It is seated in a pleasant valley, between the rivers Araxis and Oria, 33 m. SW of Fontarabia.

Tolpuddel, Dorsets. S of St. Andrew's Milborn.

TOLU, a sea-port of Terra Firma, in the government of Carthagena. In the environs is found the celebrated balsam to which it gives name, being produced from a tree like a pine. It is 80 m. S of Carthagena.

TOMAR, a town of Portugal, in Estramadura, seated on the river Naboan, 65 m. NNE of Lisbon.

TOMBEC, a town of Austrian Brabant.

TOMBERLAINE, a small island with a town of the same name, on the N coast of France, lying in a small gulf, between Avranches and St. Malo. This island, and that of St. Michael, are every day joined, at low water, to the main land.

TOMBUCTOU, a populous kingdom of Africa, in Negroland, represented as lying to the SE of the desert of Zahara, and W of the empire of Cashnah. The houses in this country are built like bells, with walls of hurdles plaistered with clay, and covered with reeds. They are the same in the city of Tombuctou, except a magnificent mosque of stone, and the royal palace, both of which were built after the design of a Moor, who was banished from Granada in Spain. Here are great numbers of weavers of cotton cloth, and hither the cloth, and other European merchandise, are brought by caravans from Tripoli, Barbary, &c. and exchanged for ivory, slaves, senna, gold-dust, dates, and ostrich feathers. The women have their faces covered, their religion being Mahometanism. They have great plenty of millet, wheat, barley, cattle, milk, and butter. Instead of money, they make use of shells and small bits of gold. The king has a guard of 3000 horsemen, armed with bows and poisoned arrows, besides foot-soldiers, who wear shields and swords. He generally rides on an elephant. In the proceedings of the African Association, this place is mentioned as a luxurious, opulent, and flourishing city, subject to a severe police, and, as such, attracting the merchants of the most distant states of Africa. It is seated near the river Niger, in lat. 19 59 N lon. 0 8 E.

TOME, a small island near the W coast of France.

TOMEBAMBA, a town of Quito, in S. America, where was a temple of the Sun, the walls of which, as the Spaniards affirm, were covered with gold. It is 120 m. S of Quito.

Tombaggard, in Wexford, Leinster.

TOMSK, a town of Russia, in the government of Tobolskoi, and formerly the principal city in Siberia, next to Tobolsk. It contains about 2000 houses, which, as well as the public buildings, are principally built of wood. The inhabitants carry on a considerable trade, this town lying on the great road from Enisei, and all the towns in the E and N parts of Siberia, and all the caravans to and from China pass annually through it, besides a caravan or two from the country of the Calmucks. It is seated on the river Tom, which rises in the government of Kolivan, and runs into the Oby, 32 m. WNW from this town, 168 m. NNE of Kolivan.

TOMSKOIZOV, a town of Russia, 80 m. ESE of Kolivan.

Tomson, Dorsets. near Blandford.

TONDERN, a well-built but not large town of Denmark, in Sleswick, the inhab. of which carry on a considerable trade in corn, cattle, and fine lace. It is capital of a bailiwick of the same name, and is seated on a bay of the German Ocean, 37 m. NW of Sleswick.

TONDOLY, a town on the W coast of the Isle of Celebes.

TONDORF, a town of Germany, 9 m. SE of Erfurth.

TONGATABOO. See AMSTERDAM.

Tonge, Kent, 1¼ m. E of Milton; has the ruins of a castle, said to have been built in 450, by Hengist, the Saxon general, pursuant to a grant from Vortigern, of as much ground to build a seat or castle on, as he could enclose with an ox's hide, which he therefore cut into very small thongs. Several Saxon antiquities have been dug up within the walls. On the moat, a corn-mill has been erected, upwards of 200 years. Tonge, Leicesters. near Stanton-Harold. Tonge, Yorks. SE of Bradford. Tonge Castle, Shrops. 3 m. from Shiffnal. The parish church near it, is a much admired piece of antiquity; it has one of the largest bells in England, and contains many rich and elegant monuments. Tongham, Surry, NW of Puttenham. Tongley Hill, Shrops. near Clun; on it is a Roman encampment, called Bury-Ditches.

TONGEREN, or TONGRES, a town of Liege, (anciently very considerable) seated on the Jeckar, 12 m. SW of Maestricht.

TONGLE, Sutherland, on the N extremity, 25 m. from Thurso.

TONGUSIANS, a people of the eastern part of Siberia, near the Sea of Okotsk, subject to the Russians. They chiefly subsist by grazing and hunting of sables, the skins of which are very black.

TONNINGEN, a sea-port town of Denmark, in Sleswick, capital of a territory of the same name. Its once noble castle was dismantled in 1734, by the king's orders, and the fortifications were demolished by the Danes and their allies, (when taken from the Swedes) in 1713 and 1714. It is seated on a peninsula, formed by the river Eyder, near the German Ocean, with a commodious harbour, 25 m. SW of Sleswick, and 57 NW of Hamburgh.

TONQUIN, a kingdom of Asia, bounded on the N by China, on the E and SE by China and the Bay of Tonquin, on the S by Cochin China, and on the W by the kingdom of Laos. It is about 350 m. in length, and 220 in its greatest breadth, and is one of the finest and most considerable kingdoms of the East, as well on account of the number of inhab. and the trade they carry on, as the excellency of the soil, and mild temperature of the climate. The population is about 18 millions, and lies from 9 to 23 N lat. Only two winds commonly prevail here, the N and the S; the former blows from June, or July, to January, and the latter from January to July. The country is thick set with villages, and the natives in general are of a middling stature, and clean-limbed, with a tawny complexion. Their faces are oval and flattish, and their noses and lips of a neat form. Their hair is black, long, lank, and coarse; and they let it hang down their shoulders. They are at great pains to dye their teeth black. The country is so very populous, that many labour under extreme poverty for want of employment. The money and goods brought hither by foreign ships, particularly the English and Dutch, put them in action; but one-third at least of the money must be advanced before hand by the merchants; and the ships stay here till the goods are finished, which is generally five or six months. They are so addicted to gaming, that, when every thing else is lost, they will stake their wives and children. The garments of the Tonquinese are made either of silk or cotton; but the poor people and soldiers wear only cotton of a dark tawny colour. Being much subject to hurricanes, the houses are small and low, and so built as to bend to the blast, mostly constructed of bamboo cane. They have only a ground-floor, with two or three partitions, and each room has a square hole to let in the light. They have stools, benches, and chairs; and on the side of a table is a little altar, with two incense pots thereon, which no house is without. The villages consist of 30 or 40 houses, surrounded by trees, and in some places are banks to keep the water from overflowing their gardens, where they have oranges, betels, pumpkins, melons, and sallad herbs. In the rainy season (from April to August, which is the most unhealthy part of the year) they pass from one house to another, by wading through the water, or by help of boats. An extraordinary phænomenon occurs every year during the 8th moon: after the retreat of the tide, on the day of the highest spring-tide, a multitude of worms come out of the earth, which the people catch and eat with the greatest avidity. In the only city in the kingdom, called Cachao, are about 20,000 houses, with mud walls, and covered with thatch; a few built with brick, and roofed with pantiles. In each yard is a small arched building, like an oven, about 6 feet high, made of brick, which serves to secure their goods in case of fire. The principal streets are very wide, and paved with small stones. The king of Tonquin has three palaces in it, such as they are; and near them are stables for his horses and elephants. They buy all their wives, of which the great men have several; but in hard times the men will sell both wives and children, to buy rice for food. When a man dies, he is buried in his own ground, and if he was master of a family, they make a great feast. The first new moon in the year that happens after the middle of January, is a great festival, when they rejoice for 10 or 12 days together, and spend their time in all manner of sports. Their common drink is a kind of tea, like Chinese bohea: but they make themselves merry with arrack. At their great entertainments, they give their visitants arek, folded up in a betel leaf, daubed over with lime made into mortar. They have another great feast in May, or June, when their first harvest is got in. Their religion, which is founded on that of China, is Pagan, and yet they own a Supreme Being; their idols have human shapes, but in very different forms. They have likewise some resembling elephants and horses, placed in small, low temples, built of timber. The Christian religion was established here in 1626, by the Jesuit Baldinoty; and in 1639 there were 80,000 converts, who had built 200 churches at their own charge; it was utterly proscribed, however, in 1721, after several dreadful persecutions, attended with the imprisonment, torture, and death, of the missionaries and their catechists. The language is spoken very much in the throat, and some of the words are pronounced through the teeth; it has a great resemblance to the Chinese. They have schools of learning, and their characters are the same, or like those of China; and like them they write with a hair pencil. They have several mechanic arts, or trades, and export great quantities of their manufactures, at which they are very dexterous and ingenious. Their fruit-trees are said to excell all the rest of Asia, in the flavour and beauty of their fruit; and their elephants are reckoned the largest and nimblest in the world. The commodities are gold, musk, silks, calicoes, drugs of many sorts, woods for dyeing, lackered wares, earthen wares, salt, anise-seed, and worm-seed. The lackered ware is scarcely inferior to that of Japan, which is accounted the best in the world. With all their merchandise, one would expect the people to be very rich; but they are, in general, very poor, the chief trade being carried on by the Chinese, English, and Dutch. The natives, indeed, export no merchandise on their own bottoms, neither have they any vessels fit for these rough seas. The goods, imported, beside silver, are saltpetre, sulphur, English broad cloth, pepper, spices, lead, and guns. Tonquin, about seven centuries ago, was subject to China, till Din, a famous robber, threw off the yoke of servitude, and placed the crown on his own head. This independence has been the source of many cruel wars and miseries, and the families on the throne have been already changed six times. The issue of the last civil war was a treaty, by which it was agreed, that the chouab, or competitor of King Le, and his descendants, were to have the absolute command of the armies, with the greatest part of the revenues, while the bua, or sovereign, was to enjoy all the honours and external splendour of royalty.

TONSA, a river of Romania, which runs into the Mariza, near Adrianople.

TONSBERG, a sea-port of Aggerhuys, with a considerable trade in firs and butter. It formerly contained 9 churches, and is one of the oldest towns in Norway. It is situated on a bay of the Baltic, 42 m. S of Christiana.

TONSET, a town of Aggerhuys, in Norway, 145 m. N of Christiana.

TOOBOUAI, one of the Society Islands, in the S. Pacific Ocean. Its greatest extent, in any direction, exclusive of the reefs, is not above 6 or 7 m. Small as it appears, however, there are hills in it of a considerable elevation, covered with verdure, except a few rocky cliffs, with patches of herbage, and groves of trees, interspersed to their summits. This island is plentifully stocked with hogs and fowls, and produces several kinds of fruits and roots. It was discovered by Capt. Cook. Lat. 23 26 S. lon. 149 23 W.

TOOFOA, one of the Friendly Islands, on which is a volcano, constantly emitting smoke. Here Lieut. Bligh attempted to land, when forced from his ship by the mutineers of the Bounty.

TOOMBS, a range of rocks, 3 or 400 yards in extent, called by the Scotch, THE CLOGHAN, and situated in the bay of Carrickfergus, in Down, Ulster. They are covered at high-water, but at low-water they have the appearance of a range of cabins along the shore.

Tortington, Sussex, 2 m. S of Arundel.

TORTOLA, an island in the W. Indies, and the principal of the Virgin Islands. It is about 18 m. long from E to W and 7 in its greatest breadth. It produces excellent cotton, sugar, and rum, and, within the last 20 years, has received considerable improvements. Their fruits, of which they have no great variety, are but indifferent, apples excepted. The entrance into the harbour is at the E end of the island. Tortola was first settled by a party of Dutch buccaneers; these, in 1666, were driven out by others, who took possession in the name of the King of England. Protection being afforded them, Tortola was soon after annexed to the government of the Leeward Islands. Lat. 18 30 N lon. 63 40 W.

Torton, Sussex, between Tortington and Arundel.

TORTOSA, a large town of Catalonia, founded long before the Christian æra, and named Dordosa, and made a municipal city by Scipio. The cathedral, the royal college of Dominicans, the convent of the Carmelites, the castle, which is a mile square, but in a state of decay, and only serving as a place of residence for a governor, are the most remarkable public buildings. In its neighbourhood are quarries, and mines of silver, iron, alabaster, jasper of divers colours, and stones with veins of gold. They have a great deal of silk and oil, and very fine potter's ware, which resembles porcelain. It is seated on the river Ebro, over which it has a large bridge of boats, about 15 m. from its mouth, and 77 m. SW of Barcelona.

TORTOSA, a sea-port town of Syria, 35 m. N of Tripoli.

TORTUGA, or TORTUGA SALADA, an island in the W. Indies, about 36 m. in circumf. and uninhabited. The E. end is full of bare, rugged, broken rocks, which stretch a little way out to sea. Near this end is a large salt-pond, within 200 paces of the sea, where the salt begins to kern in spring. There have been 20 sail of merchantmen here at a time for salt, who come hither from May to August, and find tolerably good anchorage at the SE part. At the W extremity there is a small harbour, with some fresh water; this part is full of low and shrubby trees. There are some but not many goats on it, which live on the coarse grass at the E end; and the turtles, or tortoises, come upon the sandy bays to lay their eggs, whence this island has its name. They are of divers colours, as blackish, dark brown, light brown, dark green, light green, yellow, and speckled. This island lies near the coast of Terra Firma, 40 m. W of the island of Margaretta. Lat. 11 30 N lon. 64 50 W.

TORTUGA, an island of the West Indies, about 2 leagues from the NW end of the island of St. Domingo. It is about 40 m. in circumf. and has a very safe harbour, but difficult of access. It was formerly much resorted to by the French buccaneers, who fortified themselves here, being countenanced and openly supported by the government of France. Lat. 20 10 N lon. 72 48 W.

Tortworth, Surry, W of Lalam-Ferry. Tortworth, Gloucesters. S of the Avon, and 4 m. W of Wotton-under-Edge. In this parish is a remarkable chesnut tree, said to be 1000 years old; it is 52 feet in circuit at the trunk. Tortworth, Nottinghams. in Blithe parish.

Totmonslow, Staffords. near Draycot. Totnell, Dorsets. in Yateminster parish.

TOTNESS, a borough-town of Devons. the chief trade of which is the manufacture of serges, and other woollens; but here are more gentlemen than merchants or tradesmen of note. It has a spacious church, with a fine tower, above 90 feet high, a town-hall, and a school-house. Provisions of all sorts are cheap and plentiful here, particularly good fish and delicate trout. It is seated on the river Dart, (over which it has a fine bridge, and which is here pretty broad, it being but 7 or 8 m. from the sea, and the tide flowing 10 or 12 feet at the bridge,) 27 m. SSW of Exeter, and 196 W by S of London. Markets on Tues. and Sat.

Tottenham High Cross, a large village of Middl. 5 m. N of London. It is so called from a cross, which was erected here on the place where Queen Eleanor's corpse was rested. It was formerly a column of wood, raised upon a hillock; but was taken down about 200 years ago, and the present structure erected in its stead by Dean Wood. In this parish are three alms-houses. Of one of them, for eight poor people, it is remarkable, that it was erected by Balthazar Zanches, a Spaniard, who was confectioner to Philip II of Spain, with whom he came over to England, and was the first that exercised that art in this country. He became a Protestant, and died in 1602. A rivulet, called the Mosel, which rises on Muswell-Hill, near Highgate, runs through the principal street of this village. Tottenham and Park, Wilts, by Savernake-Forest. Tottenhoe, Bucks, by Whaddon. Totterdown, Somersets. near Bristol. Totteridge, Herts, near Barnet and Whetstone. Tottington, Lancash. W of Rochdale. Tottington, Sussex, near Steyning.

TOUL, a regularly fortified town in the depart. of Meurthe, France, lately the see of a bishop. It is seated on the river Moselle, over which it has a stone bridge, 10 m. W of Nancy, and 167 E of Paris.

TOULOMBA, a fortress of Hindostan, in the province of Moultan, situated on the S bank of the Rauvee, 50 m. ENE of Moultan.

TOULON, a celebrated city and sea-port of France, and the chief town of the depart. of Var. Before the revolution, it was the see of a bishop, and besides the cathedral, and other parishes, contained 9 convents, a seminary, and a college. It is divided into the Old and the New Quarter. The first, which is very ill-built, has nothing remarkable in it but the Rue-aux-Arbres, which is a kind of course, or mall, and the town-house; the gate of this is surmounted by a balcony, which is supported by two termini, the master-pieces of the famous Pujet. The New Quarter, which forms, as it were, a second city, contains beside the magnificent works constructed in the reign of Louis XIV. many fine houses, among which that of the late seminary is, beyond comparison, the grandest; and a spacious, oblong square, lined with trees, and serving as a parade. The harbour, respecting these two quarters, is distinguished likewise by the names of the Old Port, or the Merchant Port, and the New Port. The Merchants' Haven, along which extends a noble quay, on which stands the town-house, is protected by two moles, begun by Henry IV. The New Haven was constructed by Louis XIV. after the designs of Vauban, as were the fortifications of the city and harbours. In the front of this haven is the rope-house, built wholly of free-stone, 620 feet in length, with three arched walks, in which as many parties of rope-makers may work at the same time; and above, is a place for the preparation of hemp. The long sail-room, the dock-yards, the basins, cannon foundry, armoury, working houses for blacksmiths, joiners, carpenters, locksmiths, carvers, &c. are all very extensive, and well contrived. The gallies, transferred from Marseilles some years ago, occupy at Toulon a second basin in the New Port. Many of the galley-slaves are artisans, and some are merchants. They no longer sleep on board the gallies, but have been lately provided with accommodations on shore, in a vast building, newly erected for that purpose. The Old and New Harbour lie contiguous, and communicate with one another by a canal; they have also an outlet into the extensive outer road, which is surrounded by hills, and formed by nature almost circular. The entrance on both sides is defended by a fort with strong batteries. In 1707, the Duke of Savoy and Prince Eugene laid siege to this city, but without success. In 1721, it suffered greatly by the plague. The inhab. were induced to surrender this city in trust to the English, in September, 1793; but the consequences were dreadful.—Their new friends, in about 3 months, were driven out of the place; and the precipitation with which the evacuation was effected, caused a great part of the Toulonese ships and property to fall into the hands of the enraged and implacable republicans. Of 31 ships of the line, which the English found at Toulon, 13 were left behind, 9 were burned at Toulon, and one at Leghorn; and 4 Lord Hood had previously sent to Brest and Rochefort with republican seamen whom he was afraid to trust. The inhab. are above 22,000. Toulon is situated on a bay of the Mediterranean, 27 m. SE of Aix, and 388 SE of Paris. Lat. 43 7 N lon. 5 47 E.

TOULON EN CHAROLOIS, a town in the depart. of the Saone and Loire, seated on or near the Arroux river, 15 m. NE of Bourbon Lancy.

TOULOUSE, a city in the depart. of Upper Garonne, lately the capital of Languedoc, the seat of a parliament, and the see of an archbishop. It is the largest city in France, next to Paris and Lyons, although its population bears no proportion to its extent; containing only 50,171 inhab. It was anciently the capital of the Tectosages, who made so many conquests in Asia and Greece. It was next a Roman colony, and was successively the capital of the Visigoths (who destroyed the superb amphitheatre, of which there are still some remains, the capitol, and other Roman monuments) and that of Aquitaine. The streets are mostly broad, and the walls and houses are built of brick. The town-house, a modern structure, forms a perfect square, 324 feet long, and 66 high. It is called the Capitolium, and the aldermen are termed Capitouls. Among other curiosities preserved in it, are 15 large parchment folios, delicately written and illuminated, being partly annals of the city, with portraits and names of the capitouls, and partly of the memorable events and transactions throughout the whole kingdom, commencing from the year 1288. They were drawn up originally in Latin, but under Francis I. were altered to French. The principal front occupies an entire side of the grand square, lately called the Place Royale. From its fine situation, communicating with the ocean on one side, and with the Mediterranean on the other, by the celebrated canal of Languedoc, which joins the Garonne, a little below the town, Toulouse might have been a very commercial city; but the taste of the inhab. has been principally for the sciences and belles-lettres. Of course, here were two colleges, two public libraries, and three academies. The little commerce of Toulouse consists in Spanish wool and carpets, together with some slight silk and woollen stuffs. The bridge over the Garonne is, at least, equal to those of Tours and Orleans; it forms the communication between the suburb of St. Cyprian and the city.

The quays extend along the banks of the Garonne; and it has been in contemplation to line them with new and uniform houses. Toulouse is 125 m. SE of Bourdeaux, and 356 by W of Paris.

TOURAINE, a ci-devant province of France, N of Berry and Poitou, E of Anjou, and S of Maine; and divided into Higher and Lower. The river Loire runs through the middle. It is about 58 m. in length, and 55 in breadth, and is watered by several rivers, very commodious for trade, and is, in general, so pleasant and fertile a country, that it is called the Garden of France.

TOUR-DE-ROUSILLON, a town in the depart. of the Eastern Pyrenees, seated near the river Tet, (on a spot where once stood a city, called Ruscino) 2 m. E of Perpignan.

TOUR-LA-VILLE, a town in the depart. of the Channel, almost adjoining to Cherburg. It is celebrated for a manufacture of glass.

TOURNAY, a city of Flanders, generally considered as the most ancient town of Belgic Gaul, and once the capital of the Nervii. It is, at present, a considerable place, and was lately the capital of the Tournaisis. It has several fine manufactories, and is particularly famous for good stockings. Tournay was taken by the allies, under the Duke of Marlborough and Prince Eugene, in 1709, and ceded to the house of Austria, by the treaty of Utrecht; though the Dutch put in a garrison, as being one of the barrier towns. It is extremely well fortified, and is seated on the river Scheldt, which divides it into two parts, that are united by a bridge, 14 m. S by E of Lisle, and 135 N by E of Paris.

TOURNAY, a town in the depart. of Upper Pyrenees, 9 m. SE of Tarbes.

TOURNON, a town in the depart. of Ardeche, seated near the river Rhone, 24 m. SSW of Privas.

TOURS, a considerable city, capital of the depart. of Indre and Loire, seated on the Loire, and near the Cher. Over the former is one of the finest bridges in Europe, consisting of 15 elliptical arches, each 75 feet diameter; three of these were carried away by the breaking up of the ice in 1789. This bridge is terminated, in a line which crosses the whole city, by a street 2400 feet long, with foot pavements on each side; and lined with fine buildings recently erected. Under the ministry of Cardinal Richelieu, 27,000 persons were employed here in the silk manufacture; at present, the whole number of inhab. is only 20,240. The red wines made here are much esteemed. Tours is 127 m. SW of Paris.

TOURS, a town in the depart. of the Puy de Dome.

TOURVILLE, a town in the depart. of the Eure, 11 m. SW of Pont de l'Arche.

TRANQUEBAR, a town of Hindostan, on the coast of Coromandel, subject to the Danes, who erected a fortress here in 1621. They had previously obtained a grant of the town and a fertile territory, from the rajah of Tanjore, for an annual rent of about 720l. The territory is considerable, and full of populous villages. The town is between two and three miles in circumf. and surrounded with a wall, and several bastions, well provided with artillery. Within the walls are 3 Christian churches, one of which is for Portuguese Catholics (who were in possession of the town before the Danes), a large mosque for the Mahometans, and several pagodas for the Gentoos. It is seated at the mouth of one of the branches of the Couvery, 56 m. S of Pondicherry. Lat. 11 1 N lon. 79 57 E.

TRANSYLVANIA, a country of Europe, formerly annexed to Hungary; bounded on the N by Hungary, Poland, and Moldavia; on the E by Moldavia; on the S by Wallachia and the bannat of Temeswar; and on the W by Hungary. It is surrounded on all parts by high mountains, which, however, are not barren, and the air is healthier than that of Hungary. The inhab. have a sufficiency of corn and wine, and there are rich mines of gold, silver, lead, copper, quicksilver, and alum. It has undergone various revolutions, but, since 1722, has been rendered hereditary to the house of Austria. The inhab. are a mixture of Romanists, Lutherans, Calvinists, Sociniaus, Armenians, Greeks, and Mahometans; to which may be added, Jews and Cingars, who live in tents, and lead a vagabond life like gipsies. Its form is nearly oval; about 400 m. in circumf. The principality is governed in the name of the prince and nobility, by the diet, which meets at Hermanstadt, by summons from the prince; the government being wholly different from that of Hungary.

TREBISOND, or TARABOSAN, a city of Turkey, in Asia, with a Greek archbishop's see, and a harbour, seated at the foot of a pretty steep hill. The walls are almost square and high embattled, and though they are not of the first ages, they probably stand on the foundations of the ancient inclosure, from which this city obtained the name of Trapezium. They are built with the ruins of ancient structures, on which are inscriptions not legible, because they are too high. The town is not populous; for there are more woods and gardens in it than houses, and these but one story high. The harbour is at the E end of the town, but the mole built by the Genoese is almost destroyed. From the Romans, this city was taken by the Scythians, or Tartars, in the time of Valerian. Under the Greek emperors, it was erected into a principality, or empire. Alexis Comnenus took possession of it in the year 1204. In 1462, it was taken by Mahomet II. who carried David Comnenus, and all his family, prisoners to Constantinople, where they were mostly put to death. An inscription on the gate of the castle, indicates that the emperor Justinian caused the edifices of the town to be repaired. It stands on the Black Sea, 220 m. ENE of Erivan. TRIPOLI, a city of Africa, in Barbary, capital of a territory of the same name. It is pretty large, and has a harbour, the most commodious of any along this whole coast, except Alexandria. The houses are low and mean, and the streets narrow, dirty, and irregular. It was formerly very flourishing, and has now some trade in linen cloth, manufactured here, stuffs, saffron, corn, oil, wood, dates, ostrich feathers, skins, ashes, (which they sell to the Europeans to make glass and soap) and particularly Christian slaves whom they take at sea. At the W end is a strong castle fortified after the modern manner, and furnished with some large cannon. In the year 1685, Tripoli was bombarded by a French squadron, under Marshal d'Etrees, and the government compelled to sue for peace. It is seated on the Mediterranean, in a barren, sandy soil, which, though destitute of rivers, springs, wells, or any other water, but what is supplied by cisterns or reservoirs of rain water, produces palm-trees, delicious dates, and the lotus, a plant which supplies them with both meat and drink, 275 m. SE by S of Tunis. Lat. 32 34 N lon. 13 12 E.

TRIPOLI, a country of Barbary, on the Mediterranean, E of Tunis and Biledulgerid; and W of Barca. It is about 600 m. from E to W. but the breadth is various, from 120 to 250 m. Some parts of it are pretty fruitful; but that toward Egypt is a sandy desert. It had the title of a kingdom, but is now a sort of regency, at the head of which is a dey, or bey, who is not merely a titular vassal to the Porte, but really under subjection and tribute. They have about 7 or 8 corsairs, only one of which can properly be styled a ship; the rest are small gallies, poorly manned and equipped, but take, however, a great number of ships. Here are a number of villages, very poor, and thinly inhabited; but few cities or towns of consequence.

TRIPOLI, or TARABOLUS, a town of Syria, on the Mediterranean. It has no harbour but a simple road, the bottom of which is rocky, and soon wears out the cables of vessels, which, are, moreover, frequently exposed to the violence of the NW winds. The inhab. are near 60,000, consisting of Turks, schismatic Greeks, Latins, and Jews. All the houses have fountains belonging to them, with orchards, where the nopal grows spontaneously. The commerce is wholly in the hands of the French, who have a consul here, and three commercial houses within the town. They export coarse silks, spunges fished in the road, exchanging them for cloth, cochineal, sugar, or West-India coffee. The bashaw farms the government of the Porte, on a lease of one year only, at 750 purses, or about 39,000l. per annum. In the territory about it, are a great number of mulberry-trees, and other fruits. It is situated near the mouth of a small river, called Kadisha, at the foot of Mount Lebanon, which overlooks and surrounds it on the E S and partly on the NW, 130 m. TROPEZ, ST. a sea-port in the depart. of Var, seated in a bay of the same name, on the Mediterranean, 12 m. SSW of Frejus.

TROPPAU, a city of Silesia, the seat of the regency for the Austrian part; 40 m. N by E of Olmutz.

TROPPAU, a principality of Silesia, containing 11 cities or towns; it is divided between the house of Austria and the king of Prussia.

TROPPLOWITZ, a town of Silesia, 5 m. N of Jagerndorf.

TROSA, a sea-port town of Sweden, in Sudermanland, in the Baltic, 18 m. SW of Stockholm.

Trostran, Suff. S of Fakenham. Trostrey, Monmouths. N of Usk. Trothy, a river in Monmouths. which runs into the Wye, below Monmouth. Trottescliff, Kent, 2 m. NE of Wrotham. Trotton, Sussex, near Petworth and Midhurst. Troveryn, a river in Merioneths. Troughwhen, Northumberl. SW of Ellesdon. Troutbeck, a river in Cumberl. that runs into the Irthing, below Horsehead. Troutbeck, Westmorel. near Bowness, on the river Troutbeck, which runs into the Eden, 3 m. below Appleby.

TROWBRIDGE, a town of Wilts. with a considerable manufacture of broad cloth, for the most part of the fine sorts, mixed with Spanish wool. It is seated on the river Were, (over which it has a stone bridge) 10 m. SE of Bath, and 98 W of London, and contains 1138 houses. Market on Satur.

Trowell, W of Nottingham. Trowceryn, a river of N. Wales, which rises from a lake in Merioneths. and runs into the Dee. Trowse-Newton-Hall, 2 m. NE of Norwich.

TROY, or ILIUM, an ancient and famous city of Asia, near the Archipelago, at the foot of the Mount Ida, and opposite the Isle of Tenedos. It is well known in story, or, at least, in poetic fiction, for its ten years' siege.

TROYES, a city in the depart. of Aube, seated on the river Seine, 30 m. ENE of Sens, and 90 ESE of Paris, before the revolution, the capital of Champagne, and the see of a bishop. It contained 14 churches, 4 abbeys, 10 convents, a college, and an hospital. As the stone in its neighbourhood is too tender to be employed in building, almost all the houses are of wood; which, nevertheless, produce an effect pleasing to the eye. Among the objects of curiosity are St. Stephen's, the principal church, the public library of the late Cordeliers; and the castle in which the ancient counts of Champagne resided. Its commerce, once very flourishing, and still considerable, consists in linens, dimities, fustians, flax, hemp, wax, chandlery, candles, and wine.

Troy-House, and Michel, S and SW of Monmouth.

Trull, Somersets. SW of Taunton. Truly, Sussex, E of Stoning. Trumpington, 2 m. from Cambridge. Here are still the ruins of the mill commemorated by Chaucer in the Miller's Tale. Trunch, Norf. NE of N. Walsham.

TRUNS, a town of the Grisons, 7 m. W of Ilantz.

TRURO, a borough-town in Cornw. with regular streets, a large market-house, and a spacious old church, not inferior to any in the county for its Gothic architecture, contains 381 houses and 2482 inhab. It has the benefit of the coinage of tin, and the lord warden of the stannaries holds his parliament here. Its chief business is in shipping tin and copper ore, found in abundance in the neighbourhood. Truro is seated at the head of the river Fale, with a large, commodious wharf or quay, for vessels of about 100 tons burden, 11 m. N of Falmouth, and 257 W by S of London. Well frequented markets on Wednes. and Satur.

Trusham, Devons. N of Chudleigh. Trusley, Derbys. E of Boylston.

TRUXILLO, a considerable town of Spain, in Estramadura, 117 m. SW of Madrid.

TRUXILLO, a town of Venezuela, in Terra Firma. Lat. 7 20 N lon. 69 15 W.

TRUXILLO, a rich and trading town of Peru, in the audience of Lima, and valley of Chimo. In its pleasant, well-cultivated, and fertile territory, are above 50,000 tributary Americans. It is seated on a small river, near the S. Sea, 6 m. S of Guanchaco, its port or harbour, and 300 m. NNW of Lima. Lat. 8 1 S.

TRUXILLO, a town of Honduras, seated on a gulf of the same name, with a good harbour. It is built between two rivers, and surrounded by thick groves, but, at present, is much decayed. Lat. 15 20 N lon. 88 50 W.

Truxton, Hants, SW of Weyhill. Tryddin, in the parish of Mold, Flint, Wales. Tryley, Monmouths. N of Abergavenny.

TSCHUTSKI, a country situated on the NE extremity of Asia, near the NW coast of America, being bounded by the great river Anadir on the S. The attention of the natives, like that of the wandering Koriacs, is confined chiefly to their deer, with which their country abounds. They are a hardy race of people, and are formidable neighbours to the Koriacs of both nations, who often experience their depredations. The Russians have long endeavoured to bring them under their dominion; and though they have lost a great number of men, in their different expeditions to accomplish this purpose, they have never yet been able to effect it.

TSHETSHEN. See KISTI.

TUAM, in the county of Galway, in Connaught, was once a city, but is now reduced to a small village. It is 20 m. NNE of Galway, and 93 W of Dublin.

TUBAON, a town on the N coast of Java. Lat. 6 0 S lon. 111 51 E.

Tubberbrackin, in Galway, Connaught. Tubberdonny, or Tubberidony, in Galway, Connaught. Tubberbany, in Tipperary, Munster. Tubbermore, in Derry, Ulster. Tubbermurry, in Limerick, Munster. Tubberpadder, in Galway, Connaught. Tubberpound, in King's County, Leinster. Tubberscanavan, in Sligo, Connaught.

TUBINGEN, a town of Swabia, the second in Wirtemburg, with a university, a seminary for the study of the law, and a college for the nobility. In the town-house is a very curious clock. Here the ancient Palatines of Tubingen, whose origin is unknown, had their pfalz, or palatium, which stood on the spot of the present castle. It is seated on the river Neckar, between two hills, 18 m. SW of Stutgard.

TUCUMAN, or TACMA, a large province of S. America, W of Paraguay, E of the Andes, which separate it from Chili, and N of Cordova, in the vice-royalty of Buenos Ayres. The air is hot, and the earth sandy, and almost without stones; it is, however, very well watered, producing great plenty of cotton, wax, honey, pastel for dyeing, and a variety of fruits, with roots, Indian wheat, &c. Vast numbers of cattle are bred here, and the sheep are very large and strong (being used for carriage by the natives), but with fine wool. They have plenty of deer and other game, with lions and tigers in their woods. The original natives, who live in small villages close to one another, are somewhat civilized by the Spaniards, being covered with cotton and woollen manufactures.

TUCUYO, a town of Terra Firma, in Venezuela, in a valley of the same name. A river runs through the middle of the town and valley; the air is good, and the soil abounds in sugar-canes, cotton, and the necessaries of life. Lat. 7 31 N lon. 67 40 W.

Tuddenham, Suf. near Ipswich; another SW of Lackford. Tuddenham, E. W. and N. Norf. E of Dereham. Tuddiford, Hants, between Lymington and Christchurch.

TUDDINGTON, a small town of Bedfords. 5 m. NW of Dunstable, and 37 NW of London, with a small market on Thurs. almost disused.

TUDELA, a town of Spain, in Navarre, seated on the river Ebro, 45 m. NW of Saragossa, and 146 NNE of Madrid. Also a town of Leon, 5 m. E of Valladolid, and a town of New Grenada, in S. America.

Tudeley, Kent, 2 m. SE of Tunbridge. Tudsham, or Tulsham Hall, Kent, near W. Farley. Tudworth, N. Wilts. 6 m. NE of Ambresbury. Tudworth, S. Hants, by N. Tudworth. Tudy, St. Cornw. SE of Padstow-Haven. Tur, St. Cornw. SE of Tregony.

TVER, a considerable commercial town of Russia, capital of the government of the same name, and seated at the confluence of the Tverza and the Volga, along which are conveyed all the goods and merchandise sent by water from Siberia and the southern provinces toward Petersburgh. It is divided into the old and new town: the former, situated on the opposite side of the Volga, consists almost entirely of wooden cottages; the latter having been destroyed by a dreadful conflagration in 1763, has been much improved in being re-built. The empress ordered a regular and beautiful plan of a new town to be made; enjoining all the houses to be constructed according to this model. At her own expence, she raised the governor's house, the episcopal palace, the courts of justice, the exchange, the prison, and some other public edifices; and to every person who engaged to build a house of brick, she offered a loan of 300l. for a year, without interest. The money which she advanced on this occasion, amounted to 60,000l. and she has since remitted one-third of this sum. The streets, which are broad and long, issue in straight lines from an octagon in the centre. The houses are of brick, stuccoed white, and make a magnificent appearance. The plan, when completed, was to comprise two octagons, with several streets leading from them, and intersecting each other at right angles. Here is an ecclesiastical seminary, which admits 600 students. In 1776, the empress founded a school for the instruction of 200 burghers' children; and, in 1779, an academy was also opened in this town, for the education of the young nobility of the province, at the public charge. It admits 120 students, who are instructed in foreign languages, arithmetic, geography, fortification, tactics, natural philosophy, music, riding, dancing, &c. Tver is 99 m. NNW of Moscow.

TVERSKOE, a government of Russia, bounded on the N by Novogrodskoe, and on the E by Jaroslav and Vladomir. It was once an independent sovereignty, called the Duchy of Tver, and afterwards comprised in the government of Novogorod. The number of inhab. in this district has of late increased very much. The country produces plenty of grain, hemp, flax, and vegetables. Its forests yield oak, birch, alder, &c. and here are vast numbers of wild and tame quadrupeds, with a variety of birds, eagles, falcons, cranes, &c. Beside the fishes common to most lakes and rivers, there is a fish which is peculiar to the waters of these northern regions. It is called the sterlet, the acipenser ruthenus of Linnæus, and is a species of sturgeon, highly esteemed for the flavour and delicacy of its flesh, and for its roe, of which the finest caviare is made.

Tuesley, Surry, in Godalmin parish. Tuffield, Oxford. near Nettlebed, through which the Grimsditch runs to Colnbrook. Tuffley Court, by Gloucester. Tufter, Essex, near Little Baddow and Malden. Tufton, Kent, in Rainham parish. Tufton, Sussex, in Nordham parish. Tugby, Leicesters. TUGELOO, a river of Georgia, in N. America, one of the branches of the Savannah, which runs into the Keowee, 28 m. NW of Petersburg.

Tugford, Shrops. NW of Brown-Clee-Hill. Tuggal, or Tugball, Northumberl. in Vesey barony.

TUGGURT, or TOCAORT, a town of Africa, in the country of Algiers, 240 m. SSE of Algiers.

TULA, a city of Russia, capital of a government, and containing, according to Busching, 144 churches and convents. It has some manufactures of fire-arms and leather, and is situated on the Upha, 112 m. S of Moscow.

Tullabane, in Leitrim, Connaught. Tullamore, in Antrim, Ulster. Tullamore, in Down, Ulster.

TULLAMORE, a town of King's County, in Leinster, situated on the river Clodagh, or Tullamore, which divides the town nearly into two equal parts, near the grand canal, 46 m. WNW of Dublin.

Tullanstown, in Louth, Leinster.

TULLES, a city in the depart. of Correze, before the revolution, the capital of Lower Limosin, and see of a bishop. The cathedral is famous for its steeple, which is very high and curious. It is situated in a country full of mountains and precipices, at the confluence of the rivers Carteze and Solane, 37 m. SE of Limoges.

Tullogh-naneeve; see Saintfield.

TULLOW, a town of Carlow, in Leinster, 8 m. ESE of Carlow, and 38 SSW of Dublin.

Tully, in Kildare, Leinster. Tullycarbet, in Monaghan, Ulster.

TULLYCLEA, a river of Fermanagh, in Ulster, which runs into Lough Earne, 4 m. N from Enniskillen.

Tulyo donald, in Donegal, Ulster. Tullyvallen, in Armagh, Ulster.

TULN, a town of Austria, near the Wienarwald, or Wood of Vienna. It is seated on or near the river Tuln, 15 m. WNW of Vienna.

Tulrahan, in Mayo, Connaught. Tulsk, in Roscommon, Connaught.

TUMANSKOI, an island of Russia, in the Frozen Ocean, about 360 m. in circumf. It is of a triangular form, and lies N of the isle of Kirlach, from which it is separated by a narrow channel. Lat. 71 50 to 73 N lon. 11 19 E.

Tumbey, Lincolns. near Tattershall Chace.

TUMBEZ, a town of Piura, in Peru, consisting of about 70 houses built of cane, and thatched. It is situated near a river of the same name, which empties itself into the bay of Guaiaquil, almost opposite to the island of St. Clare. Lat. 3 13 S.

TUMEL, a rapid river of Perths. which, after forming many beautiful cataracts, spreads into a lake called Loch Tumel, and afterwards falls into the Garry.

Tummer, Somersets. near Milbourn-Port, 3 m. from Sherborn.

TUNBRIDGE, a town of Kent, consisting of houses mostly ill-built, and the streets but indifferently payed. Here is a famous free-school, founded by a native of the town, in the reign of Queen Elizabeth. Tunbridge is seated on the river Tun, one of the five little streams of the Medway, over each of which is a stone bridge, 14 m. SSW of Maidstone, and 30 SE by S of London. Market on Frid.

TUNBRIDGE WELLS, a town of Kent, 5 m. S of Tunbridge, but in the same parish. It is much resorted to in summer, on account of its chalybeate waters. It is seated at the bottom of three hills, called Mount Sinai, Mount Ephraim, and Mount Pleasant, on which are scattered houses, orchards, and gardens: and as the country here is naturally wild, the effect of the whole is romantic and picturesque. Here are the buildings requisite for the accommodation of the visitants, with a plentiful market and shops noted for their elegant turnery ware. About 1½ m. from the Wells, are stupendous rocks, in some parts 75 feet high, the mean height being 40; they have the appearance of the hulks of large men of war, ranged close together. Surprising cliffs and chasms are interspersed, with narrow gloomy passages, that lead through the midst of them. The water is a great deobstruent and bracer, operates by urine and perspiration, and is efficacious in cold, chronical distempers, weak nerves, and bad digestion.

Tunford, Hertfords. SE of Wormley. Tunford, or Toniford, Kent, near Thenington.

TUNGEEADRA, a river of Hindostan, which runs into the Kistnah, 7 m. E of Rachore, in the country of Golconda.

TUNJA, a town that gives name to a district of Terra Firma, in New Granada, 30 m. SW of Truxillo.

TUNIS, a city of Barbary (called by Diodorus Siculus, Leucon Tuneta, that is, White Tunis, perhaps from the chalky cliffs that lie round it, when viewed from the sea), and capital of a kingdom of the same name. It is in the form of an oblong square, and is rather more than 3 m. in circumf. including the suburbs. Here are 5 gates, and the number of houses, according to Dr. Shaw, is about 12,000. The bey's palace, where the divan assemble, the great mosque, with an exchange, a custom-house, and an arsenal, are the only buildings of note. Here are 9 colleges for students, and 86 petty schools, with doctors of the Mahometan law, partly maintained by the public. The janizaries are quartered in barracks. The harbour, which has a very narrow entrance, is defended by a castle, which is its chief defence, and the fortress of Goletta, situated on the side of a canal, but not carefully supported. In the city they have no water, but what is obtained at a mile's distance. Here are English, French, Dutch, and other European consuls, who are treated with civility and respect, the Tunisians having little of the insolent haughtiness of the Algerines, and being, by far, the most civilized nation of Barbary. Tunis has long been famous for the manufacture of linen and woollen goods, for the sale of which, there is a piazza of vast extent, near the centre of the city, which is said formerly to have contained not less than 3000 shops. The inhab. indeed, are more intent on trade than plundering and cruising. It is situated on a rising ground, on the W bank of a lake, among lakes and marshes, which, however, do not render it unhealthy, (which is, by Dr. Shaw, attributed to the number of mastic and myrtle trees, rosemary, and other gummy, aromatic plants, with which they heat their ovens and baths,) in lat. 36 42 N and lon. 10 16 E.

TUNIS, a country of Africa, usually dignified with the title of kingdom, bounded on the N and E by the Mediterranean, and the kingdom of Tripoli; on the S by several tribes of the Arabs; and on the W by the kingdom of Algiers, and the country of Esab; extending about 200 m. from N to S and 120 from E to W. This country was formerly subject to the emperor of Morocco, and afterwards, for a space of time, became a powerful and independent kingdom. In the year 1538, it was over-run by Barbarossa, and, notwithstanding the endeavours of Charles V. and his successors, was made a province of the Ottoman empire, under Selim II. by Sinan, bashaw of the Levant. At present, the whole kingdom is divided into two circuits, the summer and the winter, which the bey makes in person, through his dominions, at those two seasons. It is now, therefore, considered as a republic, under the protection of the Turks; and a bashaw still resides here, although, in power and influence, he is a mere cypher. The beyship is hereditary, and independent both of the Porte and the divan, but is seldom filled up, when vacant, without violence and bloodshed. The air, in general, is healthy, but the soil in the eastern parts is but indifferent, for want of water. Toward the middle, the mountains and valleys abound in fruits; but the northern part of the bey's summer circuit is by far the most fertile, pleasant, and populous, and hath the greatest number of cities, villages, and dowars. The environs of Tunis, the capital city, are very dry, upon which account corn is generally dear. However, there are plenty of citrons, lemons, oranges, dates, grapes, and other fruits. There are also olive-trees, roses, and odoriferous plants. In the woods and mountains are lions, wild beeves, ostriches, monkeys, camelcons, roe-bucks, hares, pheasants, partridges, and other sorts of birds and beasts. The most remarkable rivers are the Gundilcarbar, Magrida, Mageada, and Caps. The Tunisians, in general, trade in horses, olives, oil, soap, and ostrich eggs and feathers; and they export to France, in particular, corn, oil, beans, lentils, wax, hides, and Morocco skins; receiving, in exchange, Spanish wool, Languedoc cloths, vermillion, sugar, pepper, cloves, wine, brandy, paper, hardware, iron, and steel. The Italian trade is wholly carried on by the Jews. The Turks and Moors export to the Levant woollen stuffs, lead, gold-dust, and chequins, and a vast number of bales of caps; and bring, in return, silks, calicoes, iron, alum, and vermillion. They send much the same kind of commodities into Egypt. They import, in exchange from thence, linen, cotton, rice, flax, and coffee. The number of French ships freighted at Tunis, by Turks, Moors, and Jews, amounts yearly to about 150 to the Levant, and 50 for France and Italy; as for those of the English, their number is uncertain.

Tunley and Daneway, Gloucesters. hamlets to Bisley. Tunstall, Devons. near Torbay. Tunstall, Durham, near Stranten. Tunstall, Kent, near Sittingbourn, 2 m. S of Milton. Tunstall, Lancas. S of Kirby Lonsdale. Tunstall, Norf. W of Yarmouth. Tunstall, TURCKHEIM, a town in the depart. of Upper Rhine, 3 m. W of Colmar; a town of Mindelheim, in Suabia; and a town of Worms, Upper Rhine, situated on the Rhine, 4 m. N of Worms.

TURCOIN, a town in the depart. of the North, 6 m. NNE of Lisle. It is remarkable for an unfortunate conflict, May 18, 1794, (in which the British, Austrian, Hanoverian, and other allied forces under the Duke of York, General Clairfayt, &c. were compelled to retreat with great loss,) and which decided the fate of the Netherlands. The British troops alone lost upwards of 1000 men, and 43 pieces of cannon.

TURCOMANIA, that part of Armenia that belongs to the Turks.

TURENBURG, a town in Samland, in Prussia, 16 m. WNW of Koningsberg.

TURENNE, a town in the depart. of Corroze, 15 m. SSW of Tulle.

SE of Oswestry. Turges, Hants, W of Eversley. Turgh, a river of Montgomerys. which rises on the W side of the county and running eastward till it reaches the foot of Mount Golway, turns to the N, and after receiving the Murway, falls into the Tanat. Turgbe, a river in Carmarthens. which runs into the Cothey, below Capel Lapymsent.

TURIN, anciently called TAURINI, a city of Italy, the capital of Piedmont, and residence of its sovereign, the king of Sardinia, with a university. It is charmingly seated on a vast plain, at the confluence of the rivers Doria and Po. It is one of the handsomest places in Italy, but the air is thick and moist in autumn and winter, on account of the thick fogs. The approaches to it are magnificent, and the environs beautiful. Most of the streets are well built, uniform, clean, straight, and terminating on some agreeable object. No inhabitant can rebuild or repair his house but on a uniform plan, laid down by government, for the improvement of the city. The Strata di Po, the finest and largest in the city, leads to the royal palace, and is adorned with piazzas that are at once beautiful and convenient. The royal palace consists of two magnificent structures, in a simple but noble style of architecture, joined together by a gallery, in which are several pictures, statues, and antiquities of great value. The furniture is rich and elegant, and the floors are curiously inlaid with various kinds of wood, and kept always in a state of shining brightness. The fortifications of Turin are regular, and kept in excellent repair. The citadel is a regular pentagon, consisting of 5 strong bastions, and is reputed one of the strongest in Europe. There are fine walks on the ramparts, which require two hours to pass round them. There are also very fine gardens on the side of the river Po; and the house called La Charité is remarkable, as there is room for 3000 poor people. The college of the academy is very large and well built, and has a great number of ancient inscriptions. The chief trade of the city and country is in thrown silk, which is sent to England and Lyons: some of it they manufacture into excellent stockings, and silk for furniture. Turin is the see of an archbishop, and contains 110 churches or chapels, several hospitals, and about 65,000 inhab. The French besieged this city, in 1706, for upwards of three months, but were totally defeated, and compelled to raise the siege by Prince Eugene and the Duke of Savoy. Lat. 45 5 N lon. 7 45 E.

TURK MOUNTAIN, in Kerry, Munster. It is situated near Killarney Lake, and affords one of the most beautiful natural prospects in the world.

TURKESTAN, or TURAN, a country of Asia, bounded on the N by deserts, on the E by Kalmuc Tartary, on the S by Bukharia, and on the W by Charasm, near 300 m. in length, and not much less in breadth. It is divided between two Tartar khans or chiefs; one of whom, residing at Taschkant, possesses the eastern part; the other, who possesses the western part, resides at Turkestan or Taraz (situated on a small river that runs into the Sir, in lat. 44 45 N and lon. 69 13 E.) The latter is generally called the Khan of the Karakalpacks. In a large sense, Turkestan includes all the country between Russia, Bukharia, the Caspian Sea, and Chinese Tartary, extending not less than 700 m. from E to W and 350 from N to S.

TURKEY, a very large empire, extending over part of Europe, Asia, and Africa. Turkey in Europe contains Bessarabia, Moldavia, Wallachia, Bulgaria, Servia, Bosnia, Romania, Macedonia, Janna, Livadia, Epirus, Albania, part of Dalmatia, the Morea, and the islands of the Archipelago. Turkey in Asia contains the countries of Irak-Arabia, Diarbeck, Curdistan, Turcomania, part of Circassia, Natolia, and Syria, with Palestine. In Africa, the Turks have still a precarious sovereignty over Egypt and part of Nubia. Constantinople is the capital of all Turkey. In general the Turks are moderate in eating, and lovers of rest and idleness; and by their haughtiness, despise manufactures, improvements, and traffic. Polygamy is allowed among them; but their wives are no more than four in number. They are charitable towards strangers, let their religion be what it will, and no nation suffers adversity with greater patience than they. The grand signior is absolute master of the goods and lives of his subjects: he assumes the titles of God upon Earth, the Shadow of God, the Brother of the Sun and Moon, the Disposer of Crowns, &c. The grand vizier is the chief in power next the emperor, with a salary of about 600,000 dollars a year, exclusive of presents and other perquisites. Here, however, it may be observed, that though the grand signior has such prodigious power, he seldom extends it to those that live a private life, for these may remain as quiet as in any other part of the world. The Turks were originally a Scythian, or Tartar nation, dwelling betwixt the Black and Caspian Seas, and became first known in the 7th century, when Herodius, Emperor of the East, took them into his service; after which the Arabian and Saracen caliphs had particular bodies of them for guards, and filled their armies with them. Having gradually got the power into their own hands, several governors of this nation revolted from the caliphs. In the year 1214, Schah Solyman, Prince of Nera, a town on the Caspian Sea, passed Mount Caucasus with an army of 50,000 men, making himself master of several countries and places in Lesser Asia. His grandson, Othman, in the year 1300, at the city of Karahissar, assumed the title of emperor of the Othmans, and called his people after his own name. Exclusive of many other towns, in 1326, he took Prusa, in Bithynia, now called Bursa, which his son and successor, Orchan, made the seat of his empire. Orchan sent his two sons, Solyman and Amurath, on an expedition into Europe; the former of whom reduced the city of Gallipoli, and the latter took Tyrilos. Amurath, succeeding his father in 1360, conquered Ancyra, Adrianople, and Philippopolis. In 1362, he instituted the janizaries, over ran Servia, and fell upon Macedonia and Albania. His son and successor, Bajazet, was successful both in Europe and Asia, defeating the Christians near Nicopolis; but, in 1401, he himself was routed and taken prisoner by Tamerlane. His son Amurath distinguished himself by several important enterprises, and particularly in the year 1444, gained a signal victory over the Hungarians, near Varna. Mahomet II. the greatest, or perhaps most fortunate, of all the emperors, in the year 1456, made himself master of Constantinople, reducing the whole Grecian empire under his dominion. He subdued twelve kingdoms, and took 200 towns. Bajazet II. Selim I. and Solyman I. enlarged the Turkish empire, in Europe, Asia, and Africa; but the succeeding emperors have not been so fortunate. In the succession to the empire, no regard is paid to age or birthright, the Turks thinking it sufficient, if, in their elections, they keep to the Ottoman family. Women, however, are excluded from the throne. The number of the janizaries, who are all infantry, and the flower of the Turkish forces, is generally 40,000. The navy is laid up at Constantinople, near the arsenal, and consists of about 40 men of war, exclusive of auxiliary and hired ships, and galleys of two, three, and four benches of oars. The English trade here has for some years been greatly on the decline. In the islands, the merchants are generally French. The Turks believe in one God, and that his great prophet is Mahomet.

TURKEY, a town of Georgia, in S. America.

Turlamore, in Clare, Munster.

TUSCANY, formerly a State of Italy, situated between the Mediterranean, the pope's territories, the Modenese, and the State of Lucca, but erected by Buonaparte into a kingdom, called by the antient name of Etruria, in the year 1793. It is about 115 m. in length and 80 in breadth, exclusive of some parts distributed in the territories of Modena, Lucca, and Genoa. It is watered by several rivers, of which the Arno is the chief. There are several mountains, in which are found mines of divers sorts, such as iron, alum, and vitriol. They have also quarries of marble, alabaster, and porphyry, besides hot-baths and mineral waters. Many parts of it are fruitful in corn and wine, and produce plenty of citrons, oranges, lemons, pomegranates, olives, and other fruits. The inhab. apply themselves to trade, and have established divers manufactories, particularly of silks, stuffs, fine earthenware, and gilt leather. This duchy is divided into three parts; namely, the Florentino, the Pisano, and the Siennese, to which some add the islands. Florence is the capital, which see.

NW of Ingleton. Twickbere, Devons. near Merland. Twickenham, a very pleasant village of Middl. seated on the Thames, with several fine houses and handsome villas. The church, an elegant Doric building, is remarkable for being the burial-place of the celebrated Mr. Pope, and his parents, to the memory of whom respectively, a monument is erected by Warburton, and by Pope himself. The celebrated villa of Pope is now that of the Dowager Countess Howe. In Pope's life time, the house was humble and confined; the centre building only was his residence. Sir W. Stanhope, who purchased it on his death, added the two wings, and enlarged the gardens. Lord Mendip stuccoed the front of the house, and adorned it in an elegant style. The lawn has been also enlarged. Towards the margin of the river, propped with uncommon care, stand the two weeping willows, planted by Pope himself. These trees, one of which is one of the finest of its kind, and considered as a vegetable curiosity, are as flourishing as ever. Slips of it are annually transmitted to different parts; and in 1789, the empress of Russia had some planted in her own garden at Petersburgh. The once celebrated grotto is almost brought to ruin, from the dilapidations of time, and the pious thefts of visitors. It no longer forms a "camera obscura;" the "thin alabaster lamp" no longer "irradiates the centre of it," and even the "perpetual rill that echoed through the cavern, day and night," is no longer in existence. It is 11 m. WSW of London. Twicross, Leicesters. SE of Hog's Norton. Twidall, Kent, near Gillingham. Twidnack, Cornw. in Lalant parish. Twiford, Berks. between Maidenhead and Reading, near the conflux of the Thames and the Loddon, over which last it has a mill and 4 bridges. Twiford, Bucks. NE of Bicester. Twiford, Derbys. in Barrow parish. Twiford, Dorsets. 3 of Shaftesbury. Twiford, Hants, 2 m. from Winchester. Twiford, Leicesters. NE of Bilsdon. Twiford, Norf. near Foulsham. Twiford Bridge, Kent, near Nettlested. Twiford, E. and W. Middl. near Wemley Green and the Brent, between Holsden Green and Perivale. Twigworth, near Gloucester. Twineham, Sussex, E of Shermanbury. Twining, Gloucester, 3 m. N of Tewkesbury. In this parish, on the top of a little head of land, which stands on a great eminence above the meadows next the Severn, is a camp, consisting of several acres of ground, and fortified all round with double entrenchments. It surveys the river for a considerable length, and commands a great extent of country. From some Roman coins found here, it is supposed to have been a Roman camp. Twinstead, Essex, E of Castle Henningham. Twitching, Devons. NE of S. Moulton. Twitham, Kent, near Wingham. Twiverton, Somersets. 2 m. SW of Bath. Twiwell, Northamptons. between Thrapston and Kettering. Twizell Castle, Northumberl. near Grindon, S of Norham, and near the junction of the rivers Till and Tweed. The river Till, which runs beneath it, is crossed by a handsome stone bridge of one arch, which is ninety feet and a half in span, and 46 high.

VALENCIA, a province of Spain, formerly a kingdom; bounded on the E and SE by the Mediterranean, on the N by Catalonia and Arragon, and on the W and SW by New Castile and Murcia. It is about 220 m. in length, and 54 in its mean breadth, and is one of the most populous, fertile, and pleasant countries in Spain; it is watered by thirty-five rivers, all of which run towards the E. In the mountains are mines of gold, silver, iron, alum, and sinopica, or blood-stone: there are also quarries of marble, jasper, &c.

VALENCIA, a city of Spain, capital of the province of the same name. It is a large place, containing about 12,000 houses within the walls, besides those in the suburbs, and in the pleasure-gardens round about it, which amount to much the same number. It has a university, founded in 1470, and consisting of several colleges. It was taken from the Moors in the 13th century, who were all expelled. The streets, which are narrow, crooked, and unpaved, are impassable after rain. The cathedral, which has a steeple 130 feet high, the palace of the viceroy, that of Ciuta, the monastery of St. Jerome, the exchange, and the arsenal, are all fine structures. It has several manufactories of cloth and silk, and there are several remains of antiquity. It is pleasantly seated on the river Guadalaviar, 20 m. from the sea, and 170 ESE of Madrid. Lat. 39 23 N lon. 0 10 W.

VALENCIA, NEW, a town of Caraccas, in Terra Firma, 6 m. W of the town of Caraccas.

VALENCIENNES, a city of Hainault, in France, in the depart. of the N. founded by the emperor Valentinian. It contains about 20,000 inhab. and it is a very important place: the citadel, and the other fortifications, are the work of Vauban. These were constructed by order of Louis XIV. who took the town by storm, in 1677, after 17 days' open trenches; and it was confirmed to him by the treaty of Nimeguen, in 1678. In 1793, it surrendered to the allied army, commanded by the Duke of York, after a severe siege. The grand square is handsome, but the streets are in general narrow, dark, and crooked. Beside lace, this place is noted for manufactures of woollen stuffs, fine linens, and cambrics. It is situated on the river Scheldt, which divides it into two parts, 17 m. NE of Cambray, and 120 NE by N of Paris.

Valenryd, a river in Merioneths. which runs into the Irish Channel, at Traeth Richa.

VALENTINE, a town in the depart. of Upper Garonne, 2 m. SW of St. Gaudens. It is the usual road into Spain.

VALENZA, a town of Milan.

VALETTA, a city of Malta, and the capital of that island, built in 1566, by the grand master, Frederick John de Valetta. It has the happiest situation imaginable, and is wonderfully strong, both by nature and art. Its walls are of large square stones, dug out of the rock, and planted with a great number of batteries. It is seated upon a peninsula, between two of the finest ports in the world, which are defended by almost impregnable fortifications. That on the SE side of the city is the largest; it runs about two m. into the heart of the island, and is so very deep, and surrounded by such high grounds and fortifications, that the largest ships of war may ride here in the most stormy weather, almost without a cable. This beautiful basin is divided into five distinct harbours, all equally safe, each capable of containing a vast number of shipping. The mouth of the harbour is scarcely a quarter of a mile broad, and is commanded, on each side, by batteries, that would tear the strongest ship to pieces before she could enter. Besides this, it is fronted by a quadruple battery, one above the other, the largest of which is level with the water's edge. The harbour on the N side, though only used for fishing, and as a place of quarantine, is likewise well defended; and in an island in the centre of it is a castle and a lazaret. The fortifications of Malta are indeed a very stupendous work. All the boasted catacombs of Rome and Naples are trifles, compared to the immense excavations that have been made in this little island. The ditches, of a vast size, are all cut out of the solid rock, and extend many miles. The Turks besieged the city in 1656; but, after many dreadful assaults, were compelled to raise the siege, with the loss of 30,000 men. The inhab. of Valetta are about 2000.

VALETTE, LA, a fort of France, near Toulon.

VALETTE, LA, a town in the depart. of Charente, 10 m. S of Angouleme.

VALLADOLID, a city of Leon, capital of a principality of the same name, with a university. It is embellished with handsome buildings, large public squares and fountains, and contains 11,000 houses, with fine long and broad streets. The market-place, called E. Campo, is 700 paces in circumf. surrounded by a great number of convents. There is another square in the middle of the city, surrounded by handsome brick houses, having under them piazzas, within which are shops. All the houses are of the same height, being four stories; and there are balconies at every window, of iron, gilt. The town-house takes up the entire side of a square. The house of the inquisition is an odd sort of a structure, for there are no windows, but a few holes to let in the light. An academy of the belles-lettres was established here in 1752. It is seated near the Douro, 52 m. SW of Burgos, and 95 N by W of Madrid.

VALLADOLID. See MECHOACAN.

VALLAIS, a county of Switzerland, called, in the middle ages, Valesia, extending from E to W about 100 m. and from N to S about 22. It is divided into Upper and Lower Vallais, and is bounded on the N by the Canton of Bern, and the Lake of Geneva; on the E by Valmaggia and Locarno; on the S by Milan, Piedmont, and Savoy; and on the W by France and Piedmont. The Upper Vallais is sovereign of the Lower Vallais, and contains seven independent dixains, or commonwealths; namely, Sion, Goms, Brieg, Visp, Leuk, Raren, and Siders. Of these, Sion is aristocratical, and the others democratical. They are called dixains, because the Upper Vallais being divided into seven, and the Lower into three districts, each division is a dixain, or tenth of the whole. The Lower Vallais is divided into bailiwicks. The Vallais contains about 100,000 inhab. who profess the Romish religion. The inhab. of the Upper Vallais are very much subject to goitres, or wens, that grow from the throat, and often increase to an enormous size. Idiotcy also remarkably abounds among them. A country entirely inclosed within high Alps, and consisting of plains, elevated valleys, and lofty mountains, must necessarily exhibit a great variety of situations, climates, and productions. Accordingly, the Vallais presents to the curious traveller a quick succession of prospects, as beautiful as they are diversified; vineyards, rich pasture grounds, covered with cattle, corn, flax, fruit-trees, and forests, occasionally bordered by naked rocks, the summits of which are covered by everlasting snow. The striking contrast between the pastoral and the sublime, the cultivated and the wild, naturally affects the mind of an observer with the most pleasing emotions. The productions of the Vallais vary also, according to the great diversity of climates by which this county is peculiarly distinguished. It has more than sufficient wine and corn for interior consumption; and a considerable quantity of both are yearly exported; the soil in the midland and lower districts being exceedingly rich and fertile. In the plains, where the heat is collected, and confined between the mountains, the harvest is generally finished in July, whereas, in the more elevated parts, barley is the only grain that can be cultivated with success; and the crop is seldom cut before November. About Sion, the fig, the melon, and all the other fruits of Italy, come to perfection. "In consequence of this singular variety of climates," says Mr. Coxe, "I tasted, in the same day, strawberries, cherries, plums, pears, and grapes, each of them the natural growth of the country." There are no manufactures of any consequence in the Vallais. The peasants, having few wants, seldom endeavour to meliorate their lands, where the soil is bad; nor to draw the most advantage from those that are fertile.

VENEZUELA, a pretty populous province of Terra Firma, in S. America, lying on a gulf of the same name, about 50 m. in length. It is bounded on the N by the Gulf of Mexico, on the S by New Granada, on the W by the province of St. Martha and Popayan, and on the E by that of Cumana. Near the sea-coast are high mountains, the tops of which are barren; but the valleys are fertile, producing plenty of corn, rich pasturage, sugar, tobacco, cotton, sarsaparilla, and fruits. There are also plantations of cocoa-nuts; gold is found in the sands of the rivers, and the country abounds in game and wild beasts. They often have two crops of corn in a year. Venezuela is the capital.

VENEZUELA, or CORO, a town of Terra Firma, in S. America, situated on a bay or gulf of the same name, on the Gulf of Mexico, and which communicates with the Lake Maracaibo, by a narrow strait, in lat. 10 35 N lon. 68 50 W.

VENICE, a city of Italy, one of the most celebrated in the world, and lately capital of a republic of the same name, in the Dogado, with a university. It stands on 72 little islands, though some reckon only 60 in the Gulf of Venice. The approach to the city is marked by rows of stakes, or pales, on each side, which direct vessels of a certain burden to avoid the shallows; it makes a very grand appearance at a distance, as seeming to float on the sea; or rather, with its stately buildings and steeples, rising, as it were, out of it. The marshy lake on which Venice stands, about 5 m. from the main land, is a kind of small inner gulf, separated from the large one by some islands, at a few miles distance, and which, on the appearance of an enemy's fleet, can be cut away. These islands in a great measure break the force of the Adriatic storms, before they reach the Laguna, or Lake; yet, in very high winds, the navigation of the lake is dangerous to gondolas, and sometimes the gondoliers (as their watermen are called) do not trust themselves even in the canals within the city. This is not so great an inconvenience to the inhab. as might be imagined; for most of the houses have a door opening upon a canal, and another communicating with the street; by means of which, and of the bridges, a person may go to almost any part of the city, by land, as well as by water. From its insular situation Venice is strong without fortifications; and the fish, which are caught at the very doors of the houses, may be reputed a good preservative against famine. The number of the inhab. is computed to be about 150,000. The houses are built on piles. The streets in general are narrow, and so are the canals, except the Grand canal, which is very broad, and has a serpentine course through the middle of the city. It is said that there are 500 bridges in Venice, though some say only 450, great and small, and the greater part of them built of stone; but what pass for such are only single narrow arches, thrown over the canals. The highest and longest is the Rialto, which, in the middle of the city, crosses the great canal, at its narrowest part, where it is only 40 paces broad. It consists also of one single arch, but a very noble one, 24 feet high; the foundation which takes up 90 feet, rests on 12,000 elm piles; and it is everywhere incrusted with marble. The beauty of it is inspired by two rows of booths, or shops, which divides its upper surface into 3 narrow streets. At each end is an ascent of 56 steps. The view from the Rialto is equally lively and magnificent; the Grand Canal, covered by boats and gondolas (which strike the eye, however, with a mournful appearance, being all either lined with black serge, or painted black), and flanked on each side by magnificent palaces, churches, and spires. But this fine prospect is almost the only one in Venice; for, except the Grand Canal, and the Canal Regio, all the others are narrow. Some of them have no quays, and the water literally washes the houses. In rowing along these wretched canals, there is scarcely one agreeable object to cheer the sight, and the stench, which, at certain seasons, exhales from the water, is quite offensive. The only place where a person can walk with ease and safety is in the Piazza di St. Marco; a kind of irregular quadrangle, formed by a number of buildings, all singular in their kind: namely, the Ducal Palace; the churches of St. Mark and St. Geminiano; the Old and New Procuraties, a fine range of buildings, in which are the Museum, the Public Library, and nine large apartments belonging to the procurators of St. Mark. All these buildings are of marble. The patriarchal church of St. Mark, though one of the richest and most expensive in the world, does not strike the eye very much at first. The architecture is of a mixed kind, mostly Gothic; yet many of the pillars are the Grecian orders. The outside is incrusted with marble: the inside, ceiling, and floor, are all of the finest marble, as are the numerous pillars; and the whole is crowned by five domes; but all this labour and expence have been directed by a very moderate share of taste. The front, which looks to the palace, has five brass gates, with historical bas-relievos; over the principal gate are placed the four famous bronze horses, said to be the workmanship of Lysippus; they were given to the emperor Nero, by Tiridates, king of Armenia: the fiery spirit of their countenances, and their animated attitudes, are perfectly agreeable to their original destination, of being harnessed to the chariot of the sun. Nero placed them on the triumphal arch consecrated to him: they were removed to Constantinople, placed in the Hippodrome, by Constantine, and remained there till the taking of Constantinople by the French and Venetians, in the beginning of the 13th century, when they were conveyed to Venice. The treasury of St. Mark is very rich in jewels and relics. The ducal palace is an immense building, partly Gothic and partly modern, and mostly of marble. Besides the apartments of the doge, there are halls and chambers for the senate, and all the different councils and tribunals. The principal entrance is by a spacious stair, called the Giant's Stair, on account of two colossal statues, in white marble, of Mars, and Neptune, placed at the top. Under the portico are the gaping mouths of lions, to receive anonymous letters, informations of treasonable practices, and accusations of magistrates for abuses in office. From the palace is a covered bridge of communication to a state prison, on the other side of the canal; prisoners pass to and from the courts over this bridge, which is named Ponte del Sospiri, the Bridge of Sighs. The apartments of the ducal palace, as well as the churches and convents, are ornamented by Titian, Paul Veronese, Tintoret, Palma, the Bassans, &c. with paintings which far surpass those of Rome itself. Within the palace is a little arsenal, which communicates with the hall of the great council. Here a great number of muskets are kept, ready charged, with which the nobles may arm themselves on any sudden insurrection. The lower gallery, or piazza, under the palace is called the Broglio. In this the noble Venetians walk and converse: it is only here and at council, that they have opportunities of meeting together; for they seldom visit openly, or in a family way, at each other's houses; and secret meetings would give umbrage to the state inquisitors; they chuse, therefore, to transact their business on this public walk. People of inferior rank seldom remain on the Broglio, for any length of time, when the nobility are there. There is an opening from St. Mark's Place to the sea, on which stand two lofty pillars of granite. Criminals, condemned to suffer death privately, are executed between these two pillars. The arsenal of Venice is a fortification of between 2 and 3 m. in compass: it is at once a dock-yard, and a vast repository for naval and military stores. Here the Venetians build their ships, cast their cannon, make their cables, sails, anchors, &c. The Venetians have a flourishing trade in silk manufactures, bone-lace, all sorts of glasses and mirrors, which make their principal employments. The sons are generally of the same business as the father. The handsome structure called Il Fontica-di-Tedeschi, containing 500 rooms, is that where the German merchants lay their commodities. There are two academies of paintings, to which belong very skilful masters. Provisions are in great plenty at Venice, but the spring water being very indifferent, almost every house has a cistern, into which the rain water is conveyed n the roof and clarified by being filtered rough sand. Venice contains 70 parish churches, besides others; 54 convents of monks; 26 nunneries; 17 rich hospitals; 18 oratories; 40 religious fraternities, with their chapels; 53 squares, &c. It is 70 m. E by N of Mantua, and 140 E of Milan. Lat. 45 26 N lon. 12 10 E.

VENICE, a republic of Italy, formerly attached to the house of Austria, which comprehends the following provinces: the Dogado, Paduano, Vicentino, Veronese, Bresciano, Bergamo, Cremasco, Polesino-di Rovigo, Trevisana, Feltrino, Bellunese, Cadorino, and great part of Friuli and Istria. To these may be added a part of Dalmatia, the islands of Corfu, Zante, Cephalonia, Paxu, Antipaxu, and some others. In the 4th century, when Attila, king of Huns, called the Scourge of God, ravaged the N part of Italy, many of the inhab. abandoned their country, and retired into the islands of the Adriatic Sea. As these islands are near each other, they found means to join them together, by driving piles on the side of the canals, and on which they built houses, and thus the superb city of Venice had its beginning. The government of the republic of Venice is aristocratic, for none can have any share in it but the nobles. The doge is elected by a plurality of voices, and keeps his dignity for life, and they make use of gold and silver balls, which are put in a vessel, and serve for balloting. Those who draw nine golden balls first, elect 40 counsellors, who draw 12 others. These elect 25 other counsellors, who draw 9 golden balls. The 9 elect 40 counsellors, who draw 11. Those that have the 11, chuse 41 counsellors, who proceed to the election, till 25 votes, or more, fall upon the same person, who is then declared doge. After this election, they place the ducal cap upon his head, upon which he takes possession of the doge's palace. He never uncovers his head to any person, because he does not wear the cap in his own name, but in that of the republic. When there are any pompous formalities, a nobleman carries the sword, which is an emblem of the supreme authority; but it is not before the doge, but before the senate, to show that the power is lodged in them. The office of the doge is to marry the Adriatic Sea, in the name of the republic, which he does, by dropping a gold ring into it annually; to preside in all assemblies of the state; to have an eye over all the members of the magistracy; and to nominate to all the benefices annexed to the church of St. Mark. On the other hand, he is to determine nothing without the consent of the council; he is not to open any letter addressed to the republic, or that comes from the republic; he is not to receive any present; he is not to leave the city without permission of the states; he is not to choose an assistant; and he is never to resign his dignity. In short, he is a prisoner in the city, and out of it he is no more than a private person. There are five councils, the first of which is composed of the doge, and six counsellors, called the Signiora. The next is the Consiglio Grand, or Grand Council, in which all the nobles, who are said to be near 2000, have a voice. The third is the Consiglio-del-Pregadi, which consists of about 250 of the nobility. The fourth is the Consiglio-Proprio, whose members are called Savii Grandi, or the Grand Sages, which join to the Signiora, and consist of 28 assessors. This gives audience to the ambassadors. The fifth and last is Il Collegio-delli-dieci, and composed of 10 counsellors, who take notice of all criminal matters; and the doge himself when accused, is obliged to appear before them. There is no appeal from this council, and it is a dreadful misfortune to be cited before it. The Venetians are Romanists, but they tolerate the Greeks and Mahometans. The protestants are not allowed the public exercise of their religion; but they are not otherwise molested. The head of the clergy is the patriarch of Venice, who must be a noble Venetian, and is elected by the senate. This patriarch, in consequence of the policy of the senate, has scarce any power over the priests and monks, who are greatly corrupted. There is another patriarch belonging to Venice, whose authority extends over Friuli, Istria, and most of the bishops on the main land. The tribunal of the inquisition at Venice is composed of the pope's nuncio, the patriarch of Venice, and the father-inquisitor; but as these had need of a bridle, they have added three counsellors to the number, without whose consent they can determine nothing. Their famous carnival begins with the year, and continues till Lent; all which time is employed in sports and diversions. Then libertinism reigns through the city, and thousands of foreigners frequent it from all parts of Europe. They all appear in masks, which no one dares venture to take off, and in this disguise they imitate the sports of the ancient Bacchanals; and the nearer Ash-Wednesday approaches, the more mad they are. The principal spot of the masquerade is St. Mark's Place, where there are sometimes above 15,000 people; and it swarms with harlequins, jesters, mountebanks, rope-dancers, and puppet-shows. Even the priests and monks enjoy the diversion of the carnival; but when the diversions of the carnival are over, nothing is heard from the clergy, (who are generally accounted ignorant) but sermons on repentance. Whatever degree of licentiousness may prevail among the Venetians, jealousy, poison, and the stiletto, have been long banished from their gallantry. The poorer people of Venice display some qualities very rarely to be found in that sphere of life, being remarkably sober, obliging to strangers, and gentle in their intercourse with each other. The Venetians, in general, are tall and well made; they have a ruddy brown colour, with dark eyes. The women are of an easy address, and have no aversion to cultivate an acquaintance with those strangers who are presented to them by their relations, or have been properly recommended. The number of inhab. in the city is estimated at 160,000, of the whole state at 2,500,000, and the annual revenue of the republic at 8,200,000 ducats. By a late remarkable revolution, the sovereignty of this celebrated republic, which has now continued upwards of 1300 years, in absolute freedom and independence, is entirely and for ever subverted. The French, without the show of military enterprise, suddenly made themselves masters of the city, while their troops were diffusing themselves all over the Venetian territory. Soon after, Dalmatia was taken possession of by the emperor, and immediately annexed to his dominions, together with the city of Venice, and part of the late Venetian estates in Italy, by the treaty of Udina, while the other part became an accession to the then New Cisalpine Republic.

VENICE, GULF OF, a sea between Greece and Italy, extending from lat. 45 to 45 55 N. It is the ancient Adriaticum Mare, and is still called the Adriatic.

VENLO, a town of Ruremonde, in Guelderland, formerly in alliance with the Hanseatic towns. The inhab. are mostly Romanists. In 1702, this town, with Fort St. Michael on the other side of the Maese, was taken by the army of the allies, under the Duke of Marlborough. It is seated on the E side of the river Maese, 12 m. VER DU GARD, a town in the depart. of the Gard, 6 m. SE of Uzes.

VERA, a sea-port of Spain, in Granada, 32 m. SW of Carthagena.

VERA CRUZ, a sea-port of Tlascala, in Mexico, with a secure harbour, defended by a fort upon a rock of a neighbouring island, on the coast of the Gulf of Mexico. This is occasionally one of the most considerable places in Spanish America for trade, it being the natural centre of the American treasure, and the magazine of all the merchandise sent from Mexico, as well as of that transported hither from Europe. It also receives a prodigious quantity of East-India goods overland from Acapulco, brought from the Phillippine Isles. Upon the annual arrival of the flota here from Old Spain, a fair is opened, which lasts many weeks, when this place may be said to become, of a sudden, immensely rich. At this period, such crowds of Spaniards arrive from all parts of America that they erect tents for them while the fair lasts. It is surrounded by a wall, and the air is so unhealthy here, from the bogs around it, and the barrenness of the soil, that when the fair is over there are few inhab. except mulattoes and blacks. It is 180 m. ESE of Mexico. Lat. 19 12 N lon. 97 25 W.

VERA CRUZ, OLD, a sea-port of Tlascala, in Mexico, 15 m. NNW of Vera Cruz. Here Ferdinando Cortez landed with 500 Spaniards, when he undertook the conquest of Mexico.

VERA PAZ, a province of Mexico, bounded on the N by Yucatan and Chiapa, on the E by the bay and province of Honduras, on the S by Guatimala, and on the W by Soconusco. It is about 120 m. in length, and 70 in breadth, and abounds with mountains and thick forests of cedar, &c. in which are many wild beasts, and yet there are many fertile valleys, which feed a great number of horses and mules. The country is subject to earthquakes, thunder, and 9 months' rain. The principal commodities are drugs, cocoa, cotton, wool, and honey. The capital of the same name, but inconsiderable, is situated in lat. 15 10 N lon. 90 54 W besides which there are many towns and villages of the native Americans.

VERAGUA, a province of Mexico, so called from a river of the same name. It is bounded on the E by Darien, on the W by Costa Rica, on the N by the Atlantic, and on the S by the Pacific Ocean. It is a mountainous and barren country, exposed to the incursions of the Indians. A good deal of gold and silver is obtained here. Conception is the capital.

VERBERIE, a town in the depart. of Oise, seated on the river Oise, 10 m. NE of Senlis.

Verby, Yorks. N of Gisborough.

VERCELLI, a town of Piedmont, capital of a considerable lordship. The inhab. are about 20,000. Here are two cathedral churches, 12 others, 2 abbeys, 19 convents of both sexes, 2 priories, 2 provostships, 3 poor-houses, and 5 hospitals. It is 10 m. NNW of Casal, and 40 NE of Turin.

VERCHOLENSK, a town of Russia, in the government of Irkutsk, 120 m. N of Irkutsk.

VERCHOVAGSKOI, a town of Russia, in the government of Vologda, 48 m. S of Vielsk.

VERD, CAPE, a promontory on the W coast of Africa, 45 m. NW of the mouth of the river Gambia. Lat. 14 45 N lon. 17 28 W.

VERD, CAPE DE, islands seated in the Atlantic Ocean, about 400 m. W of Cape Verd, and between the 14th and 18th deg. of N lat. They are so called from the cape of that name, or, according to some authors, from a green plant which grows in the sea near them, resembling water-cresses, and bearing a fruit something like a gooseberry. This plant, called sargosso, is sometimes found so thick, as to impede vessels in their course. The principal are 10 in number, lying in a semicircle; their nes are St. Antonio, St. Vincent, St. Lucia, t. Nicholas, the Isle of Sal, Bona-Vista, Mayo, St. Jago, Fuego, and Bravo; the others, 4 or more, are only uninhabited rocks. They are, in general, mountainous, and the soil is often stony and barren; nevertheless the lower hills are covered with a beautiful verdure, as well as the extensive valleys between them, but with little water, in general, except what is found in ponds and wells. Both the ground and air are so extremely hot, that one can hardly stand in places exposed to the sun. It is reckoned dangerous also to pass the night in the open air, for the great heat is often succeeded by a sudden cold, which is said to prove mortal to such as are exposed to it. Many parts produce rice, maize, bananas, lemons, oranges, citrons, pomegranates, figs, and melons; grapes also are gathered twice a year. The inhab. about 100,000 in number, catch and salt a great number of turtles, which they send to America; they also manufacture leather and salt, and procure from Africa, slaves, sugar, rice, cotton stuffs, ambergris, civet, ivory, saltpetre, and gold. The uninhabited islands are all stocked with cows, goats, hogs, asses, mules, &c. under their particular lords. These islands are said to have been known to the ancients under the name of Gorgades, but were not visited by the moderns till the year 1499, when they were discovered by Antonio Nolli, a Genoese, in the service of the Infant Don Henry, of Portugal; at that time they were almost uninhabited. Two of them, St. Jago and St. Philip, depend immediately on the king, and are the only ones that are fortified. The governor exercises a despotic military power. Few whites are now to be seen; the influence of the climate has entirely changed the ancient Portuguese to negroes.

VERDEN, a duchy of Lower Saxony, having Bremen on the N and W and Lunenburg on the E and S. It extends both in length and breadth about 24 m. It consists chiefly of heaths and high dry lands and forests, but there is good marsh land on the rivers Weser and Aller. In 1712 the Danes wrested this duchy from Sweden, and, in 1715, ceded it to the king of Great Britain, as elector of Hanover; which cession, in 1718, was confirmed by the Swedes. This duchy has the same regency with that of Bremen. The inhab. are Lutherans.

VERDEN, the capital of the duchy of the same name, in Lower Saxony, containing 4 churches, and a Latin school. It is seated on the Aller, 40 m. NW of Hanover.

VERDUN, a town in the depart. of Meuse, noted for fine sweetmeats. It is seated on the river Maese, which runs through the middle, 33 m. NNW of Toul, and 150 E of Paris.

VERDUN, a town in the depart. of Upper Garonne, seated on the river Garonne, 18 m. NNW of Toulouse.

Vere, a river in Hertfords. which runs into the Coln, about 2 m. SE from St. Albans; also a county on the S side of the island of Jamaica. Veres, or Verse Wotton, Dorsets. W of Bridport.

VERMAND, a town in the depart. of Aisne, 6 m. W of St. Quintin. Before the revolution, it was capital of a territory called the Vermandois.

VERMANTON, a town in the depart. of Yonne, 10 m. SE of Auxerre.

Verminster, Dorsets. NE of Sturminster.

VERMONT, one of the United States of N. America, bounded on the N by Canada; on the E by the river Connecticut, which divides it from New Hampshire; on the S by Massachusetts; and on the W by New York. It is 155 m. long, and 60 broad, and is divided into 7 counties, and contains 217,913 inhab. chiefly emigrants from Connecticut and Massachusetts. A chain of high mountains, running N and S, divides this State nearly in the centre, between the river Connecticut and Lake Champlain. The height of land is generally from 20 to 30 m. from the river, and about the same distance from the New York line. The natural growth upon this mountain is hemlock, pine, spruce, and other ever-greens: hence it has always a green appearance, and on this account, has obtained the descriptive name, from the French Verd Mont, Green Mountain. On some high parts of this mountain, snow lies till May, and sometimes till June. The country is generally hilly, but not rocky. It is finely watered; the soil is very fertile, and there is not a better climate in the world. The principal town is Bennington, but the assembly generally hold their sessions at Windsor.

VERNEUIL, a town in the depart. of Eure, seated on the river Aure, 22 m. SSW of Evreux, and 65 W of Paris.

VERNEUIL, a town in the depart. of Allier, 15 m. S of Moulins.

VERNOIS, a town and river of Russia, in the government of Rezzan.

VERNON, a town in the depart. of Eure, seated on the river Seine, 27 m. SSE of Rouen, and 42 NW of Paris.

Vernon, Chesh. SW of Sandbach.

VEROLI, a town in the Campagna di Roma, containing 8 churches, and 3 convents. It is 8 m. S of Alatri.

VERONA, a city of Italy, in the late territory of Venice, and capital of the Veronese, fortified in the ancient manner, and defended by three castles. The inhab. amount to near 50,000. The streets are mostly narrow, crooked, and dirty, and the houses are mean; but there is a large, handsome square, called the Piazza-d'Armi, and a pretty long, good street, called the Corso; and its outlets are more delightful than the city is within. The bishop and governor have superb palaces, but the most magnificent is that of Count Maffei. The town-house and the opera-house are fine buildings; but the most celebrated structure here is the ancient amphitheatre built by the Romans, in which are 44 rows of benches, of white marble, still entire (which will hold, according to Count Maffei, 22,184 spectators), on which the people sat. But very little, however, of this valuable piece of antiquity appears ancient, having been carefully repaired from time to time at the city's expence. The outward walls of the upper story are wanting. In the Academy of the Phil-Harmoniacs, is a large collection of ancient inscriptions and monuments, in the Hetrurian, Punic, Egyptian, Greek, and Latin languages, either found or brought here for a great many years past. It is seated on the river Adige, on which they transport very good linen, woollen, stuffs, olives, oil, wine, sewing-silk, and medicinal plants, growing on Mount Balbo, &c. to Venice, and over which it has four stone bridges, the principal of which is 348 feet long; 62 m. W of Venice, and 18 NNE of Mantua.

VERONESE, a territory of Italy, about 47 m. in length, and 25 in breadth. It is one of the most fertile countries in Italy, abounding in corn, wine, fruits, and cattle. The Venetians became masters of the city and territory, in 1409.

VERREZ, a town of Aosta, Piedmont.

Verrian, Cornw. 3 m. from Tregony, and N of Gwyndrith Bay.

VERSAILLES, a town in the depart. of Seine and Oise, 12 m. SW of Paris. In the reign of Louis XIII. it was only a small village. This prince built here a hunting seat in 1630. Although the situation was low, and very unfavourable, Louis XIV. built a magnificent palace here, which was the usual residence of the kings of France, till the 6th of October, 1789, when the late unhappy Louis XVI. and his family were removed from it to the Tuilleries. The buildings and the gardens are adorned with a vast number of statues, canals, fountains, &c. and the water-works are much admired. The great gallery is thought to be as curious a piece of workmanship of that kind, as any in the world: and the chapel is no less admired for its fine architecture and ornaments. The gardens, with the park, are 5 m. in circumf. and surrounded by walls. There are three fine avenues to Versailles, one of which is the common road to Paris, the other comes from Seaux, and the third from St. Cloud.

VERSAILLES, a town of Kentucky, 10 m. SE of Frankfort.

VERTUS, a town in the depart. of Marne, 17 m. SW of Chalons, and 78 E of Paris.

VERUE, or VERRUA, a town of Asti, Piedmont, seated on a hill, near the river Po. It was taken by the French in 1705, after a siege of six months, when it was reduced to a heap of ruins. It was afterwards restored to the duke of Savoy.

VERVIERS, a town of Franchemont, in Liege. The inhab. carry on a very considerable traffic in cloth, which they export to Germany, Italy, Turkey, &c.

VERVINS, a town in the depart. of Aisne, 110 m. NNE of Paris, noted in history for a treaty of peace concluded here, in 1598, between Henry IV. king of France, and Philip II. king of Spain.

VERULAM, the vestiges of a Roman town, in Hertfords. on the Verulam river, opposite St. Albans. By Tacitus it was called Verulamium, and by Ptolemy Urolamium. After the departure of the Romans, it was entirely ruined in the wars between the Britons and Saxons; and nothing remains of it but the ruins of walls, tesselated pavements, and Roman coins, which are sometimes dug up. On the NE corner is a piece of the wall, 3 yards and a half thick, composed of flints, and layers of Roman bricks. The site of it has long ago been converted into corn-fields.

Verwood, Dorsets. near Winborn-Abbas.

VESELIZE, a town in the depart. of Meurthe, seated on the river Brenon, 15 m. SE of Toul, and 162 SSE of Paris.

VESLE, two rivers of France, the former of which runs into the Aisne, near Veilly; and the latter runs into the Saone, opposite Varenne le Grand.

VESLY. See VEILLY.

VESOUL, a town in the depart. of Upper Saone, 22 m. N of Besançon, and 200 SE of Paris.

VESPRIN, a town which gives name to a county of Hungary, 32 m. SSE of Raab.

VESUVIUS, a celebrated volcano of Italy, in Naples. The first eruption of this volcano was in the year 79 of the Christian era, under Titus. It was accompanied by an earthquake, which overturned several cities, particularly Pompeii and Herculaneum. This eruption proved fatal to Pliny, the naturalist. "Great quantities of ashes and sulphureous smoke," says Dion Cassius, "were carried not only to Rome, but also beyond the Mediterranean into Africa, and even to Egypt. Birds were suffocated in the air, and fell down upon the ground; and fishes perished in the neighbouring waters, which were made hot, and infected by it." Sir William Hamilton mentions, that the eruption in 1767 was the 27th from the time of Titus, since which there have been nine others; those of 1779 and 1794 being the most violent and alarming. In this last, 5000 acres of rich vineyards were destroyed, and most of the houses in the town of Torre-del-Greco buried, or rendered uninhabitable. Vesuvius is 6 m. E of Naples.

VEVAY, a town and bailiwick of Bern, in Switzerland, with a manufacture of hats, and a large trade in cheese. Here General Ludlow retired on the restoration, and died in 1693. It is seated near the head of the Lake of Geneva, 10 m. SSE of Lausanne.

VEURDRE, a town in the depart. of Allier, seated on the river Allier, 17 m. NNW of Moulines.

VEZELAY, a town in the depart. of Yonne, seated on a mountain, 20 m. S of Auxerre, and 117 S by E of Paris.

UFA, one of the 41 governments of Russia, formerly included in the government of Orengh. It is divided into the two provinces of fa and Orenburgh.

UFA, a town of Russia, capital of a government of the same name. It is seated a few m. below the mouth of the river Ufa, 632 m. ESE of Moscow.

Ufcolumb, Devons. on the river Columb, 10 m. from Bradninch. Ufcot, Wilts. NW of Marlborough. Ufferton, Durham, W of Sunderland. Uffington, Lincolns. near Stamford. Uffington, Berks, near Wantage. Uffington, Shrops. NE of Shrewsbury. Ufford, Northamptons. near Stamford. Ufford, Suf. NE of Woodbridge. Ufton, Warwicks. between Itchington and Offchurch. Ugbear, Devons. W of the Avon, and SW of Brent. Ugborough, Cornw. near the Tamar, 3 m. from Modbury. Ugbrook, Devons. 2 m. from Chudleigh. Near it is a cave that runs a great way under ground.

UGENTO, a town of Otranto in Naples.

Ugford, Wilts, near Wilton. Uggescomb, Dorsets. near Portisham. Ugham, Northumberl. near the Lyn, NE of Morpeth. Ughtershaw, Yorks. N of Langstredale Chace. Ugleberb, Yorks. S of Whitby. Ugley, Essex, N of Stanted-Montfichet, and E of the Stort.

UGONGA, a town of Piedmont, 45 m. NW of Milan.

Ugshall, Suf. W of Easton Ness. Ugthorp, Yorks. near Moulgrave-Castle.

VIADANA, a town of Mantua.

VIANA, a town of Spain, in Navarre; and a town of Galicia.

VIANA, a sea-port of Portugal, in Entre-Minho-e-Douro, containing 2 churches, 7 convents, an hospital, and about 7000 inhab. It is seated at the mouth of the river Lima, 36 m. N of Oporto.

VIANEN, a town of S. Holland, on the river Lech, 7 m. S of Utrecht.

VIASMA, a village, in the district of Smolensko, Russia, between Moscow and Smolensko, noted for a battle in 1812, in which the grand army of Buonaparte was defeated by the Russians.

VIATKA, a town of Russia, capital of a government of the same name, seated on the river Viatka, 440 m. ENE of Moscow.

VIATKA, a government of the Russian empire, which was formerly a province of Casan. The capital is of the same name.

VIBERSKOI, a government of Russia, of which Viborg is the capital.

VIBORG, a sea-port town of Russia, in the Gulf of Finland, 68 m. NNW of St. Petersburg; has a considerable export trade.

VIC, a town in the depart. of Meurthe, 12 m. NE of Nanci, and 197 E of Paris.

VIC, a town of Catalonia, formerly more considerable than at present; however, it still contains handsome buildings. It is 30 m. NNE of Barcelona.

VIC BIGORRE, a small town in the depart. of the Upper Pyrenees, situated on the river Adour, 12 m. N of Tarbes.

VIC FEZENSAC, a town in the depart. of Gers, 15 m. NNW of Auch.

VIC-LE-COMPTE, a town in the depart. of Puy-de-Dome, 12 m. SSE of Clermont, with mineral springs about 1 m. from it.

VICEGRAD, a town of Hungary, on the Danube, 9 m. SSE of Gran.

VICENTINO, a territory of Italy, lately subject to the Venetians, about 40 m. in length, and from 10 to 24 in breadth; bounded on the N by the Tyrolese; on the E by the Trevisan and the Paduan; on the S by the Paduan; and on the W by the Veronese and Tyrolese. It is a pleasant and fertile country, abounding in game, and is called the garden and flesh-market of Venice. The wine is excellent, and the butter and cheese very good. Here are also great numbers of mulberry-trees, which serve to nourish silkworms; and there are mines of silver and iron, and quarries of stone, almost as fine as marble.

VICENZA, a city of Italy, capital of the Vicentino, with a bishop's see. It is adorned with several regular, stately palaces, and other elegant edifices (particularly the council-house, the grandeur of which is heightened by two very lofty columns), and it has a fine square, with piazzas under the houses. There are several other squares, and 57 churches, parochial and conventual, with several good hospitals. The great altar of the Dominican church is an august piece of Palladio's architecture. There is an academy for the improvement of the Italian language, whose members meet in the Olympic theatre, a master-piece of workmanship by the same skilful architect. The seats are disposed in the manner of the ancient amphitheatre, and the perspective is surprisingly beautiful. It is seated in a fertile plain, between two hills, at the union of two small rivers, the Bachiglione and Rerone, 35 m. W of Venice.

VICHI, a town in the depart. of Allier, famous for the mineral waters near it. It is seated on the river Allier, 3 m. SW of Cusset, and 180 S by E of Paris.

VIELMUR, a town in the depart. of the Tarn, 9 m. W of Castres.

VIETSK, a town of Russia, in the government of Vologda, situated on the Vaga, 156 m. ENE of Vologda.

VIENNA, the capital of the circle of Austria, in Germany, and of the whole German empire, where the emperor resides. The city contains 66,000 inhab. and the suburbs 178,000. The streets in general are narrow, and crooked, and the houses built high, and some of them as many stories below, as above ground, and contain from 48 to 52 persons to each house. Some of the public buildings are magnificent; but they appear externally to no great advantage, on account of the narrowness of the streets. The chief of them are the Imperial Palace, the Library, and the Museum; the palaces of the princes, Lichtenstein, Eugene, &c. No houses without the walls, are allowed to be built nearer the glacis than 600 yards; so that there is a circular field of that breadth all round the town, which has a beautiful and salutary effect. The suburbs are not near so populous, in proportion to their size, as the town; as many houses in the former have extensive gardens belonging to them, and many families, who live during the winter within the fortifications, spend the summer in the suburbs. The second floor of all burghers' houses, is allotted for the reception of officers of the imperial court, and the owners can only purchase an exemption, by paying a sum of money for the erection of barracks. Vienna contains 50 churches or chapels, and 21 convents. The cathedral is built of freestone, is 114 yards long, and 48 broad, and the steeple is 447 feet high. Here is a monument in honour of Prince Eugene of Savoy. Instead of a weathercock, there is a black spread eagle, over which is a gilded cross. Joining to this church is the archbishop's palace, the front of which is very fine. Besides the university, containing a great number of students, there is the academy of Lower Austria; and the archducal library, open every morning three or four hours to the public, containing 5 or 6000 volumes, printed in the 15th century, with a well-furnished and valuable collection of prints and useful modern books. The academy of painting is remarkable for the fine pictures it produces. The imperial cabinet is very rich in medals, and still more so in natural history. The public hospital generally contains 3000 patients. Provisions are brought here in great plenty and variety; and wild hogs, stags, with cart loads of hares, pheasants, and partridges, may be seen in the game-market. Birds of all kinds are articles of food; hawks, jays, magpies, and even bullfinches and robins; and in the fish-market are sturgeon, carp, pike, trout, tortoises, frogs, and snails. Here is a sort of a harbour on the Danube, where there are magazines of naval stores; and ships have been fitted out to serve on that river against the Turks. The manufactures of this city are numerous, and the trade extensive. Vienna has been twice ineffectually besieged by the Turks, in 1589 and 1683. At the latter period, the siege was raised by John Sobieski, king of Poland, who totally defeated the Turkish army before this place. In 1805 it was taken by the French. Vienna is seated at the place where the river Vien falls into the Danube, near the site of the ancient Vindebona, 175 m. S of Prague. Lat. 48 13 N lon. 16 28 E.

VIENNA, a town of Kentucky, 124 m. WSW of Frankfort; and a town of Maryland, on the river Nanticoke, 85 m. S of Philadelphia.

VIENNE, a city in the depart. of Isere, seated on the E bank of the Rhone, over which it had formerly a stone bridge, built in the year 1265, now destroyed, or of which only some piers remain, that render the navigation dangerous, 15 m. S of Lyons. Its commerce consists in wines, silk, and sword-blades, which last are highly esteemed. Near Vienne, on the banks of the Rhone, are produced the excellent wines of Côte Rotie; and the famous hermitage wines. Before the revolution, it was the see of an archbishop, and capital of a territory called the Viennois. It was anciently a Roman colony, but in the 5th century it was taken by the Burgundians, whose kings made it their place of residence. In the 9th century, it was the capital of the kingdom of Provence.

VIENNE, a depart. of France, joining on the W to that of the Two Sevres, and on the E to the depart. of the Indre. Before the revolution, it was part of Poitou. It takes its name from a river which rises in the depart. of Correze, about 3 m. E from Tarnac, passes by or near to Tarnac, Aimoutter, St. Leonard, Limoges, Aix, St. German, Isle Jourdain, Chinon, &c. and falls into the Loire, in the depart. of the Indre and Loire, about 5 m. above Sautaur.

VIENNE, UPPER, a depart. of France, composed of the ci-devant Limousin. Limoges is the capital.

VIERRADEN, a town of Uckermark, Brandenburg.

VIGAN, a town in the depart. of Gard, 30 m. NW of Nismes.

VIGEVANO, a town of Piedmont.

VIGNAMONT, a town of Liege.

VIGO, a town of Spain, in Galicia, with a good harbour, seated on the Atlantic Ocean, 12 m. NNW of Tuy, and 260 WNW of Madrid. Here, in 1702, the English and Dutch fleets, having broken the boom laid across the mouth of the harbour, defeated a squadron of French men of war, with 13 Spanish galleons under their convoy. The English took 4 galleons and 5 men of war, and the ech 5 galleons and 1 man of war. Fourteen ien of war and 4 galleons were destroyed, and a great deal of silver was taken. In 1719, it was again taken by the English, who relinquished it, after raising contributions.

VIHIERS, a town in the depart. of Maine and Loire, having a great trade in cattle. It is 20 m. S of Angers, and 162 SW of Paris.

VILAINE, a river of France, which rises in the depart. of Maine, waters Vitré, Rennes, Redon, &c. and enters the Bay of Biscay below Roche Bernard.

VILLA BOHIM, a town of Alentejo.

VILLA-RICA, a sea-port of Mexico; a town of Paraguay, Buenos Ayres; and a town of Minas Geraes, in Brazil.

VILLA-VICIOSA, a town of Alentejo, with a palace and park, in which the dukes of Braganza formerly resided. It sustained a famous siege against the Spaniards in the year 1667. A battle was also fought near it, much about the same time, the success of which greatly contributed to fix the crown of Portugal on the head of the Duke of Braganza. In the suburb is an ancient temple, originally built to the honour of Proserpine, as appears from the inscriptions. The soil about this town is extremely fertile, and there are quarries of beautiful green marble. It is 16 m. SW of Elvas, and 83 SSE of Lisbon.

VILLA-VICIOSA, a sea-port of Asturias, 30 m. NE of Oviedo.

VILLE-DIEU, a town in the depart. of the Channel, 12 m. NNE of Avranches.

VILLE-FRANCHE, a town in the depart. of Rhone and Loire, surrounded with walls and ditches, 18 m. N of Lyons, and 233 S by E of Paris.

VILLE-FRANCHE, a town of France, in the depart. of the Eastern Pyrenees, 22 m. ENE of Puycerda, and 27 WSW of Perpignan. In one of the mountains which surround this place, is a curious cavern.

VILLE-FRANCHE, a town in the depart. of Aveiron, seated on the river Aveiron, 24 m. W of Rhodez, and 260 S of Paris. It carries on a great trade in linen cloth.

VILLE-JUIF, a town about 4 m. S of Paris, on the great road to Lyons.

VILLEMUR, a town in the depart. of Upper Garonne, seated on the river Tarne, 16 m. N of Toulouse.

VILLENA, a town of Murcia, near a morass, from which they manufacture salt.

VILLENEUVE, a town in the depart. of Lot and Garonne, seated on the river Lot, 17 m. N of Agen.

VILLENEUVE, a town in the depart. of Gard, seated on the river Rhone, opposite Avignon.

VILLENEUVE-DE-BERG, a town in the depart. of Ardeche, 12 m. NNW of Viviers.

VILLINGEN, a town of Austrian Suabia, in the Brisgaw, situated between the sources of the rivers Danube and Neckar, 28 m. E by S of Friburg.

VILLERS-COTERETS, a town in the depart. of Aisne, 11 m. SW of Soissons.

VILMANSTRAND, a town of Russia, in the government of Viborg.

VILVORDE, a town of Brabant, seated on the river Senne, 6 m. N of Brussels.

VINCENNES, a town of France, in depart. of Paris, 5 m. E of Paris; here was originally a royal palace, erected by Philip de Valois, and finished by Louis XIV.; the antient towers serve as a state prison; and here the Duke D'Enghien suffered death.

VINCENNES, a town, the capital of Indiana, 743 m. W of Washington.

VINCENT, CAPE, a promontory of Portugal, 25 m. W of Lagos. Lat. 37 2 N. lon. 9 0 W.

VINCENT, ST. one of the Caribbee Islands of the W. Indies, about 40 m. in length and 10 in breadth, and inhabited by a race of people, of whom Dr. Robertson gives this account: "There is a great distinction in character between the Caribbees and the inhabitants of the larger islands. The former appear manifestly to be a separate race. Their language is totally different from that of their neighbours in the large islands. They themselves have a tradition that their ancestors came originally from some part of the continent, and having conquered and exterminated the antient inhabitants, took possession of their lands and of their women. Hence they call themselves Banaree, which signifies a man come from beyond sea. Accordingly the Caribbees still use two distinct languages, one peculiar to the men, and the other to the women. The language of the men has nothing common with that spoken in the large islands. The dialect of the women considerably resembles it. This strongly confirms the tradition which I have mentioned. The Caribbees themselves imagine that they were a colony from the Galibis, a powerful nation of Guiana, in South America. But as their fierce manners approach nearer to those of the people in the northern continent, than to those of the natives of S. America; and as their language has likewise some affinity to that spoken in Florida, their origin should be deduced rather from the former than the latter. In their wars, they still preserve their antient practice of destroying all the males, and preserving the women, either for servitude or for breeding." This island was only inhabited by native Caribs, till towards the latter end of the last century, when a ship from Guinea, with a large cargo of slaves, was either wrecked or run ashore on the coast; great numbers of the negroes escaped into the woods and mountains, whom the Indians suffered to remain. These Africans soon became very numerous, partly by the accession of run-away slaves from Barbadoes, and partly by the children they had by the Indian women. After this the country became the theatre of savage hostilities between the negroes and the Caribbees, in which the former were generally victorious, or at least proved so in the end; their numbers, in 1763, being computed at 2000, whereas of the red or native Caribs, there were not left more than 100 families. St. Vincent's was long considered as a neutral island by the two countries of England and France; but, at the peace of 1763, the French agreed that the right to it should be vested in the English; who, in the sequel, at the instance of some rapacious planters, engaged in a war against the Caribbees who inhabited the windward side of the island, and who were obliged to consent to a peace, by which they ceded a very large tract of valuable land to the crown. The consequence of this was, that retaining their resentment against the English, they aided the French in the reduction of the island in 1779, who, however, restored it by the peace of 1783. The country is generally mountainous and rugged; the valleys are, however, extremely fruitful. It contains about 84,000 acres; everywhere well watered, and of which 23,605 acres are possessed by British subjects: and as much more was lately held by the Caribs. All the rest of the country has not been yet cleared, but retains its native woods. The soil is a black mould upon a strong loam, the most proper for the raising of sugars: and indigo thrives here remarkably well. The number of inhabit. appears, by the last official returns, to be 1450 whites, and 11,853 negroes. The governor's salary is 2000*l.* sterling; one half of which is raised within the island, and the other half is paid out of the exchequer of Great Britain. Lat. 13 0 N lon. 61 0 W.

VINCENT, ST. a town of Beira, and a seaport of Asturia, 9 m. WSW of Santillana.

VINCENT, ST. a town of Brasil, in the government of St. Paul, situated on the sea-coast, 150 m. SSW of St. Sebastian.

VINCENT, ST. one of the Cape-de-Verd Islands, about 30 m. in circumference; in general lofty, except towards the NW, where it is low and sandy. In this part is a commodious bay or harbour, about a league and a half broad at the mouth, surrounded with high mountains, stretching to the middle of the island, and securely sheltered from the westerly and NW winds. Hence it is justly accounted the best harbour in all the Cape Verd islands; yet it is difficult of access, by reason of the impetuous winds that blow off the mountains, along the coast, with so much fury, as greatly to endanger shipping before they can arrive at this place of security. Besides this harbour, where ships frequently wood and water, and where wild goats may be obtained (for the island is uninhabited), there are several other bays on the S side, at which ships may anchor; and of these the Portuguese generally make choice, for the purpose of loading their hides. St. Vincent has also good fresh water, which does not fail to spring up on digging a little way into the soil of the valley; but the hills afford not a single drop. It is said, also, that more turtle is caught near this island than round all the rest, and that it abounds with saltpetre.

VINCENT'S ROCKS, ST. Gloucesters. E of the Avon, 1½ m. NNW of Bristol. They are very steep and rugged precipices, which continue their course about 3 m. and seem to have been almost miraculously cleft asunder, to admit a passage for the river Frome. The Avon flows between them, and the tide rises here 42 feet. At the bottom of these rocks, near the water-side, rises a medicinal hot-spring, the taste of which is soft, milky, and grateful to the stomach. It is successfully prescribed in inflammations, hectic coughs, immoderate fluxes, and scrophulous and cancerous cases.

Vine, Hants, near Basingstoke. Vineyard, near Gloucester. Vineyard, Gloucesters, near Tewksbury. Vineyard-Flory, Somersets. SW of Taunton.

VINGORIA, a Dutch settlement on the coast of Concan, 22 m. NNW of Goa.

Vinniton, Devons. NW of Honiton.

VINTIMIGLIA, a town of Genoa, with a small harbour, situated on the Mediterranean, 8 m. NE of Monaco, and 70 SW of Genoa.

Vintners, Kent, in Boxley parish.

VIRE, a town in the depart. of Calvados, with manufactures of coarse woollen cloths. It is seated on the river Vire, 27 m. SW of Caen.

VIRGIN ISLANDS, certain islands and keys in the W. Indies, situated in about lat. 18 30 N, to the E of Porto Rico, and extending about 20 leagues in length, and upwards of 12 in breadth. They were called Las Virgines by the Spaniards, the first discoverers, in honour of the 11,000 Virgins of the Legend. Though every way dangerous to navigators, there is a bason in the midst of them 6 or 7 leagues in length, and 3 or 4 in breadth, in which ships may securely anchor, land-locked from all winds. They are about 30 in number, mostly desert, barren, and are possessed by the English and Danes. The Spaniards, however, claim those near Porto Rico. In the first division of those possessed by the English, is Tortola, the principal, to which belong Jost Van Dyke's and Little Van Dyke's, and Guana Isle, with Beef and Thatch Islands. In the second division is Virgin Gorda, or Great Virgin, called also Spanish Town, having two good harbours; to this island belong the following: Anegada, or Drowned Island; Nicker, Prickly Pear, and Moskito Islands; the Cammanoes, Scrub, and Dog Islands; the Fallen City (two rocky islets close together, at a distance resembling ruins); the Round Rock, Ginger, Cooper's, Salt Island, Peter's Island, and the Dead Chest. To the Danes belong St. Thomas's Island, on which Brass, Little Saba, Buck Island, Great and Little St. James, and Bird Island, are dependent, with St. John, to which belong Lavango, Cam, and Witch Islands; and they have also the Island of St. Croix.

VIRGINIA, one of the United States of N. America, bounded on the S by N. Carolina; on the W by Kentucky; on the NW by the Ohio; on the N by Pennsylvania and Maryland; and on the E by Maryland, the Chesapeak, and the Atlantic. It is about 300 m. from E to W, and 180 from N to S; contains 965,079 inhab. being 548,320 whites, 386,377 slaves, and 30,382 free persons of colour. The principal rivers are James, York, Rappahannoc, Potomac, Roanoke, and Kanhaway, Great and Little, all which are full of convenient and safe harbours. There are also many small rivers, some of which are capable of receiving the largest merchant ships. In general the land is tolerably good, and capable of producing corn, pulse, cotton, flax, and hemp; and, in the marsh lands, rice has been lately cultivated. The lands towards the mouth of the rivers are generally low, and, at present, well stocked with many sorts of trees, from 30 to 90 feet high. The land higher up the rivers is generally level, and well watered with springs; but there are here and there some small hills. That near the sea is generally sandy, and without stones, for which reason they seldom shoe their horses. The richest lands lie near the branches of the rivers, and abound with various sorts of timber, surprisingly large. At the heads of the rivers are mountains, valleys, hills, and plains, with different trees; and, indeed, not many years ago, the whole country seemed to be one continued wood, with plantations here and there, where the roots of the trees had been grubbed up. The principal produce of Virginia is tobacco, wheat, and Indian corn; but the culture of tobacco has much declined of late, in favour of that of wheat. Virginia is divided into 82 counties, and has but few towns of consequence; the principal are Williamsburg, Norfolk, Alexandria, and Richmond. The number of inhab. are about 800,000. The Virginians now manufacture about three-fourths of their clothing, and they have also manufactures of iron and lead; but agriculture is the principal employment.

VIRGINIA, a town of Cavan, in Ulster, seated on Lough Ramor, in which are several islands, 40 m. from Dublin.

Virginstow, Devons. SE of Luffencote.

VIRTON, a small town of Luxemburg.

VISAGAPATAM, a town of Hindostan, in the circar of Cicacole, 50 m. SW of Cicacole.

VISET, a town of Liege.

VISEU, anciently VISONTIUM, a town of Beira.

VISHNEI-VOLOTCHOK, a town of Russia, in the government of Tver. It is one of the imperial villages enfranchised by the late empress, and is remarkable for its canal, which connects the Tvertza and the Mysta. The inhabitants, raised from the situation of slaves to that of freemen, seem to have shaken off their former indolence, and to be awakened to a sense of their commercial advantages. The town is divided into regular streets. All the buildings are of wood, except the court of justice, erected at the charge of the empress, and a few brick houses. It is seated on the river Zna, 60 m. NNW of Tver. Lat. 57 23 N lon. 35 0 E.

VISIAPOUR, a considerable city of Hindostan, the capital of a county of the same name. It is now subject to the Poohah Mahrattas. It is 130 m. SE of Poonah, and 234 SE of Bombay. Lat. 17 26 N lon. 75 19 E.

VISOGOROD, a town of Masovia.

UIST, NORTH and SOUTH, two islands of the Hebrides, on the W coast of Scotland.

They are each about 20 m. in length, and of considerable breadth. Kelp is the staple commodity of these islands; and they export annually between them, 800 cows and young oxen. Here is abundance of game and aquatic birds.

VISTULA, the largest river of Poland. It rises in Mount Crapach, on the N part of Hungary, passes by Cracow, Sandomirz, Warsaw, Thorn, Culm, &c. and falls into the Baltic below Dantzic.

VITERBO, a town of Italy, capital of the Patrimonio, 20 m. S of Orvieto, and 35 N by W of Rome. It contains only 15,000 inhab. although the number of churches, convents and hospitals, is 69. Near it is a spring so hot, that it will boil an egg, and even fish.

VITRE, a town in the depart. of Ille and Vilaine, seated on the river Vilaine, 20 m. E of Rennes, trading in linen-cloth, knit stockings, and gloves.

VITRI-LE-BRULE, a village in the depart. of Marne, 3 m. NE of Vitri-le-François. It was formerly a considerable town, but was taken (and, as its name imports, burnt) by Thibaut, Count of Chartres, when many of the inhabitants were burned, and great part of the town destroyed. It was also burnt, together with 60 villages, in the year 1422, by the English and Burgundians.

VITRI-LE-FRANCOIS, a populous town in the depart. of Marne, trading in corn, seated on the river Marne, 15 m. SSE of Chalons, and 100 E of Paris. It is well built, though the houses are of wood, and there is a fine square.

VIVEBAUX, a town in the depart. of Côte-d'or, 21 m. W of Dijon, and 9 SE of Semur, seated among mountains, where there are quarries of marble.

VITTORIA, a town of Biscay, in the province of Alava, so named in memory of a considerable victory here obtained over the Moors, and was signalized by a memorable battle gained here over the French army by Lord Wellington in 1813. It contains 5 parishes, 4 convents, 3 hospitals, a college, and a square. The large streets are bordered with trees, as a defence against the heat of the sun. The merchants here deal in wool and wines, and particularly in sword blades and other cutlery, which they make in large quantities. It is seated in a pleasant plain, fertile in corn and grapes, 32 m. SSE of Bilboa.

VITTORIOSA, or CITTA VITTORIOSA, or IL BORGO, a fortified town of the island of Malta, situated on a narrow neck of land to the left of Valetta. On each side a broad, natural canal, or stream, runs up into the land, and surrounding the town, forms a fine harbour. One of these canals, or harbours, is called Porto della Renella, and the other Porto delle Galiere. The strong castle of St. Angelo stands on a high rock, at the extremity, towards the sea, and has a communication with the town by a bridge. The palace of the inquisition, and the arsenal, are reckoned among the principal buildings of this place. Formerly the grand master resided here. The number of inhab. amounts to about 3000.

VIVERO, a town of Spain, in Galicia, near the river Vivero, or Landrova, whose mouth forms a good harbour on the Atlantic. It is 12 m. E of Cape Ortegal.

VIVIERS, a town in the depart. of Ardeche, seated among rocks, on one of which the cathedral is built, near the river Rhone, 20 m. N of Orange.

UKRAINE, a large country of Europe, lying on the borders of Turkey in Europe, Poland, Russia, and Little Tartary. Its name properly signifies a frontier. But the whole of the Ukraine, on both sides of the Dnieper, now belongs to Russia, and forms a part of the government of Ekaterinoslav. The principal town is Kiof. See COSSACKS.

ULADISLAW. See INOLADISLAW.

ULCAMI, or ULCUMA, a country of Guinea, N of Adra and W of Benin.

Ulcester, Derbys. on the Dove, near Burton-upon-Trent. Ulcester, Northumberl. in the lordship of Woller. Ulcomb, Kent, SW of Lenham. Uldale, Cumberl. on the Elen, near Ireby. Ulkborn, Sussex, by Uckfield.

ULEA, or ULABORG, a sea-port of E. Bothnia, 320 m. N of Abo.

ULIETEA, one of the Society Isles, in the S. Pacific Ocean. Lat. 16 45 S lon. 151 26 W.

Ullapool, Rossshire, seated on the N side of Loch Broom. Ulleuhall, Warwicks. S of Umberslade. Ulleskelf, Yorks. S of Tadcaster. Ulling, Essex, near Malden. Ullington, Gloucesters. in Pebworth parish. Ullock, Cumberl. 4 m. SW of Cockermouth. Ullsby, or Ullsley, Cumberl. S of Penrith, near Ullswater.

ULLSWATER, a lake, partly in Westmorel. and partly in Cumberl. 10 m. N of Ambleside, and 14 SW of Penrith. It is about 8 m. long, is of a sufficient depth for breeding char, and abounds with a variety of other fish. Trout, of upwards of 30lbs. weight, are said to have been taken in it. The navigators of this lake find much amusement by discharging guns, or small cannon, in certain stations. The report is reverberated from rock to rock, promontory, cavern, and hill, with every variety of sound; now dying away upon the ear, and again returning like peals of thunder, and thus re-echoed, is heard 7 times distinctly.

ULM, an imperial city of Suabia, and chief of that order in the circle, where the archives of the free towns in Suabia and Franconia are deposited. The inhabitants are Protestants. There is a good college in this city; and in the cathedral, which is a very lofty structure, are 63 copper-vessels full of water, ready for the extinguishing of fire. It is large and well fortified, and the town-house is a handsome edifice. There is a handsome bridge over the Danube, which greatly favours the trade of the inhab. in linen, fustians, hardware, and wool. The Elector of Bavaria became master of it in 1702, by a stratagem; but after the battle of Blenheim, the Bavarians surrendered it by capitulation. It is seated on the Danube, where it receives the river Iller, 47 m. SSE of Stutgard, and 275 W of Vienna. Lat. 48 25 N lon. 10 12 E.

ULMEN, a town of Treves, 30 m. NE of Triers.

Ulpha, or Oulfa, Cumberl. in Millum parish, on the river Dudden. Ulseby, Lincolns. N of Spilsby. Ulseby, Lincolns. between Great Limbergh and Barton-on-the-Humber.

ULSTER, a province of Ireland, bounded on the E by the Irish Sea, on the N by the Northern Ocean, on the W by the Western Ocean, on the S by the province of Leinster, and on the SW by that of Connaught, being about 116 m. in length, and 100 in breadth. The principal rivers are, the Banne, the Loughfoyle, the Swilly, the Mewry Water, and the Maine. It abounds with large lakes; the soil in general is fruitful in corn and grass; and there are plenty of horses, sheep, and beeves. The waters are deep, and yield plenty of fish, particularly salmon. The southern parts of this province are rich, fertile, and well cultivated; but the northern are hilly and mountainous. It includes within itself, by far the greatest part of the linen manufactory; and contains the counties of Donegal, Derry, Antrim, Tyrone, Fermanagh, Cavan, Armagh, Monaghan, and Down.

ULSTER, a river in the circle of the Upper Rhine, which runs into the Werra, near Vacha, in the principality of Hesse.

Ulstborp, Leicestersh. N of Lutterworth.

ULTZEN, or VELTZEN, a town of Lunenburg, containing 3 churches, 3 hospitals, and about 330 houses. The principal articles of trade are wool, brandy, and meal. It was formerly Hanseatic, and is situated on the Ilmenau, 20 m. SSE of Lunenburg.

ULVERSTONE, called by the country people OULSTON, a good thriving town of Lancash. in the hundred of Furness, with regular, well-paved streets, containing 703 houses. This town is the port of Furness, fitting out many ships for the coasting trade. The principal inns are kept by the guides, who regularly pass to and from Lancaster three times a week. It is seated at the bottom of immense hills, between the branches of the Duddon, near its mouth, 18 m. NNW of Lancaster, and 267 NNW of London. Market on Thurs.

Ulverscross-Abbey, Leicesters. in Charnwood-Forest, was founded in a sequestered and romantic spot by Robert Blanchmains, Earl of Leicester, in the reign of Henry II. It is now converted into a farm-house.

UMAGO, a sea-port of Istria, lately subject to Venice.

Umberley, or Umberslade, Warwicks. near Stratford-upon-Avon.

UMBRIA. See SPOLETO.

UMBRIATICO, a town of Calabria Catri.

UMEA, a sea-port of W. Bothnia.

UNALASHKA, one of the Fox Islands, in the Northern Archipelago.

Underbarrow, Westmorel. 3 m. SW of Kendal. Underley, Westmorel. on the Lune, by Kirby-Lonsdale. Undermilbeck, in the parish of Windermere, Westmorel. Undershiddon, in the parish of Crosthwait, Cumberl.

UNDERSWEN, a town of Bern, Switzerland, situated between the Lakes of Brientz and Thun, near the famous cavern of St. Pat. It is 25 m. SE of Bern.

Underton, Shrops. SW of Bridgenorth.

UNDERWALDEN, a canton of Switzerland, and the sixth in rank. It is bounded on the N by the canton of Lucerne, and by the lake of the four cantons; on the E by the canton of Uri; on the S by the canton of Bern; and on the W by the cantons of Berne and Lucerne. It takes its name from a large forest of oaks, which is nearly in the middle of the country, and runs from N to S. It is about 25 m. in length, and 17 in breadth, and is divided into two parts, that above the forest and that below it; for this reason there are two councils, two justices, and two landammanies. It has no towns nor bailiwicks; and the chief advantage of the inhabitants arises from cattle, and the fish taken in five small lakes. The people are of the Romish church; and the grand council is composed of 58 members. Sarnen is the principal place of the Upper Vale; and Stantz of the Lower, and of the whole canton. The Underwalders, in conjunction with the States of Uri and Schweitz, shook off the Austrian yoke, in 1308; of all the people of Switzerland, they are the most honoured and loved by the other cantons, for their courage and love of liberty, joined to a strict concord, and amiable simplicity of manners.

Underwood, Derbys. NE of Ashborn. Underwood, Devon.

UNGWAR, a town of Hungary, 46 m. NNE of Caschau.

UNITED PROVINCES OF THE NETHERLANDS, a kingdom of Europe, consisting of seven provinces, and extending from N to S not more than 150 m. and 100 in breadth from E to W. They are bounded on the W and N by the German Ocean, and on the S and E by Brabant and Germany. These provinces rank in the following order: 1. Guelderland, subdivided into the districts of Nimeguen, Zutphen, and Arnheim; 2. Holland, subdivided into N. Holland, S. Holland, and W. Friesland; 3. Zealand, subdivided into the part near the E. Scheldt, and the part near the W. Scheldt; 4. Utrecht; 5. Friesland; 6. Overyssel; and 7. Groningen. Besides these provinces, are the lands of Dutch Brabant, Flanders, and Limburg, in which are the towns of Bois-le-Duc, Breda, Bergen-op-Zoom, Maestricht, Venlo, Sluys, Hulst, &c. This sovereignty (which is likewise called by the general name of Holland) affords a striking proof, that unwearied and persevering industry is capable of conquering almost every disadvantage of climate and situation. The air and water in this country are nearly equally bad; the soil produces naturally scarce any thing but turf; and the possession of this very soil is disputed by the ocean, which rising considerably above the level of the land, is prevented from overflowing it, only by strong and expensive dikes. Yet the labours of the patient Dutchman have rendered this small and seemingly insignificant territory one of the richest spots in Europe, with respect to population and property. In other countries, possessed of a variety of natural productions, it is not surprising to find manufactures employed in augmenting the riches of the soil; but to see, in a country like Holland, large woollen manufactures, where there are scarce any flocks; numberless artists employed in metals, where there is not a mine; thousands of saw-mills, where there is scarce a forest; an immense quantity of corn, exported from a country where there is not agriculture sufficient to support one half of its inhabitants, is what must strike every attentive observer with admiration. Among the most valuable natural productions of the United Netherlands may be reckoned their excellent cattle; and large quantities of madder are exported, chiefly cultivated in Zealand. The most considerable revenue arises from the fisheries; but these are not so considerable as formerly. The number of vessels employed in the herring-fishery, in particular, is reduced from upwards of 2000 to less than 200; and yet it maintains, even now, no less than 20,000 people. About 100 vessels are employed in the Greenland fishery, and 140 in the cod-fishery near the Dogger Bank, and near the coast of Holland. The Dutch were formerly in possession of the coasting trade and freight of almost all other trading nations. They were also the bankers for all Europe. But these advantages did not continue to be so lucrative, when the other European nations began to open their eyes so far as to employ their own shipping in their trade, and to establish banks of their own. Notwithstanding these deductions, the Dutch trade is still immense; and their country is, as it were, the universal warehouse of the commodities of every quarter of the globe. The foreign possessions of the Dutch, in Asia, previously to the commencement of the present war, were the coasts of the island of Java, the capital of which is Batavia, the seat of the governor-general of all their East-India settlements; some settlements on the coasts of Sumatra, Malabar, and Coromandel; the greatest part of the Moluccas, or Spice-Islands; settlements, or factories, in the island of Celebes, at Surat, and Petro, and in the Gulf of Persia; with Colombo, Trincomale, &c. on the Island of Ceylon. In Africa they had the Cape of Good Hope, with George-de-la-Mina, and other fortresses and factories in Guinea. In the W. Indies they had the Islands of St. Eustatia, Saba, and Curaçon; and in S. America, the colonies of Issequibo, Demerary, Surinam, and Berbice, in the country of Guinea. In Holland, the inland trade is greatly facilitated by the numerous canals, which cross the country in every direction. The number of manufactures established in the United Provinces is astonishing. Saardam, a village in N. Holland, contains, for instance, about 900 wind-mills, partly corn-mills, partly saw and paper-mills, and mills for the making of white lead, &c. In former times, the Dutch were the exclusive possessors of several ingenious manufactures and arts; as the refining of camphor and borax, the cutting and polishing of diamonds, the refining of sugar, &c. but at present these mysteries, few of them excepted, are in the hands of many other nations, to whose commercial ignorance and want of industry the Dutch were once indebted for immense profits, which have decreased with the causes; among the rest, the woollen manufactory has prodigiously decreased. In a word, the Dutch trade is no longer in its ancient flourishing state, to which, even if the frugality and industry of the nation had not been diminished by too great riches, the rivalship of other nations, and the commercial knowledge of the age, would never permit it to rise again. All sects are tolerated in Holland; but, till lately, none but Calvinists could hold employments of trust or profit. Since the great confederation of Utrecht, in 1579, (See NETHERLANDS) the Seven United Provinces have been considered as one political body, united for the preservation of the whole. In 1581, the Hague was appointed the place of meeting for the States General, an assembly invested with supreme power of the confederation, and composed of deputies chosen out of the provincial states. This power related to the making war and peace, levying taxes, &c. in their joint capacity; but as to internal government, each province was independent not only of the other provinces, but even of the supreme power of the republic. In the late disputes on the French revolution, the Dutch, at first, appeared hostile to the new republic, but never heartily co-operated with the allies. The Stadtholder was probably influenced by the courts of Prussia and England; but a party more powerful than his own were his enemies, and, on the invasion of Holland by the French, in the beginning of 1795, he thought proper, with his family, to take refuge in England. From that time till now, 1813, Holland was annexed to France, when the Dutch threw off the yoke of their new master, and recalled the Prince of Orange to the throne of the UNITED NETHERLANDS.

UNITED STATES OF AMERICA, a republic of N. America, consisting originally of thirteen provinces, subject to Great Britain; but which, on the 4th of July, 1776, by their representatives in congress assembled, made a solemn declaration of independence, and were afterwards acknowledged free and independent states by the treaty of Paris, in 1783. They are, at present, 15 in number, viz. Massachusetts, New Hampshire, Rhode Island, Connecticut, New York, New Jersey, Pennsylvania, Delaware, Maryland, Virginia, N. and S. Carolina, Georgia, Kentucky, and Vermont. Besides these, there are the districts of Maine, the Tennassee government, and territory NW of the Ohio, which, in process of time, will, it is probable, become states. Only eleven of these states acceded, at first, to the new federal constitution; but they were afterwards joined by N. Carolina and Rhode Island; and Kentucky and Vermont have since been added to them. See AMERICA.

UNNA, a town of Mark, in Westphalia, containing a Lutheran parish church, a hospital church, which both the Calvinists and Lutherans use for their worship, a nunnery, a chapel, and a Lutheran school. So early as the year 1032, this place was a considerable village, and with its very extensive and profitable territory (still possessed by the town) belonged to the archbishop of Cologne. In 1250 it was first environed with walls, and endowed with the immunities of a town. Unna was formerly Hanseatic, and at present ranks as the second town in the county. It is situated in a fine plain, on a rivulet named the Kortlebecke, 8 m. E of Dortmund, and 23 S of Munster.

UNNA, a river which rises in Bosnia, on the borders of Croatia, 28 m. S of Bihacs, and runs into the Save, about 16 m. NW of Gradisca.

UNST, the most remote of the smaller Shetland Islands, about 8 m. long and 4 broad. It abounds in iron and lime-stone, affords large veins of jasper, beautifully variegated with black and green spots; and great plenty of white spar is thrown upon the sea beach. Black oats, bear, potatoes, cabbages, artichokes of a delicate taste, with various garden roots, greens, and most of the garden flowers that grow in the north of Scotland, are common in this island. There is little or no sown grass; but the meadows are rich in red and white clover; and in the seasons of vegetation, are enamelled with a beautiful profusion of wild flowers. The pasture grounds in the commons are generally covered with a short, tender, flowering heath. The whole number of cows and oxen (which last weigh from 300 to 500lb.) in the island is not fewer than 2000; of these, about 1150 are milch cows. The number of horses, well known by the name of shelties, is about 1000. The sheep amount to about 6600. Fishing is an important branch of business among the islanders, 80 tons being taken on an average yearly. Rats, mice, frogs, toads, and adders, are unknown here. The number of houses on the island is 385, and of inhab. 2288.

VOLCANELLO, a small volcanic island, between Lipari and Volcano.

VOLCANO, one of the Lipari Islands, in the Mediterranean, lying to the S of the Island of Lipari. It is about 12 miles in circumference, and is a volcano, in the form of a broken cone, but now emits smoke only. Volcano, as well as all the rest of these islands, is supposed to have been produced by an eruption from subterranean fire. The production of this island, in particular, happened in the early time of the Roman republic, and is recorded by Eusebius, Pliny, and others.

VOLGA, the largest river in Europe, which has its source in two small lakes, in the government of Tver, in Russia. It begins to be navigable a few miles above that town. It is considerably augmented here by the junction of the Tverza, which is a broader, deeper, and more rapid river. By means of the Tverza, a communication is made between the Volga and the Neva, or, in other words, between the Caspian and the Baltic. This great river waters some of the finest provinces in the Russian empire, passes by Yaroslaf, Kostroma, Nishnei-Novogorod, Casan, Simbirsk, and Saratoff, entering the Caspian Sea, by several mouths below Astracan.

UPSAL, a city of Sweden, in Upland, anciently the residence of the sovereigns, and where the heathen priests, in the times of paganism, offered the greatest sacrifices. It contains, exclusive of the students, about 3000 inhab. The ground-plot is extremely regular. It is divided into two almost equal parts by the small river Sala; and the streets are drawn at right angles from a central kind of square. A few of the houses are built of brick, and stuccoed; but the generality are constructed of trunks, smoothed into the shape of planks and painted red. The roofs are covered in with turf; and each house has its small court-yard, or garden. Upsala was formerly the metropolis of Sweden, and the royal residence. The ancient palace was a magnificent building, until great part of it was consumed by fire in 1702. The cathedral, which is a large Gothic structure of brick, has been several times greatly damaged by fire, and as often repaired. The university is the most ancient in Sweden, and is the first seminary in the north for academical education. Its library contains many valuable books and near a thousand manuscripts. Among these is the Codex Argenteus, supposed to be Uphila's Gothic translation of the Four Evangelists; but it seems rather to be written in the language of the ancient Franks. The Royal Society here is likewise the oldest literary academy in the north. Here is a botanical garden, of which the celebrated Linné was superintendant. The Swedish geographers compute their longitude from Upsal. Upsal is 35 m. NNW of Stockholm.

Upsall, Yorks. N of Thirsk. Upsallington, Northumberl. near Berwick. Upshire, Essex, near Waltham-Abbey. Upsidling, Dorsets. W of Cerne-Abbey. Upstreet, Kent, in Chislet parish, W of Thanet Isle.

UPTON-ON-SEVERN, a neat, well-built town of Worcesters. noted for giving name to a hundred. It contains 400 houses. From the number of Roman coins that are often dug up here, it is believed to have been formerly a station of the Roman soldiers. It has a new church, built in 1758, and is seated on the river Severn, over which it has a stone bridge, with a harbour for barges, 10 m. S of Worcester, and 111 WNW of London. Market on Thurs.

URABA, a province of Terra Firma, on a gulf of the same name, in the government of Carthagena, E of the province of Darien.

URAL, a river of the Russian empire, in Asia, which rises in Mount Caucasus, and watering Uralsk, in the province of Orenburg, falls into the Caspian Sea, by three mouths, below Gurief.

URALIAN COSSACS, a people that inhabit the Russian province of Orenburg, in Asia, on the S side of the river Ural. These Cossacs are descended from those of the Don: they profess the Greek religion; but there are a kind of dissenters from the established religion, whom the Russians called Rorkolniki, or Separatists, and who style themselves Staroverki, or Old Believers: they consider the service of the established church as profane and sacrilegious, and have their own priests and ceremonies. The Uralian Cossacs are all enthusiasts for the ancient ritual, and seem to prize their beards more than their lives. The river Yaik, however, is now called Ural; the Yaik Cossacs are denominated Uralian Cossacs; and the town of Yaitsk, Uralsk. The Uralian Cossacs enjoy the right of fishing on the coast of the Caspian Sea, for 47 m. on each side of the river Ural. Their principal fishery is for sturgeons and beluga, whose roe supplies large quantities of caviare; and the fish, which are chiefly salted and dried, afford a considerable article of consumption in the Russian empire. In consequence of these fisheries, these Cossacs are very rich.

URALSK, a town of Russia, in the government of Caucasus, seated on the river Ural, about 328 m. NE of Astracan. Till the year 1774, it was called Yaitsk. See the preceding article.

URANIENBERGH was formerly a magnificent castle of Denmark, in the little island of Huen, in the middle of the Sound. It was built for Tycho Brahe, who called it Uranienburgh, or the Castle of the Heavens, and who here made his observations; but it is now in ruins.

URBANEA, a town of Urbino.

URBINO, a city of Italy, capital of the duchy of Urbino, containing a ducal palace, a university or academy (one of the most ancient in Italy), a noble college, several churches, and 16 convents. The palace was built by Duke Frederic, who furnished it with many ancient statues of marble and bronze, excellent paintings, and a library of curious and rare books. The library was conveyed to Rome, by Pope Alexander VII. The houses are well built, and great quantities of fine earthenware are made here. It is situated on a hill, at the union of the two rivers, near the head of the Foglio, 18 m. S of Rimini, and 120 NE of Rome.

URBINO, a duchy of Italy, in the pope's territory, bounded on the N by Romagna, on the NE by the Adriatic, on the SE by Ancona, on the S by the Perugiano, and on the W by Tuscany and Romagna. It is about 55 m. in length, and 45 in breadth. Here is great plenty of fish and game; but the air is not reckoned wholesome, nor is the soil fertile. One of the chief productions is silk. Urbino was formerly governed by its own dukes, of whom the last, Francis Maria, of Rovere, dying in the year 1631, without male issue, the pope took possession of his territory. The duke had, by will, in 1626, confirmed the pope's claims, and already, in effect, made over the country. Poggio Imperiale, and other allodial estates in this country, belong, however, by female inheritance to the duke of Tuscany. Urbino is the capital.

Urchfont, Wilts, NE of E. Lavington. Urchingfield, SW of Hereford. Urcote, Glouc. S of Thornbury.

URE. See YOWRE.

URGANTZ, a town of Asia, in the country of Charasm, on a river which runs into the lake of Aral. It was formerly a very considerable place, having been 4 m. in circumf. but it is now greatly reduced. Lat. 42 55 N lon. 59 25 E.

URGEL, a town of Catalonia, seated on the river Segra, 60 m. W of Perpignan, and 78 N by W of Barcelona.

URI, the most southern canton of Switzerland, and the fourth in rank. It is bounded on the N by the canton of Schweitz, and the Lake of the Four Cantons; on the E by the Grisons, and the canton of Glarus; on the S by the bailiwicks of Italy; and on the W by the canton of Underwalden and part of Bern. It is about 60 m. in length, and 28 in breadth. Altorff is the capital. The people are Roman Catholics, and were formerly free, under the jurisdiction of the empire. Albert I. however, aiming at their entire subjection, placed a severe vogt over them, whose name was Geszler, who, among other irritating procedures, set up a hat on a pole, at Altorff, with orders that the same tokens of regard should be paid to it as to his own person. William Tell openly refused to comply with this mark of slavery, and soon after, viz. in 1308, effected a union between the three cantons of Uri, Schweitz, and Underwalden, for shaking off the Austrian yoke, which, in 1315, was improved into a perpetual alliance.

URI, LAKE OF, in Switzerland. See WALDSTÆTTER SEE.

USBECK TARTARY, or MAWARALNAHAR, a country of Western Tartary, S of the country of the Kalmucs. These Tartars are divided into several tribes, governed by their respective khans; but formerly they were under one sovereign, and were accounted the most powerful of all the Tartarian nations. Their principal khans pride themselves in being descended from Tamerlane, whose birth-place was the ancient city of Samarcand. The Usbecs, in their persons, are said to have fairer complexions and neater features than the Kalmucs. Their religious profession is Mahometanism; and they differ, in general, very little from the people of the northern provinces of Hindostan. That country is supplied hence with the most serviceable horses, camels, and other cattle.

Usborn, Great and Little, Yorks. near the Ouse, SE of Boroughbridge.

USEDOM, an island of Pomerania, seated at the mouth of the river Oder, on the Baltic, 30 m. in length, and irregular in breadth. It is subject to Prussia, and has a town of the same name, situated on the SW coast.

USERCHE, a town in the depart. of Correze, 16 m. NNW of Tulle, and 217 S of Paris.

USK, a town of Monmouths. seated on the river Usk, 141 m. W of London. Market on Mond.

Usk, the river, rises on the W side of Brecknocks. and watering the towns of Brecon, Crickhowel, Abergavenny, Usk, and Caerleon, enters the Bristol channel below Newport; it is noted for its trout in season, from March till July. The town is well built of stone.

Usk in Kildare, Leinster.

Usk, Yorks. near the river Wharfe, NE of [illegible]. Usk, Yorks. by the Ouse, NW of [illegible]-upon-Ouse.

USNEACH, a mountain in West Meath, Leinster, on which fires were kindled by the Druids, in honour of Beal, or the Sun. It was the grand Bealtinne of the northern parts of Leinster, where the states assembled, and held judgment on criminals, when such as were accounted worthy of death, were burnt between two fires of Beal. This seems to have given rise to the account of the Druids offering up human victims as sacrifices. Children, also, and cattle were made to pass between these fires by way of purification.

USSEL, a town in the depart. of Correze, 36 m. NE of Tulle.

Usselby, Linc. NW of Market-Raisin. Ushaw, W of Durham.

USTIANO, a town in the Mantuan.

Ustings, Bucks, between Winslow and Aylesbury.

USTIUG, or VELIKOI USTIUG, a town of Vologda.

Uston, Berks, on the Kenner, between Silham and Aldermaston. Usway, a river in Northumberland, which runs into the Cocket, below Whitside. Uxworth, Durham, W of Hilton-Castle. Utkinton, Cheshire, 1 m. from Tarporley.

UTRECHT, a large and celebrated city of the Netherlands, capital of a province of the same name. It is of a square form, and about 3 m. in circumf. without its four suburbs, which are considerable. The steeple of the cathedral is very lofty, and the handsomest in the United Provinces. There is a great number of churches and hospitals. The students of the university, which is very famous, wear their ordinary dress, and board in private houses in the town, as there are scarcely any endowed colleges in Holland. All the avenues to this city are handsome, and the environs are full of gardens, walks, and groves, which, added to the purity of the air, render Utrecht one of the most agreeable places for residence in these parts, and accordingly a great many opulent families resort hither. In July, 1672, the French made themselves masters of it, when Louis XIV. entered the city in state, accompanied by the Duke of Orleans and the Duke of Monmouth; but, on the 13th of November, the Duke of Luxembourg, who had been appointed governor, abandoned the city and the whole province, after having compelled them to pay 450,000 livres. This town is famous for the treaty of union, signed in 1579, between the Seven Provinces, which laid the foundation of the republic; as likewise for the treaty of peace, concluded here, in 1713, between the allies and France. It is seated on the ancient channel of the Rhine, 18 m. SSE of Amsterdam, and 27 NE of Rotterdam. Lat. 52 7 N, lon. 5 8 E.

UTRECHT, one of the provinces of the Netherlands, surrounded on all sides by Holland and Guelderland, excepting one small strip of land to the northward, and bordering on the Zuyder Zee. The air is very healthy here; nor are there any inundations to fear, as in other provinces; the soil is mostly rich meadow, though, in many parts, full of turf grounds, and the country is pleasant. The length of it is not above 30 m. and the breadth is no more than 20, although it contains 70 towns and villages. The number of Calvinist ministers is 79, who hold a synod once a year at Utrecht. The Roman catholics have above 30 churches. There are but few Lutherans, Remonstrants, and Anabaptists.

UTRERA, a town of Spain, in province of Seville, 21 m. S of Seville.

Utterby, Lincoln. 3 m. from Louth.

UTTOXETER, a town of Staffords. with a bridge over the river Dove, that leads into Derbys. containing 600 houses. Here are a great number of iron forges, and its market is the greatest in this part of England for corn, cattle, hogs, sheep, butter, and cheese. By the late inland navigations, it communicates with all the midland counties. It is seated among excellent pastures for breeding and fattening cattle, 13 m. NE of Stafford, and 136 NW of London. Market on Wed. Fairs on May 6, and July 31.

UTZNACH, a town of Zurich, Switzerland, which belongs, however, to the cantons of Glarus and Schweitz, who appoint a bailiff alternately.

Vurnwey, a river of Montgomerys. which runs into the Severn, near Melverly.

UXBRIDGE, a town of Middlesex, which, though it is a hamlet to Great Hillingdon, is governed independently by two bailiffs, two constables, and four headboroughs, and contains 442 houses. The Coln runs through it in two streams, and over the main stream is a stone bridge, that leads into Buckinghams. Near it is a navigable canal, which communicates with the Thames at Brentford. A treaty was carried on here between Charles I. and the parliament, in 1645; but it was broken off. The house in which the plenipotentiaries met, at the lower end of the town, is still called the Treaty-House. During the summer season passage-boats go daily to and from Paddington by the canal, similar to the schuyts in Holland. Uxbridge is 13 m. W by N of London. Market on Thurs.

Uxenden, Middlesex, E of Harrow-on-the Hill. Uxmore, Oxfords. NW of Henley-upon-Thames.

UZEDA, a town of New Castile, 30 m. N of Madrid.

Wadderfield, Durham, NE of Staindrop. Wadeton, Herefords. NW of Bromyard. Wadborough, Worcesters. 3 m. NW of Pershore, where the abbots of that monastery had formerly a park.

WADDELL, a town of N Carolina, 30 m. W of Exeter.

Waddenber, Northamptons. on the Nen, SW of Oundle. Waddesdon, Bucks, near Winchington, has 3 distinct rectories, of which, each minister, or rector officiates in turn, and shares the revenue. In this parish is Eyethorp, the elegant seat of the Earl of Chesterfield. Waddesley, Yorks. NE of Sheffield; has a bridge over the Dun, and a forge for making iron. Waddiker-Hall, Lancas. N of Garstang. Waddingham, St. Mary's, and St. Peter's, Lincolns. near Kirton, in Lindsey. Waddington, 3 m. S of Lincoln. Waddington, Yorks. on the Ribble, near Bowland-Forest; has a noble hospital, erected and endowed for 10 widows and a chaplain. Waddon, Dorsets. in Bradpol parish, a little to the S of Onthfrancis. Waddon, E and W. Dorsets. near Abbotsbury. Near them is Friar Waddon, another hamlet, where there is a chapel, now used as a dairy. Wade, Hants, by Havant.

WADEBRIDGE. See WAREBRIDGE.

Wadefast, Cornwall, NE of North Petherings. Wadehurst, Sussex, SW of Lamberhurst-Common. Wadeli, a river in Radnors. but which runs into the Lug, near Combe, in Herefords. about 3 m. E of Presteign. Wadelton, Shrops. on the Onny, NW of Ludlow. Wadenhall, Kent, near Stelling and Petham. Wade's Mill, Herts, on the Rib, 2 m. N of Ware. Wadley, Berks, near Farringdon. Wadon, Surry, in Croydon parish. Wadshelf, Derbys. SW of Chesterfield.

WADSTENA, a town of E. Gothland, on the Lake Wetter, 20 m. SW of Linkioping.

Wadsworth, Yorks. NW of Halifax, contains 600 houses. Wadsworth, Yorks. SW of Doncaster.

WAERFLIET, a town of Germany, 8 m. N of Delmenhorst.

WAES, a territory in Flanders, extending from Ghent to Ysendick, along the river Scheldt. There are fine meadows, and good pastures, with plenty of corn and flax, beside horses that are in high esteem. St. Nicholas and Rupelmond are the principal places.

Wagen, Yorks. N of Hull.

WAGENINGEN, a town of Guelderland, on the Lech, 7 m. W of Arnheim.

WAGRIA, a territory in the NE part of Holstein, between the Baltic and the Trave. It is about 20 m. in length, and 15 in breadth.

WAHABEES, a tribe of Arabs in Africa.

WAIGATZ, straits between Nova Zembla and the continent of Russia.

Waight Court, Isle of Wight, in West Medina.

WAINFLEET, a town of Lincoln, seated on a creek near the sea, with several trading vessels belonging to it, and an excellent free-school. It is 14 m. NNE of Boston, and 130 N of London. Market on Saturday.

Waitby, Westmorland, near Kirby-Steven. Waitwith, Yorks. near Richmond. Wakebridge-Hall, Derby, NE of Wirksworth.

WAKEFIELD, a large, well-built town in the W. Riding of Yorkshire, seated on the river Calder, which has been made navigable hither from Castleforth, and from hence to Eland and Halifax. The principal trade is in white cloths and tammies. It consists chiefly of three spacious streets, 1871 houses, and 8593 inhab. and is 28 m. SW of York, and 184 NNW of London. Markets on Thurs. and Frid.; the latter for woollen cloth.

Wakehurst, and its Park, Sussex, E of Worth-Forest. Wakering, Magna, and Parva, Essex, near Shobury. Wakerton, or Wakely, Herts, SW of Buntingford, and half a m. S of Berksden. Wakerley, Northamp. by the river Welland, N of Rockingham Forest. Wake's, or Elton's Tower, Somers. in Bristol Channel, near Clevedon. Waketon, Great and Little, Norfolk, near Long Stratton, between Schole and Norwich. Wakethwaite, Cumberland, N of Keswick.

WALACHIA, a province of Turkey in Europe, bounded on the N by Moldavia and Transylvania; on the E by Bessarabia and the river Danube; on the S by Bulgaria; and on the W by Transylvania, the district of Temeswar, and the Danube. It is 180 m. in length, and 150 in its greatest breadth. It abounds in excellent horses and cattle, and there are mines of several kinds. The soil is very fertile; and there are good pastures, with wine, oil, and all manner of European fruits. The inhab. who are chiefly of the Greek church, are wretchedly ignorant; and the highest attainments of the ecclesiastics seldom go beyond reading and singing well, and knowing the ceremonies of the church. Walachia is governed by a prince, often elected by the people, and styled waywode, despot, or hospodar. He is a vassal of the Ottoman Porte; his yearly tribute generally amounting to about 60,000 ducats.

Walberton, Sussex, S W of Arundel. Walberry, Essex, near Hallingbury. Walbottle, Northumb. in Thrasterton manor. Walbridge, Somerset, over the Frome, leads into Wilts.

WALCHEREN, an island of Holland, the principal of Zealand. It is separated from the islands of N and S Beveland by the E Scheldt, and from Dutch Flanders by the W Scheldt; being surrounded on the other sides by the German Ocean. It is about 13 m. in length, and 8 in breadth, and, lying very low, is subject to inundations, but is pretty fruitful, and has good arable and pasture lands. The capital of this island, and of the whole province, is Middleburg.

Walcot, a village in Lincolns. on the borders of the fens, within 1 m. of Folkingham. It has a chalybeate spring, formerly much frequented. Walcot, Worcest. 2 m. NE of Pershore. Walcote, Leicesters. E of Lutterworth. Walcote, Lincoln, SW of Tattershal. Walcote, Lincolns. near the Trent, N of Burton. Walcote, Norfolk, near Happisburgh. Walcote, Norfolk, near Diss and Buraton. Walcote, Oxfords. near Charlbury. Walcote, Shrops. near Chirbury. Walcote, Shrops. SE of Bishop's-Castle; another W of Wellington. Walcote, Somersets. at the entrance of Bath from Wilts. Walcote, Warwickshire, in Haselar. Walcote, Warwickshire, a hamlet of Granborough.

WALCOURT, a town of Namur, seated on the river Heure, between the Meese and Sambre, 9 m. S of Charleroy. In 1689, Mareschal d'Humieres, desirous of celebrating the feast of St. Louis by a victory, attacked the allies, under Prince Waldeck, and the Earl of Marlborough, near this place; but after a fight of about 2 hours, was obliged to retire with great loss.

WALDAU, a town of Silesia, 3 m. NW of Lignitz.

WALDBURG, a castle, which gives name to a county of Swabia, situated between the Iller and the Danube, about 35 m. SSW of Ulm.

WALDECK, a town in the circle of Upper Rhine, capital of a county of the same name, N of Hesse, and E of the duchy of Westphalia. 18 m. WSW of Cassel.

WALDECK, a county in the circle of Upper Rhine, S of the bishopric of Paderborn, about 24 m. in length, and 2[illegible] in breadth. The country abounds in cattle and grain, though it is somewhat mountainous and woody; and there are mines of iron, copper, quicksilver, and alum. It contains 13 towns and a market village, and is supposed to bring in above 100,000 rix dollars to the prince.

WALDEN, SAFFRON, a town in Essex, seated among fields of saffron, which is here cultivated, though not so much of late as formerly. Dr. Stukeley, describing this town, says, it is the most beautiful situation he ever met with. It is 27 m. NW by N of Chelmsford, and 42 N by E of London. Market on Sat.

Walden, Yorks. W of North Cave. Walden, King's and St. Paul's, Herts, near Hitchin.

WALDENBURG, the name of several towns in Germany.

Waldern, Sussex, W of Warbleton. Waldershare, Kent, 4 m. and a half S of Sandwich. Walderswick, Suffolk, near Southwold. Walderton, Sussex, near the Merdens. Waldingfield, Magna and Parva, Suffolk, between Sudbury and Billeston. Waldinwells, Yorks. SE of Rotheram. Waldish, Dorsets. near Bridport. Walditch, Dorsets. 1 m. N of Baunton.

WALDKIRCH, a town in Austrian Swabia, in the Brisgau.

Waldridge, Durham, SW of Lumley-Castle. Waldridge, Bucks, in Dynton parish. Waldringfield, Suffolk, on the Deben, S of Woodbridge.

WALDSHUT, a town of Austrian Swabia, one of the four Forest Towns, 19 m. W of Schaffhausen, and 26 E of Basil.

WALDSTETTER SEE, or LAKE OF THE FOUR CANTONS, one of the finest lakes in Switzerland, with respect both to its extent, being 20 m. in length, and to the sublimity and variety of the scenery it exhibits. It consists of three principal branches, called the Lakes of Lucern, Schweitz, and Uri. The upper branch, or Lake of Lucern, is in the form of a cross, and is bounded towards the town by cultivated hills sloping gradually from the water, contrasted on the opposite side by a mass of barren and craggy rocks. Mount Pilate, one of the highest mountains in Switzerland, rises boldly from this lake. Towards the E of this branch, the lake contracts into a narrow creek, scarcely a mile across. Soon after, it again widens, and we enter the second branch, or Lake of Schweitz; with the canton of Underwalden on one side, and that of Schweitz on the other. Here the mountains are more lofty, and infinitely varied; some covered to the very summits with the most lively verdure, others perpendicular and craggy; here forming amphitheatres of wood; there jutting into the water in bold promontories. Near Brumen is the third branch, or Lake of Uri, which takes a SE direction; the scenery the most sublime imaginable. It is a deep and narrow lake, about 9 m. long, bordered on both sides by rocks uncommonly wild and romantic, and, for the most part, perpendicular, with forests of beech and pine growing down their sides to the very edge of the water.

WALES, a principality in the W of the island of Great Britain, comprehending 12 counties; namely Anglesey, Caernarvons. Denbighs.

Flints. Merioneths. and Montgomerys. in North Wales; Brecknocks. Cardigans. Carmarthens. Glamorgans. Pembrokes. and Radnorshire, in South Wales. This country is, for the most part, mountainous, but its produce sufficient for the maintenance of the inhab. It is the country to which the ancient Britons fled, when this island was invaded by the victorious Saxons. They are now called Welsh, and continue to preserve their ancient language. The western part is bounded by St. George's Channel and the Irish Sea; the southern by the Bristol Channel; the northern by the Irish Sea; and the eastern by the counties of Chester, Salop, Hereford, and Monmouth. It contains 751 parishes, 58 market towns, 119,398 houses and 320,155 inhab. being an increase of 70,242 since 1801. The air is clear and sharp, the cattle small, and provisions in general, good and cheap. Wales is particularly remarkable for goats, which naturally delight in hilly countries; for fuel, they use wood, coal, and turf. It is watered by many rivers, the principal of which are noted in the different counties. Wales was long governed by independent kings, till their last prince, Llewellyn, being vanquished and slain, in 1283, Edward I. reduced the whole country under the English dominion. He also invested the principality in his second son, Edward, who afterwards becoming heir of the English monarchy, the eldest son of the kings of England have ever since been created Princes of Wales. In the reign of Henry VIII. the government and jurisprudence of Wales were modelled according to the English form, and the inhab. admitted to the enjoyment of all the English rights and liberties, particularly that of sending members to parliament, a knight for every shire, and a burgess for every shire-town, except Merioneth.

WALES, NEW NORTH, a country of N America, W of Hudson's Bay.

WALES, NEW SOUTH, a country of N America, extending 150 leagues along the SW coast of Hudson's Bay, and subject to Great Britain. See HUDSON'S BAY and LABRADOR.

WALES, NEW SOUTH, the eastern coast of New Holland, extending from lat. 43 49 to 10 37 S, being the NE and SE extremities of that vast island. This coast was first explored by Captain Cook, in 1770; and a design was formed, in consequence of his recommendation, to settle a colony of convicts at Botany Bay, in lat. 4 80 S. Captain Arthur Phillips being appointed governor of the intended settlement, as well as commodore on the voyage, sailed from Portsmouth, 1787, on board the Sirius frigate, accompanied by the Supply tender, three store-ships, and six transports, which had on board a detachment of marines, and 778 convicts, of which 220 were women. He arrived at Botany Bay on the 18th of Jan. 1788; but finding this bay very ineligible, in many respects, for a colony, on farther exploring the coast, he fixed upon Port Jackson, about 3 leagues and a half N of Cape Banks; and here the settlement was begun, to which he gave the name of Sydney Cove. With respect to the country, a vast chain of lofty mountains runs nearly in a N and S direction, farther than the eye can reach, about 60 m. inland. The general face of the country is pleasing, diversified with gentle risings and small winding valleys, covered, for the most part, with large spreading trees, affording a succession of leaves in all seasons. A variety of flowering shrubs, almost entirely new to an European, and of exquisite fragrance, abound in those places which are free from trees; and among these, a tall shrub, bearing an elegant flower, which smells like English May, is peculiarly delightful, and perfumes the air to a great distance. The trees, according to Capt. Tench and others, are of so bad a grain, that they can scarcely be used for any purpose. This, however, has been ascribed, in Governor Phillips's voyage, to their being used in an unseasoned state. They yield vast quantities of red gum, which was found a cure for the dysentery. It is of an acrid quality, and therefore requires to be given along with opiates. The tree which yields it is of a very considerable size, and grows to a great height before it puts out any branches. The gum itself is usually compared to sanguis draconis, but differs from it in being soluble in water, which the sangais draconis is not. It may be extracted from the wood by tapping, or taken out of the veins when dry. There is likewise a yellow gum, which has the same medicinal qualities, but in an inferior degree. It is properly a resin, being entirely insoluble in water. It greatly resembles gamboge, but has not the property of staining, and is produced by a low, small plant, with long grassy leaves. The stem is strong and light, and is used by the natives for making their spears. The resin is generally dug up from the soil under the tree, not collected from it, and may perhaps be the same which Tasman calls gum lac of the ground. It has been tried by Dr. Blane, physician to St. Thomas's Hospital, in London, who found it very efficacious in the cure of old fluxes. Many of the plants of this country have been imported into Britain, and are now flourishing in perfection, not only in the royal botanical garden at Kew, but in many private collections. Of the few esculent plants, are a kind of bean, resembling the cocoa of the W. Indies; a sort of parsley and purslain; two sorts of yam, the cabbage-tree, and a palm-tree, whose nuts are very good food for hogs; with a species of cherry-tree, a wild fig, and another tree, whose fruit is not unlike a pine-apple in appearance. With respect to the climate of this country it appears not to be disagreeable: the heat has never been excessive in summer, nor is the cold intolerable in winter. Storms of thunder and lightning are frequent; but these are common to all warm countries. The quadrupeds hitherto discovered are principally of the opossum kind, of which the most remarkable is the kangaroo. There is also a species of dogs, very different from those known in Europe. They are extremely fierce, and cannot be brought to the same degree of familiarity with those we are acquainted with. Some of them have been brought to England, but still retain their native ferocity. These dogs, which are the only domestic animal they have, resemble the fox-dog of England. In their language these animals are called dingo; but all other quadrupeds, without exception, they name kanguroo. There are many beautiful birds, of various kinds; among which, the principal are, a black swan, its wings edged with white, its bill tinged with red; and the ostrich, or cassowary, which frequently reaches the height of seven feet, or more. Besides these, there are various kinds of sea and water fowl, soland geese, pelicans of an enormous size, gulls, shags, &c. with pigeons, quails, herons, cranes, hawks, eagles, bats, and many other land birds. Several kinds of serpents, both harmless and noxious, large spiders, centipedes, scolopendras, and lizards, have likewise been met with; together with a few insects, the principal of which are the mosquito and three or four species of ants, some as green as a leaf, which build their nests upon trees in a very singular manner. They bend down several of their leaves, each of which is as broad as a man's hand, and glue the points of them together, so as to form a purse; the viscus, used for this purpose, is an animal juice, which nature has enabled them to elaborate. Their sting is scarcely less painful than that of a bee. There are likewise many fishes, which are not known in Europe; and on the shoals and reefs are incredible numbers of the finest green turtles, gigantic cockles, lobsters, oysters, and crabs of various kinds. The inhabitants of New S. Wales go entirely naked; and though pleased at first with some ornaments that were given them, they soon threw them away as useless. It does not appear, however, that they are insensible of the benefits of clothing, or of some of the conveniencies of which their new neighbours are in possession. Their colour is rather a deep chocolate than a full black; but the filth with which their skins are uniformly covered, prevents its true colour from appearing. At some of their interviews with the colonists, several droll instances happened of their mistaking the negroes amongt the colonistsfor their own countrymen. Notwithstanding their disregard for European finery, they are fond of adorning, or rather deforming their bodies with scars, which have an uncommon, or rather hideous appearance. Sometimes the flesh is raised several inches from the skin, and appears as if filled with wind; and all these seemed to be reckoned marks of honour among them. Some of them perforate the cartilage of the nose, and thrust through it a bone as thick as a man's finger, and five or six inches long. This hideous kind of ornament, humourously called by the sailors their spritsail yard, so effectually stops up both nostrils, that they are forced to keep their mouths wide open for breath, and snuffle so when they speak, that they are scarcely intelligible even to one another. Their hair is generally so much clotted with the red gum already mentioned, that they resemble a mop. They paint themselves with various colours, and ornament themselves with beads and shells, but make no use of the beautiful feathers procured from the birds of the country. Most of the men want one of the fore teeth in the upper jaw, which also appears to be a badge of honour among them. It is very common among the women to cut off two joints of the little finger; which, considering the clumsiness of the amputating instruments they possess, must be a very painful operation. The New Hollanders appear extremely deficient in the useful arts. Of the cultivation of the ground they have no notion, nor can they be prevailed upon to eat bread or dressed meat. Hence they depend entirely for subsistence on the fruits and roots they can gather, and the fish they catch. They frequently set fire to the grass, in order to drive out the opossums, and other animals, from their retreats; and they have been observed to set decoys for quails. They sometimes contrive to kill the kanguroo, and even birds of various kinds. Their chief subsistence is fish; and when these happened to be scarce, they were wont to watch the first opportunity when the colonists hauled the seine, and often seized the whole, though a part had formerly been offered or given them. They sometimes strike the fish from the canoes with their spears, sometimes catch them with hooks, and also make use of nets, which are generally made of the fibres of the flax plants, with very little preparation, and are strong and heavy; the lines of which they are composed being twisted like whipcord. Some of them, however, appear to be made of the fur of an animal, and others of cotton. The meshes of their nets are made of very large loops artificially inserted into each other, but without any knots. Their hooks are made of the inside of a shell very much resembling mother-of-pearl. Their canoes are nothing more than large pieces of bark, tied up at both ends with vines: and, considering the slight texture of these vessels, we cannot but admire the dexterity with which they are managed, and the boldness with which they venture out to sea in them. Some of their vegetables are poisonous when raw, but deprived of this property when boiled. A convict unhappily experienced this by eating them in an unprepared state; in consequence of which he died in 24 hours. If bread be given to them, they chew and spit it out again, seldom chusing to swallow it. They like salt beef and pork rather better; but they could never be brought to taste spirits a second time. Their huts are formed in a very rude and barbarous manner. They consist only of pieces of bark laid out together in the form of an oven, open at one end, and very low, though long enough for a man to lie at full length. They also take shelter in the caverns, with which the rocks abound, and in the trunks of arge trees, which they excavate by means of fire. The custom of going naked does not inure them so to the climate as to make them insensible of the injuries of the weather. The colonists had repeated opportunities of observing this, by seeing them shivering with cold in the winter time, or huddling together in heaps in their huts, or in caverns, till a fire could be kindled to warm them. In their persons they are active, vigorous, and stout, though generally lean. They have a quick and piercing sight, and their sense of smelling is very acute. One of them having touched a piece of pork, held out his finger for his companion to smell, with strong marks of disgust. The only kind of food they eagerly accept of is fish. Few of the women, comparatively speaking, have been seen; and such of the females as have been seen, have soft and pleasing voices; and seem to be very chaste: and notwithstanding their barbarism, seem not to be entirely destitute of modesty. The men generally display great personal courage on the appearance of any danger. No encounters between parties of the natives themselves have been observed, though, from some circumstances, it appears that wars are carried on among them. They have more than once been seen assembled, as if bent on some expedition. An officer, one day, met 14 of them marching along in a regular Indian file through the woods, each man having a spear in one hand, and a stone in the other. A chief appeared at their head, who was distinguished from the rest by being painted. They passed on peaceably, though greatly superior in numbers to the English. On another occasion, they offered no hostilities when assembled to the number of 200 or 300, and meeting the governor attended only by a small party. With all their courage, however, they are much afraid of a musket, and almost equally so of a red coat, which they know to be the martial dress of the Europeans. The mischief which they have hitherto done has been exercised only on some of the straggling convicts, most of whom, probably, have been the aggressors.—Though they allow their beards to grow to a considerable length, it does not appear that they consider them as any ornament, but rather the contrary. Some young gentlemen belonging to the Sirius, one day met an old man in the woods, with a beard of considerable length, which they let him know they could rid him of, stroking their chins, and thus intimating the smoothness of them. At length he consented: and one of them taking a pen-knife from his pocket, and making the best substitute for lather he could, performed the operation with such success, that he seemed highly delighted. In a few days he paddled alongside of the Sirius, pointing to his beard; but he could not by any means be prevailed upon to enter the ship. On this a barber went down to him, who again freed him from his beard, at which he expressed the utmost satisfaction. They certainly burn their dead; which, perhaps, has given rise to the story of their being cannibals. Governor Phillips observing the ground to be raised in several places, caused one of these tumuli to be opened, in which were found a jaw-bone half consumed, and some ashes. From the manner in which the ashes are deposited, it appears that the body has been laid at length, raised from the ground a little space, and consumed in that posture, being afterward lightly covered with mould. They are so honest among themselves, that they leave their spears, and other implements, on the open beach, in perfect security of their remaining untouched. They are very expert at throwing their javelins, and will hit a mark with great certainty, at a considerable distance. To produce fire they take two pieces of dry, soft wood: one a stick about nine inches long, the other flat. The stick they shape into an obtuse point at one end; and pressing it upon the other, turn it out nimbly, by holding it between both their hands, as we do a chocolate-mill; often shifting their hands up, and then moving them down upon it, to increase the pressure as much as possible. By this method they get fire in less than two minutes, and from the smallest spark they increase it with great speed and dexterity. These people are more numerous than was at first imagined; though still the number of inhab. must be accounted few in comparison to the extent of the country; and there is great reason to believe that the interior parts are uninhabited; as from their great use of fish, it seems necessary for them to live principally on the coasts. The jurisdiction of the governor of New South Wales extends from 43 49 to 10 37 S lat. From the sea-coast it extends westward as far as lon. 135 E, and thence proceeding in an easterly direction, includes all the islands in the Pacific Ocean, within the abovementioned latitudes. See BOTANY BAY, HOLLAND NEW, PORT JACKSON, and SYDNEY COVE.

Walesby, Lincolns. near Market Raisin. Walesby, Notts, SW of Tuxford. Walton, Cumberl. where the river Cambeck crosses the Picts' Wall, near Lanercost. Walfield, Chesh. near Congleton. Walfleet, a bank in Essex, noted for oysters. It is situated at the mouth of the river Crouch, towards Foulness Isle. Wolford, Gloucesters. W of Preston-upon-Stour. Wolford, Herefords. S of Ross; another N of Brompton-Bryan. Walford, Shrops. W of Albrighton. Walgrave, Northamptons. between Northampton and Kettering. Walgrave, Berks, in the parish of Bray. Walgrave, Yorks. near Scarborough. Walham, Notts, SE of Blith. Walham Green, Middl. between Little Chelsea and Fulham, has several genteel houses. Walham Mead, near Gloucester. Walhampton, Hants, near Lymington.

WALHAUSEN, a town of Switzerland, 10 m. W of Lucerne.

WALKENRIED, a town of Klettenberg, Upper Saxony, 44 m. NNW of Erfurt.

WALKENSEE, a town of Bavaria, 18 m. SE of Wilheim.

Walker, Northumberl. on the Tyne, NE of Newcastle. Walkeringham, Notts, SE of Misterton. Walkern, Herts, E of Stevenage, on the river Beane. Walkham, or Waycomb, Somersets. near Wells. Walkhampton, Devons. SE of Tavistock. Walkhamsted, Surry, near Godstone.

WALKILL, a river of N. America, in New York. See DROWNED LANDS.

Walkingham, Yorks. SW of Boroughbridge. Walkington, Yorks. near Beverley. Wall, Northumberl. N of Hexham. Wall, Staffords. S of Lichfield, has the remains of walls encompassing two acres of ground, called Castle Crofts, wherein have been found two ancient pavements of Roman bricks. A tradition has prevailed here, from time immemorial, that by this field there was a city, but demolished before the conquest; which is judged the more probable from the several Roman coins found here, and from the plain appearance of the military way called Watling-street, from hence to Penkridge. Wall, and Marsh, Kent, near Romney. Wall-End, Northumberl. 3 m. from Newcastle-upon-Tyne. Wall Grange, Staffords. on the Churnet, between Cheadle and Leek.

WALLACE TOWN, a considerable town of Scotland, in Ayrshire, founded in the 18th century by Sir W. Wallace, 3 m. NE of Ayr.

Walland, Gloucesters. near Bristol. Wallborough, Hants, near W. Woodhay. Wallapoint, Devons. NE of Kingsbridge.

WALLASEA, an island on the coast of Essex, at the mouths of the Coln and Blackwater, containing the parishes of E. and W. Mersey.

WALLENBURG, a town of Basle, Switzerland, 15 m. NNE of Soleure.

Wallendon, Devons. near Meth.

WALLENSTADT, a town of Switzerland, incorporated into the bailiwick of Sargans, but enjoying many distinct privileges. It derives its importance from the passage of the merchandise transported from Germany through the Grisons, to Italy. It is seated at the E end of a lake of the same name, 15 m. NW of Coira.

WALLENSTADT, a lake of Switzerland, about 9 m. in length, and two in breadth. It is bounded by high mountains, except to the E and W, the scenery of which is uncommonly wild and picturesque. On the side of the canton of Glarus, the mountains which form its borders are cultivated; enriched with wood or fine meadows, and studded with churches, cottages, and small villages; the Alps of Glarus rising behind, their tops covered with snow. On the other side, for the most part, the rocks are grotesque, craggy, inaccessible, and perpendicular; but here and there a few cultivated necks of land are formed at the edge of the lake, and at the bottom of these rocks, exhibiting a beautiful contrast to the barrenness above and round them. Numberless waterfalls, occasioned by the melting of the snows, fall down the sides of the mountains from a considerable height, and with a most inconceivable variety. This lake is exceedingly clear, deep, and cold.

Wallerscot, Chesh. near Vale Royal.

WALLESEA ISLES, Essex, in the river Crouch, W of Foulness Isle. The water here is brackish; on which account the inhab. fetch what they use from the other side of the creek. It is 5 m. long and 1 broad, and is secured from the sea by a bank of earth.

Walley, Notts, near Holbeck Woodhouse. Walliborn, Shrops. NE of Minsterley.

WALLINGFORD, a borough town in Berks, seated on the Thames, over which is a stately stone bridge, above 300 yards long, with 19 arches and 4 drawbridges. The principal trade is making of malt. It is a place of antiquity, having been surrounded by a wall 1½ m. in circumf. It contains 363 houses and 1901 inhab. In the times of the Danes and Saxons, it had a strong castle, now demolished, which was often besieged in the barons' wars. It has a free school, and a handsome market-house, in which the magistrates keep the sessions; and is 14 m. NNW of Reading, and 46 W of London. Markets on Tuesd. and Frid Wallington, Herts, a mile NE of Bigrave. Wallington, Norf. near Downham. Wallington, Northumberl. E of Kirk Whelpington. Wallington, Surry, in Carshalton parish. Wallingwells, Notts, NW of Worksop.

WALLOE, a town of Norway, 5 m. from Tonsberg, noted for its extensive salt-works, producing annually 25,000 tons.

WALLOONS, a name formerly given to the inhab. of a considerable part of the Netherlands.

Wallop, Upper, Middle, and Lower, Hants, on the river Wallop, near Stockbridge. Wallop, Upper and Lower, Shrops. near Cause Castle.

Wall-Town, Northumberl. near Thirlwall Castle, near the Picts' Wall, which, a little to the W of it, is in the greatest perfection: it is 3 yards high, and has 16 regular courses, and at one part are 16 of the facing stones entire. Wall Town, Northumberl. on the Picts' Wall, N of Ovingham. Walmer, Kent, 1½ m. S of Deal, separated from its coast by a narrow channel. It has an ancient castle, erected by Henry VIII. in which the Lord Warden of the Cinque Ports occasionally resides. Walmer, Glouceters. in Westbury parish. Walmesley, Lancas. NW of Bury.

WALMIRSTADT, a town of Magdeburg, Lower Saxony, situated on the Ohra, 10 m. N of Magdeburg.

Saxons, against the incursions of the Britons. It is a strong earthen rampart, with a broad ditch on the S side.

WANSFORTH, or WANSFORD BRIGGS, opposite to Stibbington in Huntingdons. It has a fine bridge over the Nen, and a fine wharf on its banks. It is noted for the story of a man who was carried down the stream at this place, by the sudden rise of the river, as he slept upon a hay-cock; supposed to be the famous Barnaby Harrington, better known by the title of Drunken Barnaby, who has given us an account of the adventure, in one part of his entertaining journey.

Thence to Wansforth Briggs—a river
And a wife, will live for ever;
River broad, an old wife jolly,
Comely, seemly, free from folly;
Gates and gardens neatly specious,
Ports and parks and pastures spacious.
On a hay-cock sleeping soundly,
The river rose and took me roundly
Down the current; people cried;
Sleeping, down the stream I hied;
Where away, quoth they, from Greenland?
No; from Wansforth-Briggs, in England.

Barnabæ Itinerarium, Part III.

W of Uppingham. Wardley, Yorks. SW of Halifax. Wardon, or Wardrew, Northumb. on the river Irthing, NW of Thirlwall-Castle. It has a famous spa, the waters of which have been analyzed, and their virtues ascertained, with conveniences for a few visitors. The situation is retired, but not romantic, having few objects either to elevate or entertain.

Wardour Castle, Wilts, a magnificent Gothic structure, 2 m. NE of Shaftesbury, about 1000 yards from the road. The entrance to it is wild and picturesque. About a m. from it, a new mansion, on a most magnificent plan, standing beautifully under a woody hill, with a large piece of water before it, has been many years in erecting.

WARE, a town in Herts, seated on the river Lea, containing 663 houses and 3369 inhab. by which 5000 quarters of malt and corn are frequently sent in a week to London, by barges, which return with coals, 21 m. N of London. In the year 1408, this town was destroyed by a great inundation; and sluices and wears being made in the river to preserve it from future floods, Camden supposes that it hence derived its name. It has been of increasing note, ever since the reign of King John, when the high road to the N was laid through it. Market on Tuesd.

Ware, Devons. near Biddiford. Ware, Upper and Lower, Somersets. SW of Axbridge.

WAREBRIDGE, WAADBRIDGE, or WADEBRIDGE, a town in Cornw. chiefly noted for its bridge over the river Camel, which is much the largest in the country, having about 20 arches; some of which are built upon woolpacks, because of the quicksands. It is 5 m. NNW of Bodmin, and 242 W by S of London. Market on Sat.

WAREHAM, a very ancient borough town of Dorsets. built very regular, and forming almost a long square. The streets generally intersect each other at right angles, especially the 4 principal ones, which take their names from the cardinal points. It was formerly a large place, with 17 churches, which are now reduced to 3, as its once noted harbour is choked up. Brithric, the 1st king of the W. Saxons, was interred here. The inhab. are 1709, and trade in tobacco-pipe clay, stockings, iron, and coals. It contains, within the walls, 302 houses, and is situated on a rising ground, in a healthy air, near the mouth of the Frome, where it empties itself into Pool Harbour, 9 m. WSW of Pool, and 114 W by S of London. Market on Sat. Wareham, All Saints, and Magdalen, Norf, near Wells. Wareham Bridge, Yorks. on the river Ware, 5 m. from Stockton.

WARRINGTON, a large, neat, populous, and rich, though ancient built town of Lancas. with large manufactories of sail-cloth, sacking, huckabacks, pins, &c. Glass-houses and copper-smelting furnaces are likewise established here; and the cotton trade is now gaining ground. It contains 2523 houses, and 11,738 inhab. Large quantities of potatoes are annually exported. It is seated on the Mersey, over which it has a fine stone bridge, the last on this river, leading into Cheshire, on the great road from London to Carlisle, 18 m. E of Liverpool, and 183 NNW of London. A considerable market on Wednesd. for flesh, corn, cattle, potatoes, and all sorts of fish. Also a market once a week for huckabacks.

WARSAW, a large city of Saxony, the capital of a duchy, late a city of Poland. It is surrounded by a moat and double wall, and consists of the Old and New Town; and two suburbs, Kralca and Praga. The general diets, provincial assembly, and court of judicature, were held here. This city and its suburbs occupy a vast extent of ground, and are supposed to contain between 60 and 70,000 inhab. among whom are a great number of foreigners. The whole has a melancholy appearance, exhibiting the strong contrast of wealth and poverty, luxury and distress, which pervades every part of this unhappy country. The streets are spacious, but ill paved; the churches and public buildings are large and magnificent; the palaces of the nobility are numerous and splendid; but the greatest part of the houses, particularly in the suburbs, are mean and ill-constructed wooden hovels. In its last siege by the Russians, in 1794, it is computed that 30,000 Poles perished either by the sword, or in the flames; the suburb of Praga having been set on fire, and nearly the whole of it reduced to ashes by the Russians. It is situated on the Vistula, which is about as broad here as the Thames at Westminster, but very shallow in summer. Lat. 52 14 N lon. 21 6 E.

Warsborough, Yorks. W. Riding, 1 m. from Stainborough. Warsdale, Cumberl. N of Eskdale. Warslow, Staffords. between Sheen and Butterton. Warsop, Notts, between Worksop and Mansfield.

NE of Gainsborough. Warton, Northumberl. W of Rothbury. Warton, Yorks. near Wilton and Yorkswould. Wartree, Lancas. near Liverpool. Warwick, Cumberl. NE of Carlisle, and a little N of Wetherill. It has a stone bridge over the Eden.

WARWICK, called by the Britons CAER GUARVIC, and CAER LEON, a fine, large, neat, and ancient town of Warwicks. the capital of the county. Here is a castle, formerly the seat of the Earls of Warwick, which stands on a rock, 40 feet higher than the river, but even with the town on the N side. From its terrace, there is a prospect of a beautiful country beyond the Avon, consisting of rich meadows, tall groves, spacious parks, &c. Warwick has, at present, only two parish churches, though it formerly had six, and as many monasteries. The houses are in general well-built, and the streets, which are spacious and regular, all meet in the centre of the town, containing 1251 houses, and 6497 inhab. At each end of the principal one is an ancient gate. It is adorned with a good free-school, and a town-house of free-stone, supported by pillars, in which the assizes and quarter-sessions are held; has a good trade in malt, and is situated upon a rocky eminence, near the river Avon, over which is an elegant stone bridge of one arch, with a descent from it every way, which always keeps it clean, 10 m. SSW of Coventry, and 93 NNW of London. Within 1 m. of it, on the Avon, is Guy's Cliff, (a pretty retired cell, among groves and springs,) where Guy, Earl of Warwick, of fabulous, or at least obscure history, is said to have lived a hermit, after his military exploits abroad. Markets on Wednesd. and Saturd.

WARWICK, a town of Virginia, 6 m. S of Richmond; another town of Virginia, 65 m. ESE of Richmond; and a town in Rhode Island, 7 m. S of Providence.

WARWICKSHIRE, a county of England, bounded at its northern extremity by a point of Derbys. on the NW by Staffords. on the NE by Leicesters. on the W by Worcesters. on the E by Northamptons. and on the S by Gloucesters. and Oxfords. Its extent from N to S is about 47 m. and about 35 from E to W, where widest. It is the most central county in the kingdom, and somewhat of an oval form, is divided into 4 hundreds, and 1 liberty, and contains 1 city, 1 borough, and 11 market towns, 193 parishes, 44,940 houses, and 109,539 inhab. The air is mild, pleasant, and healthy, and the more so since the woodlands have been thinned by the great consumption of wood in the ironworks; the woodlands being now converted to tillage and pasture. The northern part of the county, called the Woodlands, is divided from the S, called the Feldon, by the river Avon; but the soil of both is rich. This county produces corn, malt, wood, wool, cheese, coal, and lime-stone. Mr. Wedge, in his view of the agriculture of this county, estimates the whole at 618,000 acres, of which only about 154,530 are constantly under a successive round of tillage or grass seeds. The remaining 463,470 acres he supposes to consist, of gardens, about 4000 acres; of meadows, 82,000 acres; of pasture and feeding land, 150,000; of woods, canals, rivers, &c. 50,000; of open field-land, 57,000; and of waste lands and roads, 126,470 acres. The principal rivers are the Avon, Tame, and Arrow. The canals that pass through this county are, one from the Wednesbury and Dudley coal and lime works, to Birmingham, and from thence to Fazeley and Fradley Heath, to join the Staffords. Grand Trunk, extending from Fazeley to Atherstone, Bedworth, and Coventry; one reaching from that at Longford to Braunston and Oxford; one from Birmingham to Worcester; one branching out of the Worcester, one way to Dudley, &c. and the other to Stratford-upon-Avon; and one from Birmingham to Warwick. Warwick is the county-town. The Roman roads called the Watling-street and Fossway, passed through this county.

N of Durham. Washington, Sussex, NW of Steyning.

WASHINGTON, the name of several counties in the United States of N. America; namely, in Rhode Island; in New York, of which Salem is the capital; in the SW corner of Pennsylvania; its capital of the same name, 20 m. SSW of Pittsburg, is considerable for a variety of manufactures; in Maryland; in Virginia; in N. Carolina; in S. Carolina; in the district of Charleston; and in Georgia, the capital of which is Golphinton; also a town in Kentucky, situated on the Ohio, 66 m. ENE of Frankfort.

WASHINGTON, a town of N. Carolina, formerly called Bath; it is seated on the N side of the river Tar, with a good harbour, 20 m. NW of Newbern.

WASHINGTON, a town of N. America, in Georgia, and county of Wilkes. Near it is a medicinal spring, which rises from a hollow tree, the inside of which is covered with a coat of nitre an inch thick; and the leaves around the spring are incrusted with a substance as white as snow. The waters have been found beneficial in rheumatic cases, and are said to be so in all disorders arising from humours in the blood. It is 13 m. SW of Petersburgh.

WASHINGTON, a city of N. America, now building for the metropolis of the United States. It is seated at the junction of the rivers Potomac and the Eastern branch, extending about 4 m. up each, including a tract of territory scarcely to be exceeded, in point of convenience, salubrity, and beauty, by any in the world. This territory, which is called Columbia, lies partly in the state of Virginia, and partly in that of Maryland, and was ceded by those two States to the United States of America, and by them established to be the seat of government, after the year 1800. The plan combines not only convenience, regularity, elegance of prospect, and a free circulation of air, but every thing grand and beautiful that can be introduced into a city. It is divided into squares or grand divisions, by streets running due N and S, and E and W, which form the groundwork of the plan. However, from the capitol, the president's house, and some of the important areas in the city, run diagonal streets, from one material object to another, which not only produce a variety of fine prospects, but remove the insipid sameness which renders some other great cities unpleasing. They were devised to connect the separate and most distinct objects with the principal, and to preserve through the whole a reciprocity of sight. These great leading streets are all 160 feet wide, including a pavement of 10 feet, and a gravel walk of 30 feet planted with trees on each side, which will leave 80 feet of paved street for carriages. The rest of the streets are, in general, 110 feet wide, with a few only 90 feet, except North, South, and East Capitol Streets, which are 160 feet. The diagonal streets are named after the respective states composing the Union, while those running N and S are, from the capitol eastward, named East First Street, East Second Street, &c. and those W of it are, in the same manner, called West First Street, West Second Street, &c. Those running E and W are from the capitol northward, named North A Street, North B Street, &c. and those S of it are called South A Street, South B Street, &c. The squares, or divisions of the city, amount to 1150. The rectangular squares generally contain from 3 to 6 acres, and are divided into lots of from 40 to 80 feet in front, and their depth, from about 110 to 300 feet, according to the size of the square. The irregular divisions produced by the diagonal streets are some of them small, but generally in valuable situations. Their acute points are all to be cut off at 40 feet, so that no house in the city will have an acute corner. All the houses must be of brick or stone. The area for the capitol (or house for the legislative bodies) is situated upon the most beautiful eminence in the city, about a mile from the Eastern Branch, and not much more from the Potomac, commanding a full view of the city, as well as a considerable extent of the country around. The president's house stands upon a rising ground, not far from the banks of the Potomac, affording a fine water prospect, with a commanding view of the capitol. Due S from the president's house, and due W from the capitol, run two great pleasure parks, or malls, which intersect and terminate upon the banks of the Potomac, ornamented at the sides by a variety of elegant buildings, houses for foreign ministers, &c. The president of the United States, in locating the seat of the city, prevailed upon the proprietors of the soil to cede a certain portion of the lots in every situation, to be sold by his direction, and the proceeds to be solely applied to the public buildings, and other works of public utility within the city. This grant will produce about 13,000 lots, and will be sufficient not only to erect the public buildings, but to dig a canal, conduct water through the city, and to pave and light the streets, which will save a heavy tax that arises in other cities, and consequently render the lots considerably more valuable. The Eastern Branch of the Potomac is one of the safest and most commodious harbours in America, being sufficiently deep for the largest ships, for about 4 m. above its junction with the Potomac. This river contains 30 and 35 feet to near the upper end of the city, where it is 18 and 20 feet deep. The lands upon the Potomac, above the city of Washington, all around it, and for 60 m. below, are high and dry, abounding with innumerable springs of excellent water, and well covered with large timber of various kinds. A few miles below the city, upon the banks of the Potomac, are mountains of excellent free-stone, of the white and red Portland kinds, of which the public edifices in the city are now building. Above the city also, upon the banks of the river, are immense quantities of excellent coal, lime-stone, and marble, with blue slate of the best quality. The Tyber, which is the principal stream that passes through the city, is to be collected in a grand reservoir, beside the capitol, whence it will be carried in pipes to different parts of the city; while its surplus water will fall down in beautiful cascades through the public gardens W of the capitol, into a canal. The plan of this city was first formed by Major L'Enfant. It is 100 m. SW of Philadelphia. Lat. 38 53 N lon. 75 15 W.

Wasing, Berks. near Aldermaston. Wasperton, Warwicks. on the Avon, a little below Barford.

WASUNGEN, a town of Henneburg, in Franconia, situated on the Werra, 4 m. SW of Schmalkalden.

WATCHET, an ancient town of Somersets. in the parish of St. Decumans, on the Bristol Channel, with a harbour, and a few small coasting vessels, which supply the glass-houses at Bristol with the ashes of sea-weed, of which abundance is burnt here for that purpose. The inhabitants fetch vast heaps of pebbles from the coast, and burn it into lime for building; no cement being more durable for masonry that is to lie under water, where it grows as hard as marble. They also export lime-stone and alabaster, great quantities of which fall down the cliffs by the washing of the sea, and gather great plenty of the lichen marinus, or sea-liver-wort, on the rocky coast and cliffs, at low water, which they send to distant parts of the country. It contains about 140 houses, and is 14 m. NNW of Bridgewater, and 153 W by S of London. Market on Sat.

Watchfield, Berks. near Shrivenham.

WATEEDOO, an island in the S. Pacific Ocean, about 6 m. long and 4 broad, discovered by Captain Cook in 1777; it is a beautiful spot, with a surface composed of hills and plains, and covered with verdure. The soil in some parts is light and sandy; but farther up the country a reddish cast was seen on the rising grounds where the islanders build their houses, 2 or 3 of which were perceived by glasses to be long and spacious. The manners of the people of this island, their general habits of life, method of treating strangers, language, religious ceremonies, &c. greatly resemble those that prevail at Otaheite. The language spoken here was usually well understood by Omai, and by two New-Zealanders. Lat. 20 1 S lon. 15 15 W.

Waten-Lath, Cumberl. S of Keswick. Water, Cumberl. near Langholm. Water-Beach, Cambridges. WATERFORD, a city and sea-port of Munster, in Ireland, capital of a county of the same name, and containing about 35,000 inhab. The streets are narrow, and the air is not very healthy; but it has an excellent harbour, situated extremely well for trade, and ships of great burden may ride at the quay. It stands on the Suir, which is a broad, deep, and rapid river, 5 m. above its junction with the Nore and Barrow. The white glass, and other manufactures, are in a flourishing state. It has a considerable trade to Newfoundland. For many weeks together, upwards of 3000 hogs are killed weekly; and of butter, there have been exported from 60 to 70,000 casks per annum; besides which, the commerce in beef, corn, linen, &c. with England and other countries, is very considerable. The quay is above ½ m. in length, and of a considerable breadth. Packet boats sail now regularly between this port and Milford-Haven. It is 8 m. N of St. George's Channel, and 75 S by W of Dublin. Lat. 52 18 N lon. 7 8 W.

WATERFORD, a county of Ireland, about 40 m. in length, and from 8 to 24 in breadth; bounded on the S by St. George's Channel; on the W by Cork and a part of Tipperary; on the N by the river Suir, which separates it from Tipperary and Kilkenny; and on the E by Waterford Haven, which parts it from Wexford. It contains 34 parishes, about 18,796 houses, and 110,000 inhab.; and though in general mountainous, with here and there frightful rocks and precipices, is a fine country, fertile, pleasant, and rich. Among the mountains are 4 considerable loughs or lakes, in which are found trout and char. On the summits of most of them (which are in some part 720 yards above the level of the sea) are large heaps of stones of great size, supposed to be the ruins of some buildings, but without the intervention of mortar or cement.

NE of Northampton, and 68 N by W of London. It contains 736 houses, and 4000 inhab. It has a great trade in corn, and a manufacture of lace; as also a very considerable one of shoes, there being not less than 1000 shoemakers constantly employed here, of whom about 50 are principal manufacturers. It had the name of Wellingborough Forum, from its market (granted by King John at the petition of the monks of Crowland, who were then in possession of the manor) and from the many wells or springs in and about the town, some of which are medicinal, particularly the noted one, called Red Wells. Henrietta Maria, wife to Charles I. lay many weeks here to drink them. A dreadful fire, in July 1738, consumed about 800 dwelling-houses, out-houses, &c. comprising the greatest part of the town, in 6 hours' time, so that very few had time to save their effects; but it is since rebuilt in a more handsome manner, of a kind of red stone, the foundation of which is chiefly on a red-stone rock. Market on Wed.

Wellingham, Norf. S of Rainham-Hall. Wellingham, Sussex, N of Lewes, on the same river. Wellington, Herefords. E of Webley. Wellington, Sussex, 2 m. N of Lewes.

WELLINGTON, a town of Shropshire, the inhabitants of which are chiefly employed in digging for coal, lime, and iron-stone. Here is no particular manufactory, but there are two furnaces, worked by a steam-engine, one of the largest in England. Its church has been lately rebuilt, and is supported on cast-iron pillars, which give a lightness to the building, and have a very good effect. It is seated near Wrekin Hill, 12 m. E of Shrewsbury, and 152 NW of London, and contains 1668 houses, and 8213 inhab. A pretty good market on Thurs.

WELLINGTON, a town of Somersets. containing 721 houses, with a manufactory of serges, druggets, &c. and a considerable pottery. It is seated on the river Tone, 7 m. SW of Taunton, on the road to Exeter, and 147 W by S of London. Market on Thurs.

WESTMINSTER, a city of Middlesex, the residence of the monarchs of Great Britain, the seat of the parliament, and of the high courts of justice, and constituting, with London and Southwark, with which it is so united as to appear one city, the metropolis of the British empire. In early times, this great and noble part of the metropolis, was a little, mean, unhealthy place, (with nothing in it worthy of notice, but its minster or abbey, built where formerly stood a temple of Apollo, till thrown down by an earthquake, in the time of Antoninus Pius) and situated to the W of St. Paul's, or London, in a marshy island called Thorney, surrounded on one side by the Thames, and on the others by a branch of the river, called Longditch. For the convenience of this minster or monastery, a few houses were, probably, first erected, which, at length, grew into a small town, called in ancient books the town of Westminster. It was, for many ages, a place entirely distinct from London, and there was a large space between them. The road which led from London to it was called the Strand; which was first paved as far as the Savoy, in the year 1385. Westminster owed its most distinguished privileges to Henry VIII. who, in the 37th year of his reign, erected it into an honour, and on the dissolution of its famous abbey, in the year 1541, he converted it into a bishopric, appointing the county of Middlesex, (Fulham excepted) for the diocese. It had, however, but one prelate, for Edward VI. translated the see to Norwich. Upon this occasion Westminster became a city, for the making of which, according to lord chief-justice Coke, nothing more is required than the appellation of a bishop's see. The abbey, dedicated to St. Peter, is now a collegiate church, the dean of which is always the bishop of Rochester. See LONDON.

Westminston, Sussex, near Chiltington. Westmoor, Somers. near Barrington.

WESTMORLAND, a county of England, bounded on the NW and N by Cumberl.; on the E and SE by Yorks.; and on the S and SW by Lancashire. Its extent from NE to S is 40 m. and its breadth about 24. It is generally divided into the baronies of Kendal and Westmorl. as also into four wards, which contain 11 market towns, 32 parishes, 220 villages, 8736 houses, and 45,922 inhab. The air is clear, sharp, and salubrious, the natives being seldom troubled with diseases, and generally living to a good old age. The soil is various, that on the mountains is very barren, while the Lowlands, called the Barony, or bottom of Westmorl. a large, open, champaign country, about 20 m. long, and 14 broad, are fertile, producing good corn and grass, especially in the meadows near the rivers. In the hilly parts, on the western borders, it is generally believed there are vast quantities of copper ore and veins of gold; some mines of copper are worked, but most of the ore lies so deep, that it will not answer the expense. This country yields the finest slate, and abundance of excellent hams are cured here. The mountainous districts, here called Fells, which compose a large part of the county, are far from being unprofitable; they feed large flocks of sheep, produce plenty of grouse, or moor game, and abound with rivulets, which water the valleys beneath. The principal rivers are the Eden, Lone, and Ken, which carry their name to the sea; with the smaller streams of Lowther, Tees, Emont, Belo, and Rootha. It has also several fine lakes, the principal of which is Winander-Mere, the bottom of which is one continued rock. In the forest of Martindale, to the S of Ulls Water, the breed of red deer still exists in a wild state. The Earl of Thanet is hereditary sheriff. Appleby is the county-town, but Kendal is the most considerable one, for size, trade, and population.

WESTPHALIA, named originally from the people inhabiting between the Weser and the Rhine, who were called Westphalians (the ancient Saxons, in general, being divided into Westphalians, Angrians, and Eastphalians), one of the circles of Germany, bounded on the E and S by the circles of Lower Saxony and Upper and Lower Rhine; on the W by the United Provinces; and on the N by the German Ocean, and circle of Lower Saxony. According to the treaty concluded at Paris in May 1811, it contains 825 square m. and 2,065,973 inhab. exclusive of the army of 30,000: there are 206 cities, 96 towns, 4438 villages. It is divided into 8 departments, the Aller, Elbe, Fulda, Leine, Ocker, Saale, Werra, and the Hartz. The air is cold, but the soil produces pastures and some corn, though there are a great many marshes. The horses are large, and the hogs are in high esteem, especially the hams, known by the name of Westphalia hams. The principal rivers are the Weser, the Embs, the Lippe, and the Roer. It contains the sovereign bishoprics of Osnaburg, Munster, and Paderborn, the abbeys of Corvy, Stablo, Essen, and Verden, the principality of Minden, the counties of Ravensburg, Tecklenburg, Ritburg, Lippe, Spiegleberg, Schawenburg, Hoye, Diepholt, Delmenhorst, Oldenburg, Embden, or East Friesland, Bentheim, and Mark; the cities of Cologne and Aix-la-Chapelle; the town of Dortmund; and the duchies of Juliers, Berg, and Cleves, with some smaller states and signiories. The diets of the circle are usually appointed at Cologne, but the archives are kept at Dusseldorf.

WESTPHALIA, THE DUCHY OF, in the circle of Lower Rhine, S of Munster and Lippe, and E of Berg and Mark; it is about 40 m. in length, and near 30 in breadth, and is pretty much a mountainous country, full of wood, but moderately fertile, producing corn, cattle, game, and fish, with plenty of iron ore, lead, calamy, copper, and silver, with salt springs, &c. The principal rivers are the Ruhr, the Lenne, the Dimel, and the Lippe. It is subject to the archbishops and electors of Cologne, who governed it by marshals till the year 1442, but at present it is under the direction of an electoral bailiff. Brilon is the capital.

WESTPOINT, a town of Virginia, situated on the York river, 35 m. E of Richmond.

WESTPORT, a sea-port of Mayo, in Connaught, seated on a small river, whose mouth here forms a fine bay within Clew bay, 8 m. W of Castlebar.

WESTRA, one of the Orkney islands, containing about 1300 inhab. It is about 8 m. long, and from 1 to 3 broad, and is situated 9 m. NNE from the island of Pomona. There are two sloops of 70 or 80 tons burden, belonging to this island, chiefly employed in carrying kelp to market; and there is a good harbour, for small vessels, on the NW coast.

WETERAVIA, or WETTERAW, a country of Germany, situated between Hesse and the river Maine, and so named from the river Wetter, which rises in the county of Solms, and runs into the river Nidda at Assenheim. The northern part is called Westerwald.

Wetherslades, Northumberl. NW of Tinmouth. Wethele, Warwicks. W of Arrow; has a chapel dependent on the church of Kinwarton. Wetheral, Cumberl. near Carlisle, formerly a monastery, the gate of which, with a fine elliptic arch, still remains. Near it are 3 remarkable cells, communicating with each other by means of a gallery in front. They are cut out of the solid rock, about 40 feet above the level of the river which washes the bottom of the rock, and are very difficult of access. The only way to come at them is by a narrow and difficult pass from whence there is a perpendicular ascent of about 7 feet, which could only be surmounted by means of a ladder, which the person ascending might draw up after him.

WETHERBY, a small trading town in the W. Riding of Yorks. seated on the river Wharfe, 4 m. NW of Tadcaster, 14 S by W of York, and 180 N by W of London. Market on Thurs.

Wetherden, Suffolk, E of Wulpit. Wetheringset, Suffolk, near Mendlesham. Wetherley, Leices. SW of Bosworth. Wethersdale, Suffolk, SE of Harleston.

WETHERSFIELD, a town in the State of Connecticut, 4 m. S of Hartford. It is noted for raising onions.

Wethersfield, Essex, E of Thaxted. Wethhill, Somers. S of Dunster. Wethiton, NE of Shrewsbury. Weting, All Saints, and St. Mary, Norfolk, between Thetford and Methwould, near Brandon ferry. In its fields is a fine, green way, called Walsingham Way, being the road which the pilgrims passed, when they went to visit our lady of Walsingham. Here is an ancient fortification, supposed to be Danish, of a semi-circular form, with a double rampart and ditch; its area consists of about 12 acres, in which are a great number of pits, regularly contiguous to each other, so deep and numerous as to be capable of receiving and concealing a small army. Here are also the venerable remains of a square castle of flint, moated.

WETTELSHEIM, a town of Germany, in Anspach.

WETTER a lake of Sweden, in E. Gothland, to the SE of Lake Wenner. It is about 65 m. in length and from 10 to 16 in breadth. It is much higher than either the Baltic or the North sea, and is deep and clear, but very boisterous in winter. Its outlet is by the river Motala.

WETTER, a town of Marck, in Westphalia, and a town of Hesse, 6 m. NW of Marburg, in the circle of Upper Rhine.

WETTSTINGEN, a town of Germany in Bishopric of Munster.

WETTING, a town of Magdeburg, in Lower Saxony, situated on the Saale, 34 m. S of Magdeburg. In the neighbourhood are some coal mines.

WETTINGEN, a town of Baden County, in Switzerland, situated on the river Limmat, over which it has a celebrated wooden bridge (executed by the same architect who built the bridge over the Rhine at Schaffhausen,) 1 m. S of Baden.

Wetton, Shrops. on the river Onny, NW of Ludlow. Wetton, Staffords. near Grindon. In its parish is Eaton-Hill, where copper ore is dug. Wetwang, Yorks. E. Riding, between Wilton and Kilham. Wetwood, Northumberl. in Vesey Barony. Wetzwood, Yorks near Leeds.

WETZLAR, an imperial town in the circle of Upper Rhine. Here are held the meetings of the imperial chamber, which were removed hither from Spire, in the year 1693. It is situated on the river Lahn, 45 m. E of Coblentz.

Wevelsfield, Sussex, 12 m. S of E. Grinstead. Wever, a river in Cheshire, which runs into the Dee, about 7 m. N of Chester. Weaver, a river in Devons. which runs into the Columb, below Bradninch. Weverham, Cheshire, on the river Wever, N of Northwich. Weverthorp, Yorks. NW of Kilham. Weversley, Middlesex, between Harmondsworth and Cowley. Wevery, a river of Brecknocks. which runs into the Wye, near Bealth. Wexcomb, Wilts, SE of Savernake Forest.

WEXFORD, a county of Ireland, in the province of Munster, about 39 m. in length, and 20 in breadth, bounded on the N by Wicklow; on the E by St. George's Channel; on the S by the Atlantic Ocean; and on the W by Carlow, Waterford, and Kilkenny. Though not mountainous, it contains a large proportion of coarse, cold land, and stiff clay; yet many parts, however, are fertile in corn and grass. The principal rivers are the Barrow and the Slaney. It contains 109 parishes.

WEXFORD, a sea-port of Ireland, capital of a county of the same name. Adjoining it is the barony of Forth, the inhabitants of which, descendants of an ancient British colony, retain their native language, manners, and many singular customs till this day. Wexford was once reckoned the chief city in Ireland, being the first colony of the English, and is still a large handsome town, with a beautiful and commodious harbour, but not deep enough for large vessels. Much woollen cloth is manufactured in the town and neighbourhood. The inhab. are about 9000. It is seated at the mouth of the river Slaney, 63 m. S of Dublin.

Wexham, Bucks, between Beaconsfield and Colebrook.

WEXIO, a sea-port of Sweden, in Smoland, seated on the Helga Lake, which contains 2 groupe of woody islands, 50 m. W of Calmar. This town, though a bishop's see, is exceedingly small; the houses are mostly of wood.

Wey, a river of Dorsets. which run into the sea at Weymouth. Wey, a river of Surry, which rises in Hampshire, waters Guildford, and enters the Thames at Weybridge. It has been made navigable to Guildford and Godalming, and a canal has been cut from it to Basingstoke, in Hamps.

WEYBRIDGE, a village of Surry, situated at the conflux of the rivers Wey and Thames, 9 m. SW of Kingston, and 20 SW of London.

Weyhill, Hants, 3 m. W of Andover. Its fair on Oct. 10, is reckoned the largest in England for store sheep, Sussex and Kentish hops, Wilts, Somerset, and Gloucester cheese, leather, &c.

WEYMOUTH, a clean, agreeable, improved, and well frequented sea-port and borough-town of Dorsets. seated at the mouth of the Wey, and incorporated with Melcomb-Regis, with which it communicates by means of a drawbridge. Its port is injured by the sands, from which circumstance its trade, which was once very considerable, is now much reduced; it sends, however, some ships to Portugal and Newfoundland. There is likewise a great resort of company hither, for the purpose of sea-bathing, for which it is excellently fitted by its remarkably fine beach, and the softness of its air. Here is a custom-house, a good quay, assembly-room, theatre, and many elegant buildings, of late years. A few plain and striped cottons are made here. Markets on Wed. and Frid. See MELCOMB-REGIS.

WEYMOUTH, a town of Massachusetts, 5 m. S of Boston.

Whaddon, and its Chace, near the Ouse, NE of Buckingham. Whaddon, Camb. 3 m. NE of Royston, 10 m. from Cambridge. Whaddon, Wilts, near Melksham. Whaddon, 4 m. E of Brown-Clee-Hill. Wheyle, Herefords. NE of Leominster. Whichbury, Wilts, S of Salisbury. Whichcot-Chapel, Shrops. N of Ludlow. Whichnor, Staffords. NE of Lichfield, near the conflux of the rivers Blythe and Trent; remarkable for the tenure by which it is held similar to that of Dunmow, in Essex, with this addition, that the party, being a freeman, was to have, besides the flitch of bacon, half a quarter of wheat and a cheese; if a villane, only half a quarter of rye. The prize, however, does not appear to have been often claimed. Whichwood Forest, Oxfords. between Charlbury and Burford. Whickham, Durham, SW of Newcastle-upon-Tyne. Whicklerwith, Lancas. on the Irwell, SW of Manchester.

WHIDAH, a kingdom of Guinea, on the Slave Coast, extending about 10 m. along the sea, and 7 m. within land. It is a remarkably populous country, well furnished with large villages; and there are so many small ones, that they are not above a musket shot distance from each other. One single village frequently contains as many inhab. as several entire kingdoms on the coast of Guinea. This small kingdom is divided into 26 provinces. The houses are small, round at the top, and encompassed with mud walls, or hedges. The trees are tall, straight, and disposed in regular order, presenting to the eye fine long groves and avenues, clear of brush-wood and weeds. All the Europeans, who have been here, speak of the country with rapture, and extol it as a perfect paradise. A perpetual spring and autumn succeed each other. The fields are always verdant, and being planted with beans, potatoes, fruits, and roots, and covered with a multitude of houses, form one of the finest prospects in the world. The natives sow again the very next day after they have reaped, and yet the ground is not worn out; the next crop putting forth with the same vigour as the former, as if nature here were inexhaustible. The women brew the beer, dress the victuals, and sell all sorts of commodities at the market. Those that are rich employ their wives and slaves in tilling the land, and they carry on a considerable trade with the product, as well as in slaves. The natives exceed all other negroes, in civilization, industry, and vigilance, and employ themselves in several kinds of manufactures. They spin cotton yarn, weave fine cotton cloth, make calabasses, wooden vessels, plates, dishes, &c. and do smith's work in greater perfection than any other people on the coast. The rite of circumcision is used here, but they are not able to tell whence it is derived. Their principal idols are snakes, and particularly the seliche, a snake with a large, round, beautiful head, a short pointed tongue, resembling a dart, and a sharp, short tail; it is adorned with beautiful colours, on a light, grey ground. It is slow and solemn in its pace, except when it seizes on its prey, when it is quick and rapid. They have a mortal antipathy to venomous serpents, attacking them wherever they find them. They are amazingly tame and familiar, the natives and Europeans handling and playing with them, without dread or apprehension of danger. When the English first settled in Whidah, a sailor, just arrived, found a snake in the magazine belonging to the factory, and killing it, without scruple, threw it on the bank. The negroes, who soon discovered the sacrilege, and had it confirmed by the acknowledgment of the English, assembled all the inhab. of the province, and massacred the factors to a man; consuming their bodies and goods in the fire they had set to their warehouse. They have oxen, cows, goats, sheep, hogs, turkeys, ducks, and hens, which last are extremely plentiful. There are many elephants, buffaloes, tigers, several kinds of deer, and a sort of hares. The fruits are citrons, lemons, oranges, bananas, tamarinds, &c. and they have vast numbers of palm-trees, from which they obtain wine. The king of Whidah, who is only their chief, resides at Sabi, or Xabier, which is the principal province of the kingdom, as the city of the same name is capital of the whole. The villages or small states are, some the king's, others the viceroy's, and others are built and peopled by particular lords, and become hereditary in their families. Their trade consists of elephants' teeth, wax, honey, and the persons of men. The English factory is about 200 m. NE of Cape Coast castle, within land.

WHITBY, a well-built town, in the N. Riding of Yorks. commodiously seated near the mouth of the river Esk, 46 m. NE by E of York, and 243 N of London. It is a considerable sea-port, building many ships for the coal-trade, and employing many others in the export of coals, canvas, butter, tallow, hams, bacon, and fish; and contains 1325 houses, and 6969 inhab. It is a tide-haven, almost dry at low water, neither has it any river communication with the inland country. It is much frequented by colliers, and has at least 100 vessels belonging to it, of 100 tons, or more, burden. Several ships are sent thence to the Greenland fishery. On December 24, 1787, at midnight, an alarming event took place here. By the shrinking of some of the high ground, or cliff, near the sea, an esplanade, 300 yards long, and 80 in breadth, on which a regular street had been built, since the year 1761, was overturned and overwhelmed. The buildings (to the number of 130, containing above 1000 inhab.) were 80 feet above the margin of the sea, founded on a strong, new-built quay. One hundred and ninety-six families became destitute of house, fire, or food; but the doors of the humane were thrown open, and every comfort administered. In the neighbourhood are large alum works. Market on Sat.

WHITCHURCH, a borough town of Hants, consisting principally of one street, lately much enlarged and beautified. It contains about 220 houses, among which are two well-accommodated inns, with a manufacture of shalloons, serges, &c. and an exclusive one of paper, for the sole use of the Bank of England, long vested in the family of Porthall. The situation is low. It is 24 m. NE of Salisbury, and 58 W by S of London. Market on Frid.

WHITCHURCH, a large, pleasant, and populous town of Shrops. with a free grammar-school. In its church, among other monuments of the Talbots, is one of Sir John, the first earl of Shrewsbury of that name. He was so valiant, and his name struck so much terror in France, that he was styled the English Achilles; neither durst any man of that age encounter him single handed. It is situated near a large meer, from the colour of its water called Blackmeer, 20 m. N of Shrewsbury, and 164 NW of London, and contains 880 houses. Market on Frid.

WHITEHAVEN, a large, populous, rich, and improving town of Cumberl. with a good artificial harbour, defended by a long pier. It has its name from the white cliffs near it, both to the N and S, which shelter the harbour from tempests. It contains 1940 houses, and 10,106 inhab. and employs near 300 ships. Shipbuilding, and the accompanying manufactures of ropes, sail-cloth, &c. are carried on here very extensively; and there are also copperas works, which yield considerable profit; but the working of the coal-mines forms the principal business of the place. These are sunk to the depth of 130 fathoms, and carried to a vast distance under the sea, where vessels of large burthen ride at anchor. From these, a great part of Ireland, and other places, are supplied with coal, from which the proprietor, Lord Lonsdale, derives a revenue of about 16,000*l.* a year. A good deal of business is also done in the foreign and coasting trade from this port. In the year 1566, it had but 6 houses and 5 fishing-boat; and, in 1582, it had only 12 small vessels. Whitehaven is seated chiefly in a valley, between 2 steep hills, 13 m. SW of Cockermouth, and 305 NW of London. Market on Thurs.

Near it is the oak where Charles II. was secreted after his defeat at Worcester. White-Lady-Aston, SE of Worcester. White-Leaf-Cross, Bucks, near Wendover, in the parish of Monk's Risborough. It is [illegible] feet high, from 50 to 20 broad, and [illegible] from 70 feet, cut in a chalk hill, on a white base. It is ascribed to some victory obtained by the Saxons over the Danes, in the beginning of the 10th century. Whitley, Northumberl. W of Warkworth.

WHITE MOUNTAINS, the highest part of a ridge of mountains in the State of New Hampshire, in N. America. They extend NE and SW to a length not yet ascertained. The height of these mountains above the adjacent meadow, is reckoned, from observations made in 1784, to be 5500 feet, and the meadow is 3500 feet above the level of the sea. The snow and ice cover them 9 or 10 months in the year, during which time they exhibit that bright appearance from which they are denominated the White Mountains. From their summit, in clear weather, is a grand view, extending 60 or 70 m. in every direction. Although they are 70 m. within land, they are seen many leagues off at sea, and appear like an exceedingly bright cloud in the horizon. The highest summit is in about lat. 44 deg. N.

WIBURG, or VIBORSKOI, a government of Russia, being the province lately called Russian Finland, which was comprised in Carelia. It has Finland on the N and W, and the lake Ladoga and the government of Olonetz on the E. Besides pastures, the country produces rye, oats, and barley, but not sufficient for the inhab. It formerly belonged to the Swedes, and was ceded to the Russians, partly by the peace of Nystadt in 1721, and partly by the treaty of Abo in 1743. This province retains most of its ancient privileges, with some occasional modifications, which have been necessarily introduced under the new government. In the governor's court, business is transacted in the Swedish, German, and Russian tongues. The peasants talk only the Finnish dialect; but the inhab. of the towns understand Swedish also, and many of them German. Lutheranism is the established religion; but the Greek worship has lately been introduced by the Russians.

WIBURG, or VIBORG, a well-fortified seaport town of Russia, formerly the capital of Carelia, and now of the government of Wiburg. A few houses are constructed with brick; but the greatest part of wood. They sell planks, tar, tallow, &c. chiefly to the English, and import wine, spices, and salt from France and Holland. The inhab. are about 9000. It is seated on the N side of the Gulf of Finland, 67 m. NNW of Petersburgh.

WIBURG, a city of Denmark, capital of N. Jutland, the seat of the provincial court, which is held here every month, and the residence of a governor. It is one of the most ancient towns in the kingdom, about 2 m. in circumf. and contains, at present, 3 parish churches, though prior to the reformation it had 12 churches and 6 convents. It is seated on a lake called Asmid, near the centre of the province, 95 m. N of Sleswick, and 110 NNW of Copenhagen.

Wicham, 16 m. from Cambridge. Wichamford, Worcesters. SW of Evesham. Wichamton, Dorsets. near Morechurch. Wichanden, 5 m. from Worcester. Wichford, Cambridges. W of Ely. Wichling, Kent, 2 m. N of Lenham.

WICK, a sea-port and royal burgh of Caithness. containing 5080 inhab. It is situated at the mouth of a river of the same name, 13 m. S of Dunsbay Head. The coast of this parish consists principally of high rocks, underneath which are many creeks and coves, extending up a considerable way, with hideous caverns, where fishing-boats, however, can harbour, and which abound with a vast variety of fish.

SE of Barnard Castle.

WICKLOW, a county of Ireland, in the province of Leinster; bounded on the N by the county of Dublin, on the E by the Irish Channel, on the S by Wexford and a part of Carlow, and on the W by Kildare and Carlow. It is about 30 m. in its greatest length, and from 15 to 26 in breadth. It contains 58 parishes, about 11,550 houses, and 58,000 inhab. Much of it is mountainous and woody, with a mixture of rocks and bogs, yet affording beautiful and romantic views; the valleys, however, are fertile and well cultivated. In the hills, rich veins of copper and other minerals are found, and lately considerable quantities of gold have been discovered.

WICKLOW, the capital of a county of the same name, in Ireland; seated on the sea side, with a narrow harbour at the mouth of the river Leitrim, 24 m. SSE of Dublin. It is remarkable for having the best ale in the kingdom, and other provisions sent to Dublin, principal part of its trade. About 1½ [illegible] Wicklow-Head, on which there are two light-houses.

WIED, or OLD WIED, a town of Westphalia, in the county of New Wied, 9 m. N of Coblentz.

Wiersdale and Forest, a wild, solitary tract, SE of Lancaster.

WIELICSKA, a village of Cracow, in Poland, now comprised within the Austrian kingdom of Lodomeira. It is celebrated for its salt mines, which lie 8 m. SE of Cracow. In these inexhaustible mines are several small chapels excavated in the salt, in which mass is said on certain days of the year. One of these chapels is above 30 feet long, and 25 broad: an altar, a crucifix, with various ornaments, and statues, are all carved out of the salt. The immense size of the different excavations or chambers, with the spacious passages or galleries, the chapels above-mentioned, and a few sheds built for the horses, which are foddered below, have given rise to the exaggerated accounts of travellers, that these mines contain several villages, inhabited by colonies of miners, who never see the light. There is certainly room for such purposes, the mines being of stupendous extent and depth, and dry as a room, without the least damp or moisture. There is, however, one small spring of fresh water, which runs through the mine; but the miners have no subterraneous dwellings, and do not remain below more than 8 hours at a time, when they are relieved by others. These mines have been worked above 600 years. Before the partition of Poland, in 1772, they furnished a considerable part of the revenue of the king of Poland, who drew from them an average profit of about 3,500,000 Polish florins, or 97,722*l.* 4*s.* 6*d.* sterling.

WIELUN, a town of Poland, in Siradia.

WIGAN, a large and well-built town of Lancash. with manufactures of cotton, rugs, blankets, linen, and with pit-coal and iron works. That species of coal called Cannel, is found in plenty and great perfection in its neighbourhood. Wigan is pleasantly situated on a small stream called Douglas, which is made navigable to the Ribble, and is joined by a canal from Lancaster, 30 m. S of Lancaster, and 196 NNW of London. Markets on Mond. and Frid.

Wighill, Yorks. on the Wharfe, E of Wetherby.

WIGHT, an island on the S coast of Hamps. from which it is separated by a channel, two or three hours' sail from Portsmouth, though only about a mile over from Hurst Castle. It was called by the Britons, Guith, and by the Romans, Vectis, or Vecta. It is about 21 m. in length, and 13 in breadth, containing 3 boroughs, 30 parishes, and 24,120 inhab. It is nearly divided into equal parts by the river Mede or Medina, which rises near the S coast, and falls into the Channel near Cowes. Across the island from E to W runs a ridge of hills, forming a tract of fine downs, with a chalky or marly soil, which feed a great number of fine fleeced sheep. Rabbits, hares, partridges, wild and tame fowl, &c. are also very plentiful here. In the N parts the land is chiefly pasture; in the S chiefly arable, producing, it is thought, as much corn in one year as is equal to the consumption of eight. The variety of prospects which this island affords, its mild air, and the neat manner in which the fields are laid out, render it a very delightful spot. It is devoted almost solely to husbandry, having no manufactory but that of salt, and it is a great resource of the London market for malted barley. Among its exports are a pure white tobacco-pipe clay, and a fine white crystalline sand, used in the manufacture of glass. The sea is continually increaching on it on the S parts, and abandoning it on the NE sides. Newport is the principal town.

WIGTONSHIRE, a county of Scotland, sometimes called UPPER, or WEST GALLOWAY. It is bounded on the N by Ayres. on the E by Kirkcudbrights. and on the S and W by the Irish Sea. Its greatest extent, in any direction, does not exceed 27 m. The N part, called the Moors, is naked and mountainous. Great numbers of sheep and black cattle are raised here; and they have a small breed of horses peculiar to this district, called galloways, which are very strong and gentle. It is well watered with lakes and streams, and has commodious creeks and harbours.

WILTON, anciently called ELLANDUNE, the county town of Wiltshire, seated at the conflux of the Willy and Nadder, 5 m. NNW of Salisbury, and 85 W by S of London. It had formerly, according to Leland, 12 churches, though now it has only one. It contains 350 houses. Here are manufactories of tapestry, carpets, and thin woollen stuffs. It glories in Wilton-House, a villa of the Earl of Pembroke, so elegant and magnificent for its building and furniture, that its description forms, at present, one of the principal objects in a history of the arts and belles lettres. The buildings were designed by Holbein and Inigo Jones, on a plan worthy of ancient Rome. It is celebrated for the family portraits by Vandyke, and a most valuable collection of pictures, antique statues, busts, &c. among which are the whole collection of the cardinals Richelieu and Mazarine, and the greatest part of the Earl of Arundel's. Market on Wed.

WILTOWN, a town of S. Carolina, 21 m. WSW of Dorchester.

WILTSHIRE, a county of England, so called from the town of Wilton, once its capital. It is bounded on the E by Berkshire and Hampshire, on the W by Somerset and Gloucester, on the S by Dorset and part of Hants, and on the NW and N by Gloucesters. It's length from N to S is near 54 m. its greatest breadth from E to W 34. The air is healthful, though something sharp on the hills; in the vales it is mild during that season in the vales. The land in the northern part is generally hilly and woody, but very fertile; here being made that kind of cheese which is much esteemed, and known as North Wiltshire. In the southern it is rich and fertile. In the middle it chiefly consists of downs, that afford the best pasture for sheep; and in the vallies, which divide the downs, are abundance of corn-fields, and rich meadows. In some places is found knot-grass, near 20 feet in length, with which hogs are fed, especially about Market Lavington. Its chief commodities are sheep, wool, wood, and stone; of this last there are excellent quarries at Chilmark, where some stones are 20 yards in length, and 4 in thickness, without a flaw. The chief manufactures are considerable; few towns being without one, most generally in the clothing trade. The principal rivers in Wilts are the Upper and Lower Avon, the Nadder, Willy, Bourne, Kennet, Adder, Duril, Weir, Calve, Rey, and Willybourne. This county contains 1 city, 24 market-towns, and 304 parishes, and is divided into 29 hundreds, and 950 villages; 37,244 houses, and 193,828 inhab.

Wilverton, SE of Worcester. Wimbish, Essex, SE of Walden. Wimbledon, Surry, on a fine heath, about a m. each way, 7 m. SW of London. On the common, near the village, is a round camp, made by the Danes; as also a well, the water of which is never known to freeze. At Wimbledon are some copper-mills, a manufactory for printing callicoes, and another of Japan ware. Wimbledon, Yorks. near Helmesley. Wimboldesley, Ches. S of Middlewich.

WIMBORN MINSTER, a town of Dorsets. with a noble church, built as a cathedral, formerly collegiate, and the only one in the county in which cathedral service is performed. The eastern tower, and part of the church, are Saxon. It is seated between the rivers Stour and Allen, 6 m. N of Poole, and 102 SW of London. Market on Frid.

WINCHELSEA, a town in Sussex, one of the Cinque Ports, 2 m. SSW of Rye, and 67 SW of London. It was built in the reign of Edward I. when a more ancient town of the same name, which had 18 parish churches, and was distant about 3 miles, was swallowed up by the sea in a terrible tempest. The new town being sacked by the French and Spaniards, and deserted by the sea, soon fell into decay, and is now dwindled to an inconsiderable place, having only 105 houses. Three of the gates are still standing, but much decayed; as also many other ruinous materials of ancient structures. Upon the level left by the sea, are the ruins of a castle built by Henry VIII.; it is circular, and faced with square stones, with one large round tower, serving as a keep. Market disused.

WINCHENDON, a town of Massachussetts, 48 m. NW of Boston.

WINCHESTER, a very ancient city of Hampshire, called by the Britons, Caer Gwent, and by Ptolemy and Antoninus, Venta Belgarum. It is about 1¼ m. in circumf. round the walls, through which there are 6 gates, and suburbs leading to every one of them; it is a town of little trade or manufacture. It contained formerly 32 parish churches, but at present only six, beside the cathedral, which is a large and beautiful structure. It contains 1057 houses and 6705 inhab. In it were interred 13 Saxon kings or queens, whose bones were collected by Bishop Fox, and put into 6 little gilded coffins, in a wall on the S side of the choir. These, however, in the civil wars, were dispersed and tumbled out of the chests, and restored, without distinction, after the Restoration. On a fine eminence, overlooking the city and adjacent country, is the shell of a palace, built by Sir Christopher Wren, for king Charles II. It was never finished, but in the late wars was fitted up for the reception of prisoners of war, and is now converted into barracks. Near this place is St. Mary's College, founded by William of Wickham, for a warden, 70 scholars, 10 fellows, 3 chaplains, 3 clerks, a schoolmaster, usher, organist, and 16 choristers; the scholars are educated for New College, Oxford. The episcopal [illegible] is so rich, that when Edward III. would have preferred its bishop, Edenden, to the see of Canterbury, he refused it, saying, that though Canterbury was the higher rack, Winchester was the better manger. A county infirmary has been established here, supported by voluntary contribution. In the road to Southampton, is the hospital of St. Cross, founded by a bishop of this see, for a master, 9 poor brethren, and 4 out-pensioners. All travellers, who call at this hospital, have a right to demand some bread and beer, which is always brought to them. The master is generally a dignitary of the church, the appointment being very lucrative. Winchester consists of about 500 houses, has one pretty broad street, but the rest are mostly narrow; the houses are indifferently built, and its wall of flint is greatly decayed. It is seated on the river Itching, 16 m. E of Salisbury, and 63 SW of London. Markets on Wednesday and Saturday.

WINDERMERE-WATER, or WINANDER-MERE, the most extensive lake in England, lying between Westmorl. and Lancas. and exhibiting a very great variety of beautiful prospects. It is about 15 m. in length from N to S, but in no part broader than a mile. Opposite Ecclefrig Crag, it is 222 feet deep. It is famous for its fine char, and abounds also with trout, perch, pike, and eels. This lake is frequently intersected by promontories, which render its shores very winding, and it is spotted with islands. Among these, the Holme, or Great Island, on an oblong tract of about 30 acres, with a good house on it, crosses the lake in an oblique line, surrounded by a number of inferior isles, finely formed and wooded. They make together a kind of archipelago. In navigating it upward, from the Great Island, the extremity appears singularly grand, its parts neat and picturesque; and the view of the surrounding scenery, from Cove to Kirkston, is astonishingly sublime and beautiful.

Winderton, Warwicks. in the parish of Brailes. Winderwath, Westmorl. on the Eden, NW of Appleby. Windgate, SE of Durham. Windgates, Northumberl. SE of Newbiggin. Windhall, Hamps. N of Winchester.

Windsor, Cornwall, SW of Columb.

WINDSOR, NEW, a town of Berkshire, situated on the side of a hill, near the Thames. It consists of several streets, and is well paved and lighted. The town-hall is a brick structure, with arcades of Portland stone, erected in 1686. Windsor is celebrated for its magnificent castle, built originally by William the Conqueror, rebuilt by Edward III. and enlarged by succeeding monarchs. It is seated on a hill, which rises on a gentle ascent. On the N side of the castle is a fine terrace, made by Queen Elizabeth, and enlarged by Charles II. who carried it round the E and S sides. It is faced with a rampart of freestone, and is justly allowed to be the noblest walk in Europe, with respect to strength, grandeur, and its beautiful prospects. The palaces in France and Italy have nothing to be compared with it; the terrace next the sea, in the outer court of the seraglio at Constantinople, comes the nearest to it. From the Round Tower, which is much more elevated than the rest, is an extensive view to London, and into the counties of Berks, Middl. Essex, Herts, Bucks, Oxford, Wilts, Hants, Surry, Sussex, Kent, and Bedford. The royal apartments are adorned with many valuable paintings, particularly with the celebrated cartoons of Raphael, which were formerly at Hampton Court. Here is the royal college of St. George, consisting of a dean, 12 canons, 7 minor canons, and 18 alms or poor knights. St. George's chapel, erected by Edward III. in 1377, in honour of the order of the garter, is a beautiful structure, in the purest style of Gothic architecture. Opposite to the SE side of the castle, is a neat modern-built mansion, called the Queen's Lodge, which is the royal residence in summer; and below this, is the Lower Lodge, for the accommodation of the younger branches of the royal family. Adjoining the Queen's Lodge is the Little Park, which extends round the N and E sides of the castle, and forms a beautiful lawn, about 3 m. in circumf. But on the S side of the town is a much larger park, called the Great Park, which is said to be 20 m. in circumf. Windsor is 22 m. S by W of London. Market on Saturd.

WINDSOR, NEW, a town of N. America, in the State of New York, 47 m. N of New York.

WINDSOR FOREST, an extensive forest in the E part of Berks, about 50 m. in circumf. YARMOUTH, GREAT, a considerable seaport and borough of Norf. seated on the river Yare, by means of which it has the export and import trade of Norwich, and various places in Norf. and Suff. 22 m. E of Norwich, and 123 NE of London. Its harbour will not admit ships of large burden; but it is extremely convenient for business, the vessels lying in the river, along a very extensive and commodious quay, planted with trees. Its foreign trade is chiefly to the Baltic, Holland, Portugal, and the Mediterranean. It also sends ships to the Greenland fishery. The home fishing is carried on at two seasons, that for mackarel in May and June, and that for herrings in October nd November. Of these last, 50,000 barrels are generally taken and cured in one year; about 150 vessels of 40 or 50 tons burden, being annually employed in the fishery. The herrings are chiefly cured here by salting, and then drying them in wood smoke; when, under the name of red herrings, they are either consumed at home, or exported to Spain, Italy, and other southern countries. Yarmouth is much frequented in the season as a place for seabathing. The town consists of 3,486 houses, and 17977 inhab. and there are a few pretty wide streets, and a spacious marketplace; but they are chiefly very narrow, are called rows, and are just wide enough for their little carriages to pass through. These carriages are a kind of sledge, or very small cart, drawn by one horse, and calculated entirely for these narrow streets. A lofty steeple here serves as a landmark for those at sea; but whichever way it is viewed, it appears crooked. Off the mouth of the harbour is a bar, which prevents the entry of ships of large burden; and the roads, E of the town, within the dangerous sands and banks of the Offing, are much frequented, though noted for frequent shipwrecks. Markets on Wed. and Sat.

YONNE, a depart. of France, N of that of Nievre. It is so called from the river that rises in the depart. of Nievre, passes by Chateau-Chinon, Auxerre, Sens, &c. below which last it falls into the Seine. Auxerre is the capital.

YORK, an ancient city of Yorks. of which it is the capital. It has also been considered as the capital of the North, and, in point of rank, as the second city in the kingdom; but it is now surpassed in wealth and populousness by many of the more modern trading towns. The minster is reckoned the most elegant and magnificent Gothic structure in the kingdom, Lincoln, perhaps, excepted. From its top is seen a vast extent of country, particularly the open Wolds to the E stretching almost to the sea. It is divided by the river Ouse into two parts, which are united by a stately stone bridge of five arches. The castle, built by William the Conqueror, is now a county prison for debtors and felons. Among the charitable foundations is an asylum for lunatics, by much the finest and pleasantest in England. The river Ouse is navigable to this city, for vessels of 70 tons burden, although it is 60 m. from the sea. The title of lord was first annexed to the office of mayor, by Richard II. The city has jurisdiction over 36 villages and hamlets, and contains (without the ainstey of the city) 2,661 houses, and 18,217 inhab. W of the Ouse, called the Liberty of Ainsty. Its members claim a seat in the House of Commons, next to the citizens of London, upon what is called the privy counsellor's bench. York is 197 m. N by W of London. Markets on Tues. Thurs. Frid. and Sat.

YORKSHIRE, the largest county in England, bounded on the N by Westmorel. and the bishopric of Durham; on the E by the German Ocean; on the S by Lincolns. Nottinghams. and Derbys. on the SW by a small part of Chesh.; on the W by Lancash.; and on the NW by Westmorel. It extends 90 m. from N to S and 115 from E to W. This county is divided into three ridings; the N. Riding containing 12 wapentakes; the E. 7; and the W. 12. It contains one city, 60 market-towns, 563 parishes, and 2,330 villages, 188,381 houses, and 973,113 inhab. The air and soil of this extensive county vary extremely; the E. Riding, on account of its neighbourhood to the German Ocean, is more inclined to humidity than the other Ridings; but this inconvenience decreases in proportion as the country recedes from the sea. However, where the air is most indifferent, the soil is most fruitful: for on the hilly parts of this Riding, especially in what is called the York Wolds, the soil is generally barren, dry, and sandy; great numbers of lean sheep are therefore sold hence, and sent into other countries to be fattened for the market. The W. Riding enjoys a sharp, but healthy air, and the land, on the western side, is hilly, stony, and not very fruitful; but the intermediate valleys consist of much good meadow ground, and also pasture for the largest cattle. Much flax is grown here, and large plantations of licorice, about Pontefract. On the side next the river Ouse, the soil is rich, producing wheat and barley; and in its worst parts, very good oats. Its other commodities are iron, coal, jet, alum, horses, and goats. Here the clothing manufactures principally flourish. The N. Riding, in general, exceeds the other two in the salubrity and coldness of the air. The worst parts breed lean cattle; but on the sides of the hills, in the valleys and plains, it produces good corn, and rich pastures for large cattle: in the district of Pickering, which forms the NE corner of Yorks. and consists of a very extensive, secluded, and fertile vale, is a fossil marl, produced by a petrifying spring, very beneficial for improving land. Rape and potatoes are grown here in great quantities. Richmonds. on the NW of this Riding, was formerly a county of itself; here many lead-mines are worked to great advantage. In Yorks. likewise, are the districts of Cleveland, Holderness, and Craven. The principal rivers of Yorks. are the Northern Ouse, and those which fall into it, as the Don, the Derwent, the Calder, the Aire, the Wharfe, the Nyd, and the Youre, all which terminate in the Humber, which falls into the German Ocean, between Yorks. and Lincolns. Here are likewise the Tees and the Hull.

YORK, NEW, one of the United States of America, bounded on the SE by the Atlantic Ocean; on the E by Connecticut, Massathusetts, and Vermont; on the N by the 45th deg. of lat. which divides it from Canada; on the NW by the river St. Lawrence, and the Lakes Ontario and Erie; and on the SW and S by Pennsylvania and New Jersey. It is about 250 m. long and 300 broad, is divided into 13 counties, and contains 959,220 inhab. New York, in general, is intersected by ridges of mountains, running in a NE and SW direction. Beyond the Allegany Mountains, however, the country is pretty level, of a fine rich soil, covered in its natural state with various kinds of trees. East of these mountains, it is broken into hills with rich intervening valleys. The hills are thickly clothed with timber, and, when cleared, afford fine pasture. The valleys, when cultivated, produce wheat, hemp, flax, peas, grass, oats, and Indian corn. Of the commodities produced from culture, wheat is the staple, of which immense quantities are raised and exported. The best lands in this province, which lie along the Mohawks River, and W of the Allegany Mountains, are yet in a state of nature, or are just beginning to be settled. This State abounds with several fine rivers and lakes. The number of inhab. in 1771, was 148,124 whites, and 19,883 blacks; total 168,007. The capital is of the same name.

YORK, NEW, a city of N. America, capital of the State of the same name. It is situated at the SW point of an island, at the confluence of Hudson and East Rivers, and is about 4 m. in circumf. The situation is both healthy and pleasant. Surrounded on all sides by water, it is refreshed by cool breezes in summer, and the air in winter is more temperate than in other places under the same parallel. York Island is 15 m. in length, and hardly 1 in breadth. It is joined to the main by a bridge, called King's Bridge. The channels between Long and Staten Islands, and between Long and York Islands, are so narrow as to occasion an unusual rapidity of the tides, which is increased by the confluence of the waters of Hudson and East Rivers. This rapidity, in general, prevents the obstruction of the channel by ice. There is no basin or bay for the reception of ships, but the road where they lie in East River is defended from the violence of the sea by the islands which interlock with each other, so that, except that of Rhode-Island, the harbour of New York, which admits ships of any burden, is the best of the United States. A few houses here are built after the old Dutch manner, but the English taste has prevailed almost a century. In time of peace, more commercial business is done here than in any other port in the United States. The number of inhab. in 1786, was 23,614. Lat. 40 43 N lon. 74 5 W.

YORK FORT, in Hudson's Bay, the principal establishment of the company of that name; this place has upwards of 100 men at it, who send home annually, from itself and 4 subordinate settlements, about 20,000 skins.

YORK, formerly TORENTO, a town of Canada, situated on the NW coast of Lake Ontario, in lat. 43 25 N and lon. 79 20 W. Also a town of Pennsylvania, 72 m. W of Philadelphia; a town in the district of Main, 50 m. NNE of Boston; and a county of Virginia.

YOTCHEOU, a city of China, of the first rank, in the province of Honquang, situated on the Tongting Lake, and on the Yangtse River, 675 m. S of Peking.

YOUGHALL, a considerable town of Ireland, in the county of Cork. It has a very commodious harbour, and a fine, well-defended quay. It is seated at the mouth of the river Blackwater, 25 m. N by E of Cork.

Youle, a village in the E. Riding of Yorks. 12 m. below York, at the conflux of the Don and Humber. Here is a remarkable dike, called Youle Dike, about 10 m. long. Here are a sort of persons called Triers, because, with a long piece of iron, they search into the soft, boggy ground, for subterraneous trees, which they sometimes meet with of the fir kind. They often meet with trees large enough to furnish timber for building, and the smaller trees they split into laths, or cut into chips or splinters. Youlgrave, Derbys. 2 m. from Bakewell. Youls- ston, Devons. in Sherwell parish. Young's Manor, Kent, by Chilham.

YOURE, a river in Yorks. which rises in the Cotter mountain, in the NW extremity of the county, and passes by the towns of Askrig, Middleham, Masham, Rippon, and Boroughbridge, below which last, being joined by the Swale, both those rivers constitute what is called the Ouse. Off this river is the magnificent cataract, called Aysgard-Force, the water falling nearly ½ m. upon a surface of stone, worn into infinite irregular cavities, and inclosed by bold and shrubby cliffs.

Yoxford, Suff. between Saxmundham and Halesworth. Yoxhall, Staffords. 5 m. N of Lichfield, had formerly a market.

YPRES, a town of Flanders, with a considerable manufactory in linen, of an excellent fabric. In 1242, the number of inhab. for the most part weavers, amounted to 200,000. By the severity of the Duke of Alva, the principal manufacturers were driven to England, from which time, that branch of trade has declined. The chatelany of Ypres contained about 30 villages, and sent deputies to the States of Flanders. By the treaty of Utrecht, it became a Dutch barrier town, and though taken by the French in 1744, was restored at the peace of Aix-la-Chapelle. It is seated on the river Ypre, 15 m. NNW of Lisle, and 138 N of Paris.

YRIEX, ST. a town in the depart. of Upper Vienne, 20 m. S of Limoges.

YSENDICK, a town of Flanders, 8 m. E of Sluys, and 17 m. W of Ghent, on an arm of the Scheldt, called the Blie.

YTHAN. See EITHAN.

YUCATAN. See JUCATAN.

YVERDUN, a town of Bern, Switzerland, in the county of Vaud, capital of a bailiwick of the same name, 15 m. in length, and containing 25 parishes. In the Theodosian Table, it is called Castrum Ebredunense, and the Romans maintained here a prefectus barcariorum. It is seated at the head of the lake of the same name, 34 m. SSW of Bern.

YVERDUN, LAKE OF. See NEUFCHATEL.

YVETOT, a town in the depart. of Lower Seine, 5 m. NNE of Caudebec.

YVICA. See IVICA.

YUMA, or LONG ISLAND, one of the Bahama Islands, 50 m. in length, and of unequal breadth.

YUMETOS, a cluster of small islands among the Bahamas, about 20 m. W or SW of Yuma.

YUN-NAN, a province of China, S of Setchuen and Thibet. It contains 21 cities of the first rank, and 55 of the second and third, and is well watered with rivers and lakes, which render it very fruitful. Gold is very often found in the sands of the rivers, and probably there are mines of the same metal in the mountains of the eastern part. There are also copper mines, several sorts of precious stones, beside musk, benjamin, lapis lazuli, and very fine marble, some of which is painted of divers colours. They have also excellent horses, which are strong and vigorous, but low: as also very small deer, which are kept for their amusement.

YUNNAN, a city of China, of the first rank, capital of a province of the same name. It is 1152 m. SSW of Peking.

YUNNING, a city of China, of the first rank, in the province of Honan. It is 430 m. S of Peking.

ZAB, a town of Arabia, 65 m. WSW of Bagdad.

ZABELTITZ, a town of Saxony, 12 m. N of Meissen.

ZABERN, a town of Spire, 21 m. SSW of Manheim.

ZACATECAS, a province of Mexico, having New Biscay on the N, and Guasteca on the E. The capital, of the same name, is 240 m. NNW of Mexico.

ZACATULAN, or SACATULA, a town of Mechoacan, in N. America, situated at the mouth of a river of the same name, on the Pacific Ocean, 130 m. S of Mechoacan.

ZADAN, a town on the W coast of the Isle of Celebes.

ZAFRA, a town in Spanish Estremadura.

ZAGARA, a famous mountain of Livadia, near the ancient Thebes. It was formerly called Helicon, and is almost always covered with snow.

ZAGATULLA, a town of Mechoacan, Mexico, 130 m. S of the city of Mechoacan.

ZAGORIA, or DAEVELTO, a town of Bulgaria, the see of a Greek archbishop. It is situated near the Black Sea, 58 m. NE of Adrianople.

ZAGRAB, a town in Austrian Croatia.

ZAHARA, a town of Andalusia.

ZAHARA, or THE DESERT, a vast country of Africa, stretching from near the Atlantic Ocean on the W to Barca and Nubia on the E, and from Biledulgerid on the N to Nigritia and the river Senegal on the S. It comprehends a space of about 600 m. from N to S, and 1800 from W to E. The inhabitants are a mixture of wandering nations proceeding from Arabs, Moors, Portuguese refugees, &c. subject to a number of petty princes. The commodities are camels, horned cattle, horses, dates, the fat and feathers of ostriches, and the gum Senegal.

ZAIRE, a large river of Africa, which passes through the kingdom of Congo, and falls into the Atlantic Ocean, between the 6th and 7th deg. of S lat.

ZAMORA, a town of Leon, on the Douro.

ZAMORA, a town of Guadalajara, Mexico; and a town of Quito, S. America, 180 m. SSW of Quito.

ZAMORA, a town of Algiers.

ZAMOSKI, a town of Belez, Poland.

ZAMPALA, a city of Mexico, 90 m. E of Puebla de los Angelos.

ZANA, or SANA, a decayed town of Truxillo, in Peru, capital of a jurisdiction which extends about 25 leagues along the coast. It is situated in a charming valley, fertile in fruit and corn, and adorned with the most beautiful flowers, about 60 m. N of Truxillo.

ZANFARA, a town of Negroland, capital of a country, 170 m. ENE of Wangara.

ZANGUEBAR, a country of Africa, little known, situated on the eastern coast, between lat. 2 0 N and 18 0 S, in which the Portuguese have various settlements. The inhabitants are partly of the Romish faith, and Mahometans, but mostly Pagans. The Bedouin Arabs breed cattle, and live on the flesh and milk, while the Zanges, or negroes, feed on wild beasts and fowl, which swarm all over these parts. Throughout the whole country, are mines of gold, easily got, by the help of which, the indolent natives purchase necessaries from other parts; but, on this very account, they are extremely jealous of letting strangers penetrate into the inland country. The principal territories are Melinda, Mongala, Mosambique, Jubo, and some others. The Portuguese trade with the natives for slaves, ivory, gold, ostrich feathers, furs, wax, and drugs.

ZANHAGA, a district of Zahara, in Africa, bordering on the Atlantic.

ZANTE, an island of the Mediterranean, near the coast of the Morea, 17 m. SE of the Island of Cephalonia. It is about 12 m. in length, and 6 in breadth; its principal riches consist in currants, with which it abounds. Here are also fine peaches, weighing eight or ten ounces, cucumbers, figs, and oil. The houses are low, on account of the frequent earthquakes, for scarce a year passes without one; but they do no great damage. The grapes are called currants, because they were chiefly cultivated about Corinth. This island lately belonged to the Venetians, and in it there are about 50 villages, but no other large town than Zante, which is seated on the eastern side of the island, and has a good harbour. The English and Dutch have each a factory and consul here. Lat. 37 53 N lon. 21 3 E.

ZANZIBAR, an island of the eastern coast of Africa, near the coast of Zanguebar. Lat. 6 0 S.

ZAPOTECA, a province of New Spain, extending from Guaxaca to the Gulf of Mexico; it is mountainous, but tolerably fertile.

ZARA, a city of the late Venetian Dalmatia, now belonging to Italy, capital of a county of the same name, with a safe capacious harbour. It is seated on a small peninsula, joined to the continent by an isthmus only 25 paces in breadth. On the side of the citadel, the fortifications are considered as almost impregnable, being defended by very deep ditches hewn out of the rock. Near the church, which the Greeks call St. Helia, are two handsome fluted columns, of the Corinthian order, supposed to have been part of an ancient temple of Juno. The circumf. of the walls extends 2 m. and the number of the inhab. is about 6000. In the castle the proveditor, or governor of Dalmatia resided. Lat. 44 22 N.

ZARNATA, a town in the Morea, 10 m. SW of Misitra.

ZARNAW, a town of Sandomirz, Poland, 63 m. N of Cracow.

ZASLAW, a town of Volhinia.

ZBOROW, a town of Poland, in Galicia, 63 m. E of Lemburg.

Zeal, in the parish of S. Tawton, Devons. near Oakhampton. Zeals, in the parish of Mere, Wilts.

ZEALAND, an island of Denmark, in the Baltic, almost of a round form, and about 700 m. in circumf. It is bounded on the N by the Schaggerack, on the E principally by the Sound, on the S by the Baltic, and on the W by the Great Belt. The coast is much intersected by large bays; and within the country are several lakes, which, together with the rivers, abound in fish. In most parts is plenty of wood, except towards the centre of the island, where turf is generally used for fuel. It is the largest of the isles of Denmark, and exceedingly fertile; producing grain of all sorts, and in great plenty; and abounding with excellent pasture. It is particularly famous for its breed of horses. Copenhagen is the capital.

ZEALAND, one of the Provinces of the Netherlands, separated by the sea on the N from the isles of S. Holland; by the Scheldt on the E from Brabant; by the Hont from Flanders; and on the W it is bounded by the German Ocean. It comprehends 8 islands, 3 of which are pretty large. Their names are Walcheren, Schowen, S. Beveland, N. Beveland, Tolen, Duyveland, Wolfersdike, and St. Philip. There are likewise 6 or 7 others, of little importance. The inhab. defend themselves from the encroachments of the sea by their dikes, which, at the bottom, are generally 25 German ells in breadth, and are so wide at top, that two carriages may pass abreast. In high tides and stormy weather, the waves, however, often force a passage, and even flow over them. The inhabitants, in general, are extremely wealthy, being maintained by their plentiful fisheries, and trade with foreign nations. The soil is fruitful in these islands, but the air unhealthy for strangers, though not for the natives. The river Scheldt, having passed by Antwerp, divides it into two, and holds, as it were, the isles of Zealand between its arms. One of these runs eastward, and the other westward, which last the fishermen call Stout, or Hont.

ZEALAND, NEW, in the South Pacific Ocean, was first discovered by Tasman, in 1642. He traversed the eastern coast from lat. 34 0 to 43 0 S. and entered a strait; but, being attacked by the natives soon after he came to an anchor, in the place to which he gave the name of Murderer's Bay, he did not go on shore. He called the country Staten Land, in honour of the States-General, though it has been generally distinguished in our maps and charts by the name of New Zealand. From the time of Tasman, the whole country, except that part of the coast which was seen by him, remained altogether unknown, till the year 1770, when it was circumnavigated by Capt. Cook, who found it to consist of two large islands, separated by the strait abovementioned, which is 4 or 5 leagues broad, and to which he gave his own name. These islands lie between lat. 34 0 and 48 0 S. and lon. 166 0 and 180 0 E. Along the coast many small islands are formed, and it is indented by deep bays, affording excellent shelter for shipping, and abundant supplies of wood and water. There are also several rivers capable of receiving large vessels, in which the spring-tide rises nearly ten feet perpendicularly. Of the two islands, the southernmost is for the most part mountainous and barren. As far inland as the eye can reach, nothing appears but mountains of stupendous height, consisting of rocks that are totally naked, except where they are covered with snow; but the land bordering on the sea-coast is clothed thick with wood, almost down to the water's edge. The northernmost island has a much better appearance: it is, indeed, not only hilly, but mountainous; yet even the hills and mountains are covered with wood, and every valley has a rivulet of excellent water. The soil of these valleys, and the plains, of which there are many overgrown with wood, is, in general, light, but fertile; and, it is supposed, that every kind of European grain, plants, and fruits, would flourish here with the utmost luxuriance. The winters are milder than in England, and the summers not hotter, though more equally warm. There are forests of vast extent, full of the straightest and largest timber, fit for buildings of any kind. The trees are chiefly of two sorts; one as large as an oak, distinguished by a scarlet flower, the wood of which is hard and heavy; another remarkably tall and straight, of which, probably, very fine masts might be made. Among other trees, is a species of philadelphus, which grows on the eminences that jut out into the sea, the leaves of which may be used as tea, and might be an excellent substitute for that oriental plant. Wild celery, and a kind of cresses, grow plentifully in almost every cove. Yams, sweet potatoes, and cocoas, are also raised by cultivation. Capt. Cook, in 1773, planted several spots of ground with European garden-seeds; and, in 1777, in several of these spots, although totally neglected, and overrun by weeds, were found cabbages, onions, leeks, purslain, radishes, mustard, &c. and a few fine potatoes, greatly improved by change of soil. The only quadrupeds are dogs and rats: the former are domestic, and for food; and the latter, though not numerous, seem also to be eaten. The birds, like the vegetable productions, are almost entirely peculiar to the country; and though it is difficult to follow them in the woods, on account of the underwood and climbing plants, yet a person, by remaining in one place, may shoot as many in a day as will serve for six or eight others. Captain Cook introduced European poultry, and, on his last visit, had the satisfaction to find them increased, both in a wild and domestic state, beyond all danger of being exterminated. Their creeks swarm with fish, which are not only wholesome, but equally delicious with those of Europe. Captain Cook seldom came to an anchor, but his men caught enough with hook and line only, to supply the whole ship's crew, and when they fished with nets, every mess in the ship salted as much as supplied them when at sea some time after. The rocks are furnished with great quantities of excellent muscles, one sort of which measures above a foot in length, and with great variety of other shell-fish. The men are stout and fleshy; but none of them corpulent, like the indolent and luxurious inhabitants of Otaheite and the Society Isles; and they are also exceedingly vigorous and active. The women, in general, are smaller than the men, possessing few peculiar graces of form or person; and chiefly distinguished by the softness of their voices. The bodies of both sexes are marked with black stains, called Amoco, which is the same as tattowing at Otaheite. Their dress is also the same; it consists of an oblong garment, about five feet long and four broad. They bring two corners of this garment over their shoulders, and fasten it on the breast with the other parts, which covers the body, and about the belly it is again tied with a girdle of mat. They ornament their heads with feathers, pearl shells, bones, &c. The women, sometimes, wear necklaces of shark's teeth, or bunches of long beads, made of bones or shells. Their houses are miserable lodging-places, and their only furniture is a few small baskets, in which they put their fishing-hooks and other trifles. Their food consists chiefly of fish, with which, instead of bread, they eat the root of a kind of fern, which they scorch over the fire, and then beat with a stick till the bark or dry outside falls off. Beside their dogs, they also contrive to kill birds; and, in most parts of the northern islands, they have sweet potatoes, cocoas, and yams; but, in the southern, nothing is raised by cultivation. Their cookery consists wholly in roasting and baking, which latter is performed in the same manner as at Otaheite. The women eat in common with the men, and but little subordination, or distinction of rank, is observed among them. From Cape Kidnappers, in lat. 39 43 S, for upwards of 80 leagues to the northward, the people acknowledge one sovereign, called Teratu, and under him several subordinate chiefs, who probably administer justice, and to whom great respect is paid; but whether his authority be hereditary or delegated, is uncertain. This part of the coast is much the most populous; tillage, weaving, and the other arts of peace, being here best known, and most practised. The canoes are more decorated, the plantations more numerous, and the clothes and carving finer, than any where else. In other parts they are scattered along the coast, in single families, or in larger tribes, and each in a state of perpetual hostility with all the rest. From their scanty stock of vegetables, if their fishing should fail, they have no resource against absolute famine.

Zeal Monachorum, Devons. SE of Oakhampton.

ZEBID, a city of Yemen, Arabia.

ZEGZEG, a kingdom of Africa, situated to the W of Zanfara.

ZEILA. See ADEL.

ZEITON, a town of Thessaly, 50 m. SSE of Larissa.

ZIETZ, a town of Naumberg, Upper Saxony, with a college, 25 m. W of Leipzig.

ZELL, a town of Lower Saxony, and capital of a duchy of the same name, which devolved to the house of Hanover, by marriage with the heiress, the male line failing, in 1705. It is surrounded by ditches and ramparts, on which are planted chesnut and lime-trees; and is a small town, with a few artificers and manufacturers, particularly in gold and silver. The houses are old and of a mean appearance; but the high courts of appeal for all the territories of the electorate house of Brunswick Lunenburg are held here. Here also is the provincial house for the diets of the principality. The other public edifices are the Guildhall, the Riding-House, the Mews, and the Armoury. The castle, which is situated near the town, and is walled and moated in, was formerly the residence of the dukes, and was repaired by order of the king of Great Britain, for the residence of his unfortunate sister, the Queen of Denmark, who died here. It is seated on the river Aller, 40 m. S of Lunenburg.

ZELL, a town of Salzburg, Bavaria, seated on the Zeller See; and a town of Hammersbach, Swabia.

ZELL, one of the Shetland Isles, N of the Mainland.

ZEMBLA, NOVA, a large island, lying in the Northern Ocean, to the N of Russia, from which it is separated by the Strait of Waigate, about 500 m. in length, and from 100 to 200 in breadth. It was first discovered by the English in 1553. Its inhab. are chiefly wild beasts, particularly white foxes, bears, elks, rein-deer, and rabbits; yet a few human beings have been seen here at times. The country produces nothing but moss, and a few arctic plants. Sea-cows abound on the coast, and sea-fowl flock there to lay their eggs. In 1596, a Dutch vessel was cast away on the coast, and the ship's company were obliged to winter here; they did not see the sun from the 4th of November to the beginning of February, and had great difficulty to keep themselves from being frozen to death. Lat. 71 to 78 N lon. 53 45 W to 72 49 E.

Zennen, Cornw. near St. Burien's.

Zenner, Cornw. 9 m. from Penzance, adjoining the Land's End.

ZENTA, a town of Hungary on the river Theisse, where Prince Eugene, in 1697, obtained a signal victory over the Turks, commanded by the emperor Mustapha II. in person. 20,000 Turks were killed, 10,000 wounded, and 3000 taken prisoners. It is 52 m. N of Belgrade.

ZERBST, a town of Anholt Zerbst, Upper Saxony, with a castle, where the princes commonly reside, and a college. It is famous for brewing good beer; and here are manufactures of gold and silver. It is 44 m. SSW of Potsdam.

ZEREA, a town of Farsistan, Persia, 18 m. NNE of Schiras.

ZIA, an island in the Archipelago, anciently called Ceos and Hydrassa, SW of Andros, and 12 m. E of Cape Colonni. It is 15 m. in length, and 8 in breadth; is well cultivated, and abounds in most of the necessaries of life. They have here a sort of oak, whose fruit, called velani, is the best trading commodity of the island, being exported for the use of dyers and tanners. The principal town of the same name, resembles an amphitheatre, and contains about 500 houses, all flat at the top. Most of the inhab. are Greeks, and have a bishop.

ZITTAU, a town of Lusatia, subject to the elector of Saxony. The principal business of the inhab. is brewing beer, but there are above 100 clothiers, and in the neighbouring villages above 1000 weavers. The merchants of Zittau trade with those of Prague and Leipsick, and extend their commerce as far as Holland. Here is a library, the finest in all Lusatia, which is open twice a week; and at a small distance from it is the orphan-house. It is seated on the river Neiss, 17 m. S of Gorlitz.

ZNAIM, a town of Moravia, 58 m. SW of Olmutz.

ZOARA, an island of Barbary, with a good harbour, 60 m. NNW of Tripoli.

ZOBLITZ, a town of Erzgeburg, Upper Saxony.

ZOFFINGEN, a town of Bern, Switzerland, the principal place of a bailiwick, 24 m. NNW of Lucerne.

ZOLLERN, a castle of Swabia, which gives name to the principality of Hohen-Zollern, which is 37 m. in length, and 17 in breadth, and is a very fertile country. The prince is hereditary chamberlain of the empire. It is 10 m. S of Tubingen.

ZOLNOK, a town of Hungary, on the Theisse, 48 m. SW of Debreczin.

ZONS, a town of Cologne.

ZORNDORFF, a town in the New Marche, Brandenburg, near Custrin.

ZOUT PAN, a curious salt lake in the country of the Hottentots, situated a few m. N of Point Padron. It is a plain much above the level of the sea, and between 3 and 4 m. in circumf. At some seasons of the year, it is formed into an entire mass of fine white salt, with a hard crust, exactly resembling ice, which, at a distance, has a very striking appearance.

ZUEELA, a town of Africa, in Fezzan, 60 m. E of Mourzouk, situated in a fertile district, in which the remnants of ancient buildings, fountains, cisterns, and vaulted caves, exhibit vestiges of its ancient splendour.

ZUG, a town of Switzerland, capital of a canton of the same name, seated on a beautiful lake, in a fertile valley. It contains 2 churches, a convent, a town-house, arsenal, corn magazine, college, hospital, &c. Oswald, a Saxon king of Northumberl. in the 7th century, is the tutelar saint of this place. Zug is 12 m. NNE of Lucerne.

ZUG, one of the cantons of Switzerland, bounded on the E and N by Zurich; on the W by Lucern; and on the S by Schweitz; about 10 m. long, and nearly as much in breadth. The government resides in a council which meets annually in the town of Zug, where every male of 16 years of age is possessed of a vote, and where all public posts are conferred. The inhab. are Romanists.

ZUG, a lake of Switzerland, 8 m. long and 2 wide, named from the town on its coast.

ZULLICHAW, a town in the New Marche, Brandenburg, with a woollen manufacture. It is 37 m. SE of Frankfort on the Oder.

ZULPHA, a town of Persia, a sort of suburb to Ispahan. It contains about 4000 houses, and is peopled with a colony of Armenians, who were brought into Persia by Shah Abbas, from an ancient town on the Aras. It is an archbishop's see, and contains several churches and monasteries.

ZULPICH, a town of Cologne.

ZURICH, a city of Switzerland, capital of a canton of the same name, situated at the northern extremity of the lake of Zurich. It is one of the best built cities in this country, but the streets are narrow, and the houses high. Zurich was the first town in Switzerland that separated from the church of Rome, being induced thereto by the arguments of Zuinglius. Among the charitable foundations in this town, are an orphan-house; an hospital for incurables; that for the sick of all nations, which usually contains between 6 and 700 patients; and the Allmosen-Amt, or foundation for the poor, which puts out children as apprentices, and distributes money, clothes, and books, to poor persons, not of the town only, but of the canton, to the amount of upward of 5000*l.* a year. The arsenal is well supplied with cannon, arms, and ammunition, and contains a reserve of muskets for 30,000 men. They have manufactures of muslins, cottons, linens, silk handkerchiefs, &c. The inhab. in 1780, amounted to 10,559. It is 40 m. SE of Basle. Lat. 47 20 N lon. 8 30 E.

ZURICH, one of the thirteen cantons of Switzerland, about 50 m. in length and 30 in breadth. It is bounded on the N by Schaffhausen and a part of Swabia; on the S by Schweitz and Zug; on the E by Thurgaw and the county of Tockenburg; and on the W by the county of Baden. The civil war between the magistrates and people of Zurich, in 1335, nearly reduced that city to ruins; but the former being banished, the citizens, in 1337, established a new form of government. The exiles, after several fruitless attempts, were readmitted; but, engaging in a conspiracy against the citizens, were discovered and put to death. In consequence of this the nobles in the neighbourhood took up arms, and Zurich, for protection, formed an alliance with Lucern, Uri, Schweitz, and Underwalden, and was admitted a member of their confederacy in 1351. The four cantons yielded the pre-eminence to Zurich, a privilege it still enjoys, being the first canton in rank, and the most considerable in extent, both of territory and power, next to that of Bern. This canton abounds in corn, wine, and excellent pasture; but as there is not a sufficient supply of corn for interior consumption, the deficiency is chiefly supplied from Swabia. There is also a granary maintained at the public expense, where, in seasons of scarcity, corn is sold considerably cheaper than at the market price. It contains above 200,000 inhab. The people are divided into 13 tribes; and the legislative authority is vested in a council of 200, or rather of 212 members drawn from these tribes. This council comprises the senate, or little council (composed of 50 members), which has a jurisdiction in all civil and criminal causes.

ZURICH, a lake of Switzerland, in the canton of the same name, near 10 leagues in length and one in breadth. It is of an oblong form, and the borders are studded thickly with villages and towns. The adjacent country is finely cultivated and well peopled; and the S part of the lake appears bounded by the stupendous high mountains of Schweitz and Glarus; the scenery is picturesque, lively, and diversified.

ZURICK-ZEE, a town of the United Provinces, in Zealand, and capital of the Isle of Schowen. It was the ancient residence of the counts of Zealand, and formerly a place of considerable consequence. The harbour is now filled up with sand; it is, however, large and populous and is 18 m. SSW of Briel.

ZURITA, a town of New Castile.

ZUTPHEN, a considerable town of the United Provinces, capital of a county of the same name. It was taken by the French, in 1672, under Philip, Duke of Orleans, only brother of Louis XIV. and abandoned by them in 1674, after having previously destroyed the fortifications. It is seated at the confluence of the rivers Berkel and Yssel, 9 m. S by E of Deventer, and 55 E by S of Amsterdam. Lat. 52 10 N lon. 6 22 E.

ZUTPHEN, a county of the United Provinces, separated by the Yssel from Guelderland. Otho I. of Nassau, acquired this country in the 11th century, by marrying the heiress of Gerlach, Count of Zutphen; since which time it has ever been annexed to Guelderland.

ZUYDER-ZEE, a great bay of the German Ocean, which extends from S to N in the United Provinces, between Friesland, Overyssel, Guelderland, and N. Holland. It is so called from its situation toward the S.

Zwallock, or Swallock, Corruw. SW of Camelford.

ZWAMMERDAM, a town of Holland, on the Rhine, 10 m. ESE of Leyden.

ZWICKAU, a town of Erzgeburg, Upper Saxony, seated on the river Muldaw.

ZWINGENBURG, a town of Hesse-Darmstadt, circle of Upper Rhine, 20 m. N of Manheim.

ZWOLL, a town of the Netherlands, in Overyssel, and in the district of Zallant. It is large and rich, and a canal begins near this place, which extends to the river Yssel. Here was formerly an Augustine convent, in which Thomas à Kempis, otherwise called Hamerken, lived 71 years, and died in 1471, at the age of 91. It was formerly an imperial and Hanseatic town, and is seated on the river Aa, between the Yssel and the Vecht, 15 m. N of Deventer.

ZWONITZ, a town of Saxony, 10 m. S of Chemnitz.

ZWORNICK, or SWERNICK, a town of Bosnia.

ZYPE, an island of N. Holland, formed by canals cut from the Zuyder-Zee to the Ocean. On this spot the Duke of York was posted when he came to terms with the French general, to evacuate Holland, having it in his power to open all the sluices, and inundate the whole of Holland.

ZYTOMIERK, a town of Volhinia, 70 m. NNW of Kiof.
